CUPID'S PRANKS RECORDED HERE

The wedding bells have been ringing again. Last Sunday afternoon, at the home of her parents south of town, Miss Elizabeth Oberlin was united in marriage to Lewell C. Hagerty. The ceremony was performed by Leon Couch, pastor of the Christian church. Only a few were present to witness the marriage. These young people are highly respected in this community and have the heartiest congratulations of their host of friends. They expect to make their home in Hamilton.—Hamilton News.

It is not often that four children in one family are married within ten months. However, John Maggert, the Altona merchant, has had it happen in his family. When his daughter Miss Josephine was united with Mr. J. L. F. Baltz, Sunday afternoon, the quartette of newlyweds in the household was completed. Last April Harry Maggert married Miss Maude Wood. Then in June B. Frank Maggert became the husband of Miss Mayme Munger of Toledo, Ohio. Miss Hazel Maggert and Joseph Gordon of this city were married in October and now the fourth wedding has taken place. Of the four Harry is the only one remaining in Altona. B. Frank Maggert already lived in Toledo, the Gordons live in Garrett and Mr. and Mrs. Baltz went to Spencerville to make their home. The Rev. W. S. Harper of the Altona Methodist Protestant church officiated at three of the ceremonies. Of the six Maggert children only one remains single: H. O. Maggert of Flint, Mich. The wedding Sunday was attended by these people from out of town: Mr. and Mrs. Will Somers of Leo, Jacob Baltz of Spencerville, father of the groom, Gottlieb Mowery of St. Joe, Mr. and Mrs. Rolly Moffett and children of Auburn, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Maggert of Kendallville, and H. O. Maggert of Flint Mich. The Rev. Harper was the clergyman and afterward an elegant wedding dinner was served. The bride and groom were then taken to Spencerville by his father in a carriage. They will live this winter in that town, where he teaches school, and then move onto his farm ueas Leo for the summer. He expects to continue his teaching during the winter. He formerly taught in this township and is known as a capable and estimable young man. His bride is held in high regard and hosts of friends of the couple wish them well. —Garrett Clipper.

THE NEW BOARD OF HEALTH MEETS

And Discusses Problems of Much Importance to Our Citizens

The newly appointed health commission, Dr. F. D. Fanning, A. D. Morse and Dr. W. F. Shumaker recently met at the city hall for the purpose of selecting a secretary and outlining plans for the safeguard of public health. Dr. Shumaker was selected secretary. The board discussed many matters pertaining to the city's wellfare, special stress being laid on the breeding places of flies, such as manure piles, etc., and that so far as possible compel the property owners to keep their premises in a sanitary condition. They pledged themselves to lend their influence toward keeping the sidewalks free from ice and snow in the winter and dust and rubbish in the summer. It was also agreed that all matters of importance be brought before the board and there decided. They are to meet often and report any and all unsanitary conditions that might be brought to their notice.

Dr. Shumaker said to a HERALD reporter that he was in favor of a garbage wagon being maintained by the city funds to haul out the ashes and rubbish which accumulates around every residence. The doctor thinks it much less expense to keep out diseases than to eliminate them after they have once been seated. The average person does not stop to think what harm may come from allowing rubbish to accumulate about their premises and consequently very often contagious disease germs are started in this way. But this summer and spring the matter of health will be more closely looked after than heretofore and any case of filthiness reported to the board will be given promp attention. So let us all begin now to clean up before the health officers get us. But if you should be called upon to remove that pile of ashes or pick up those old tin cans, or clean your hen house, don't blame the health officers, for they have their duty to perform and they are sworn and under bond to look after the health of the city.

In Memoriam

In the sudden translation, on February 8, of Mrs. T. J. Knisely the M. E. church of Butler has lost a valued member who was helpful in its activities and faitnful to its services. As president of the Ladies' Aid Society she was earnest and devoted to its interests, loving the work which she carried on so successfully.

We shall not think of her as dead, but passed beyond the changes and the toil, to join the company of the loved ones who see "the King in his beauty."

The spmpathy of the entire society is sincerely extended to the sorrowing family, praying the Heavenly Father to comfort them as they walk amid the shadows.

"Just as softly as fades the light,
After the sun is gone,
Just as sweetly as through the night,
The steady stars shine on;
Just as gently as spring leaves come,
Or snow-flakes whiten the sod,
Passed she out from an earthly home,
Into the home of God."

"Pythian Sisters Resolutions"

WHEREAS, Death the ancient monarch, has again visited our community and through Divine Providence has laid claim to His own and taken from our midst our beloved friend and Sister, Mrs. Jennie Knisely. Therefore be it

RESOLVED, That in the death of Sister Jennie Knisely, this temple has met with a loss none can fill. We loved her here, and while we mourn her loss, we will strive to emulate her virtues, and though she has gone from our midst we will ever cherish her memory in our hearts.

RESOLVED, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of this temple, that a copy of same be sent to the bereaved family with assurances of our deepest sympathy and a copy be sent to each of our city papers, and that as a farther mark of respect our charter be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days.

SCHOOL NOTES

Pithy Paragraphs From Our Public Schools

FRESHMEN NOTES

If you see some one in a desperate attempt to wind themselves around desks and seats like snakes, just remember that it's hard to get a note when it's in the teacher's range.

Loren Bryant was absent last Thursday.

Edwin Campbell was absent Friday.

Mr. Austin was absent Friday and we didn't have any botany class, but we're glad he's back again because Mr. B. gave us a lesson in algebra instead.

There is a certain Sophomore boy who spends most of his time getting into trouble, spilling red inks, etc., but still he has the highest scholarship in the school. We wonder, oh, we wonder, how he does it.

We wonder if a shower of ice water would cause the other editors to wake up. Hints don't seem to have the desired effect.

Mr. A. has been trying to interest the Seniors in the publication of a high school annual. He says that there seems to be enough funny happenings in high school life to make it spicy, but we don't agree with him. Life looks very sad and gloomy to us. We have just received our grade cards.

Humph! It isn't our fault because we haven't the highest scholarship this month. The reason is simply this: We are sadly misunderstood.

Blanche Wilson still remains unable to attend school.

Oh Jeremiah! What's the use of studying? Think B. H. S. girls and boys, you have only fifty nine more days to inhabit this wonderful world, and why should you waste it on books? Rather spend your time hunting for stray cats.

(Mr. A. in Botany Class)—"Miss Besse, what appendage do seeds sometimes have which assist in their distribution by animals?"

(B. C., startled)—"Why 'er, they have sharp corners so the animals can't swallow them, don't they?"

L. B. and E. C. enjoyed their English lesson Tuesday.

THE EXILED BAND

We loved that fascinating room
With nice dust scattered round
It's dirty windows overlooked
The street and whole school ground.
'Twas such a pleasant study place
After the bell had rung—
Behold, one day the mighty came
His little song he sung
And we were forced to leave the place
And straightway did repair
Unto the eighth grade room when lo!
He chased us out of there.
And then he came and told us
Before the people all
That unless we stay'd within our desks
Dire things would us befall.
But, oh we can't get in our desks
And what we wonder now
Is where to go and when to go
And oh Great Caesar, how?

Horse Thieves Routed.

Marshal Holtzberg prevented some horses from being stolen in this neighborhood Sunday evening by notifying the farmers that he had spotted two crooks who he overheard to say, "We can get there in four hours." He kept an eye on the fellows and when they left town Mr. Holtzberg stepped to the telephone and called up several farmers, among whom was Ora Gaff, living two miles north of the city. Mr. Gaff has a fine team of bays and a grey horse which are valued quite highly. As soon as he was notified he secured a gun and went to investigate things around the barn. He found the fellows hiding behind a hedge fence and emptied his gun in the direction of the horse thieves who immediately took a hike. The result was that the fellows went to a school house in the neighborhood and stayed the rest of the night and no more barns were molested. There is considerable horse stealing going on, and there is no doubt but that if Marshal Holtzberg had not betrayed their scheme Mr. Gaff would have lost one or two of his fine horses. The marshal says he will arrest every suspicious character whom he finds hanging about the streets after night.

OBITUARY RECORD

Dark Angel Saddens Two Homes Last Weeks Filled With Pleasure and Happiness,

"Death opened her sweet, white arms and whispered peace!"

Eliza Jane McCurdy was born near Butler, Indiana, February the fourth, eighteen hundred forty-nine and passed away at her home, North Broadway, Butler, Indiana, February the eighth, at five twenty a. m., nineteen hundred ten.

January the sixth, Mr. and Mrs. Knisely, accompanied by their granddaughter, Miss Ethel Tess, started for California where her last weeks were filled with pleasure and happiness among the flowers and sunshine. Two days after their return Mrs. Knisely took seriously ill with acute bronchial pneumonia and heart affliction. With the medical aid of three physicians and a nurse and everything done for her recovery, it was all of no avail. Throughout her illness she was patience personified.

She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church of this city and always interested in and helping to promote all good works for the wellfare of the community socially, morally and religiously. Also a member of the O. E. S. and Pythian Sisters.

Well may it be said of her, "We live in deeds, and our deeds do follow us."

She was married to Timothy J. Knisely, May tenth, eighteen hundred sixty eight. Four children were born to brighten their home, one having preceded her in infancy. Mr. Knisely with the three children, Mrs. Henry L. Tess, Mr. Ora T. Knisely, Mrs. I. C. Harding, three grandchildren, one sister, Mrs. C. M. Everetts, a legion of relatives and friends are left to mourn her loss.

The beautiful flowers, many messages of condolence from friends were valuable tributes of love and esteem, as was the attendance of old friends "at the last sad requiem."

Services were held at the Methodist Episcopal church, Thursday at two p. m., Rev. Edmond F. Albertson delivering a beautiful sermon, bringing hope and comfort to the loved ones. Burial took place in the cemetery east of Butler.

Anthony Greene was born in Milford township, Defiance county, Ohio, January 10, 1836, on what was known as the Henry Koder farm, on a part of which he has resided the last years of his life. He was the son of George and Catharine Greene who came from Licking county, Ohio, in September, 1835, and settled on the banks of the St. Joe river. This country was a wilderness at the time and the redman roamed the forest. He was the second white child born in Milford township. He has endured the hardships of pioneer life and has lived to see this country grow from a dense forest to be thriving and prosperous.

March 21, 1858, he was united in marriage to Annetta Olds, daughter of Samuel and Mary Olds. To this union were born twelve children, seven sons and five daughters, two sons having died in infancy and one daughter, Mrs. George Blaker, preceded him in death, December 30, 1905. The living children are Chester Greene, Mrs. George Moore, of Edgerton, Ohio, Mrs. Benj. Mierly, Mrs. Wm. Devore, of Butler, Ind., Mrs. Adam Haddix, Warren Greene, Arthur Greene, of Milford township, Frank Greene, of Wessington Springs, South Dakota, and Ora Greene who resides with his mother.

The last few years of his life he suffered greatly from ill health, having had a stroke of paralysis five years ago from which he never fully recovered. The last six months he has been confined to his home. On Tuesday afternoon, February 8, 1910, at the late home, three miles south west of Edgerton, surrounded by his devoted wife and children he quietly passed away at the age of 74 years and 29 days. He was a good citizen and kind husband and father, always lending a helping hand to those less fortunate than himself.

He leaves to mourn his departure a faithful wife, nine children, thirty-four grandchildren, four great grandchildren, two brothers, Hazel Greene, of Harrison county, Iowa, and John Greene, of Edgerton, Ohio, besides many neighbors and friends.

Funeral services were held Thursday morning, February 10, at the late residence conducted by M. O. Johnston, minister of the Church of Christ at Edgerton. Interment in Maple Grove cemetery, Edgerton.

The first wolf hunt in Laporte county for a number of years took place with the result that three of the animals were killed near Union Mills, twelve miles south of the city. The wolves are supposed to have deen driven from the Kankakee swamps by hunters. They have been raiding the sheep pens and hen roosts of the farmers.

The New Court House

It is time for every farmer to wake up to the facts, that over at the capital they are not sleeping, but are working day and night to build a new court house. Do you realize what this means? A new court house, a fine monument to the citizens of Auburn at the expense of the county. Just think, $300,000 for the improvement of the city, when the farmers are wallowing in mud knee deep, unable to go to market three or four months out of a year. This $300,000 will build 75 to 90 miles of macadam roads in the county. Now, Mr. Farmer, which do you want? You know, everyone knows! Don't you think it is about time to wake up! Let them know we are on earth.

On the other hand—if we ever thought of building a court house, move it to Waterloo. They will only be too glad to contribute towards the cost, and then why allow them to spend $300,000 on a building to house a dozen or twenty officials—when we build modern school buildings to house 300 to 400 puplils at $25,000 to $40,000. Do you note the difference? It's about time to chase some one up a tree—then you will find Auburn playing the fiddle and the officials dancing to the music. BLUNDERBUSS.

It's easy to tell others to let well enough alone.

It's pretty mean to hint that Peary's story was Cooked up.

Woman suffrage is gaining ground. Emma Goldman is out against it.

Professor William Henry Pickering thinks he saw a little vegetation on the moon. Sad, indeed!

Andrew Carnegie is tightening the purse strings, having indefinitely postponed the job of dying poor.

The University students have asked for a wrestling director. It takes skill to get one of those Greek roots three points down.

A Chicago clergyman advocates compulsory marriages. This space (——) is reserved for what the bachelors think of the idea.

"When would you call a man a victim of fate?" asks a correspondent. Well, for instance, when he has his skull fractured with a life preserver.

A Texas man has just given away several million dollars' worth of property; but don't get excited. He merely gave it to members of his family.

King Leopold left a private fortune which is estimated at $53,000,000, notwithstanding the fact that he never went around complaining that wealth was a burden.

A Northwestern University professor thinks men should be proud to have descended from an ape. Some men should be proud, undoubtedly; but what about the ape?

Judicial authorities are wrestling with the question whether a safety razor is a deadly weapon. It may not be deadly, but amateurs in its use assert that it can hurt a lot.

Some persons are reviving the old controversy about Abraham Lincoln's religion. Viewing the career of the great American from this distance it seems hardly worth while to worry about what particular brand of religion he affected.

The holiday season brings a realization of the importance of toys in the commercial world. In 1908 more than seven million dollars' worth of toys were imported by this country, mainly from Germany, which excels the rest of the world in producing wonderful things dear to the childish heart.

In a recent speech at Yale University Governor Hughes, of New York, put his finger upon an ugly spot in American life—the ready habit of believing and spreading evil stories about men in public office. He pleaded with the students that those who go into journalism be fair with public men whom they criticize, although they comment freely upon the acts of such men. "A man who seeks profit in the sale of calumnies is the most despicable of human creatures," said the governor.

The movement for uniform laws governing the operation of motor vehicles throughout the United States is gaining strength through the activities of the various automobile associations in the country, and the problem will be one of the chief matters for consideration at the meeting here in January of the American Automobile Association. It is not believed that exactly similar laws will be adopted by all of the States, but it is hoped that uniformity relative to examination of drivers, registration of cars, signals, road signs, etc., can be obtained.

The spelling of some of the entering class of a great Western university has lately been published for the amusement, and perhaps warning, of students elsewhere. Words were misspelled that any pupil of an ungraded country school should know by heart. The head of the English department, in commenting on the matter, expresses the opinion that possibly one in a hundred who thus offend is constitutionally deficient in the mental traits which make an accurate speller; but with others who have studied the matter, he lays the trouble among the ninety-nine to lack of sufficiently thorough early training and drill. No real substitute for the old spelling-book has ever been found, and ignorant and illiterate spelling is not "reformed" orthography.

General Bell proposes a military censorship of the American press in war times suggested by the Japanese censorship in the recent war. It is held by military men that the strict censorship which the government was enabled to exercise contributed largely to Japanese success in the struggle with Russia, as by it the enemy and the world at large were shrewdly deceived as to Japanese plans, losses in battle, and resources. The vital feature of the Japanese system was to compel the press to tell deliberate falsehoods whenever it seemed necessary to conceal the real facts. We are told by the purist and strict constructionists that such a system would not do at all for the United States. In the first place, such a censorship wouldn't be constitutional; that whatever censorship might be attempted outside of the military areas would be subject to the civil law, and that it would be wicked to make the newspapers tell lies, even to deceive the enemy. This may be admitted as a general proposition, yet if the country were engaged in a life and death struggle the strict constructionists might have another thought coming. Deceptions, stratagems, are considered fair in war. A man of integrity in civil life, drafted into the army, might be compelled by the exigencies of his situation to draw the enemy into an ambush; to lure him by false appearances and signals; to pretend that he had a thousand men when he had perhaps actually not more than a hundred. If a citizen can thus be made to lie in act or word, to risk his life as well as his reputation for veracity, why should not a newspaper be compelled to suppress or color the truth if our success in arms were to depend upon it? It is to be hoped that no situation will ever arise requiring an addition to the list of newspaper liars—but if it does, we may even have to grin and bear it, as we do war taxes.

PUNCTUALITY.

It Has Its Disagreeable Side Just as Everything Else Has.

So much is said about the virtue of punctuality that people who go in for it to any great extent are exceedingly uppish and disagreeable. Punctuality has its bad side, just as everything else has. People should remember this. If they are on time they only serve to throw into embarrassing relief the poor souls who come hurrying up ten minutes late. It is smug to be precisely punctual. It is raising yourself above the rest of mankind, refusing to partake in its frailties. The ideal thing from the point of view of courtesy to others and decent humility about your own attainments is to be always ten minutes late, or at least to appear so.

If you are to meet at the package office in the Grand Central station at 4 o'clock, sit quietly in the middle of the hall until 12 minutes after 4; then when you have seen the other person dash up, followed by panting porters and fairly dripping with explanations, wait until the arrival has had a second in which to recover self-respect and stroll up with a remark on Timbuctoo or the best way to cultivate carrots. This will insure your popularity and show you to be a person of kindliness and forethought. At any rate, it is better than a pitiless standing at the place where you said you would be, your superiority increasing every minute, and confronting, upbraiding silently, the person who promised to meet you because you appeared a rather likable sort, but who finds you in your panoply of punctuality the very reverse of likable.

For be it remembered that just as some people cannot be on time, others cannot, to save their skins, be late. So that they deserve not a whit of credit for it and should, in fact, be reprimanded when they do it ostentatiously and in public.

The theaters have formed a charming habit of sending up the curtain just fifteen minutes after the time stated, which by punctual members of the audience is considered shocking, for it permits the late arrivals to settle comfortably in their seats and say to the members of their family, who fumed and fussed and had a silly idea that the time to get to the theater was at the hour suggested in the papers, "Now, you see, here we are in perfect time; couldn't be better," which arouses the worse nature of the punctual persons and divides families against themselves.—New York Evening Sun.

THE PIANOFORTE EXPLAINED

It was the first entertainment Peter and Mary had ever attended. Proceedings, according to John Trevena, author of "Furze The Cruel," opened with a duet upon the first pianoforte Mary and Peter had ever seen. "Bain't him a cruel, noisy thing?" exclaimed Mary. "What d'ye call 'en?" she asked a small, ancient, dried-up man who sat beside her. The old man tried to explain, which was a thing he was famous for doing. He was a superannuated schoolmaster of the nearly extinct type, the kind who knew nothing and taught as much, but a brave, learned man, according to some of the old folks.

"That there box," said the master, with an air of diving deep in the well of wisdom, "he'm full o' wires and hammers."

"My dear life!" gasped Mary. "Full o' wires and hammers! D'ye hear, Peter?"

Her brother replied in the affirmative, although in a manner which suggested that the information was superfluous.

"Folks hit them bones, and the bones dra' on the hammers, and the hammers hit the wires," proceeded the master.

"Bain't that artful, now?" cried Mary.

"Sure 'nough," agreed Peter, unable to restrain his admiration.

"Couldn't you mak one o' they? You'm main cruel larned wi' your hands," Mary went on.

Peter admitted that was so. Given the material, he had no doubt of his ability to turn out a piano capable of producing that music which his sister described as "cruel noisy."

"It taketh a scholard to understand how to mak they things," corrected the master, with some severity. "See all that carved wood on the front of him? You couldn't du that, and the piano wouldn't mak no music if 'twasn't for the carved wood. 'Twould mak a noise, you see, Peter, but not music. 'Tis the noise coming out through the carving what makes the music. Taketh a scholard to du that."

Sure Enough.

Mrs. Bacon—I read here that the veins on the back of the hand are every bit as useful for the identification of criminals as thumb prints.

Mr. Bacon (looking at his hand)—Is that a fact?

"Now, what are you looking at the back of your hand for? You're not a criminal, are you?"—Yonkers States man.

An Improving Affliction.

"Does your wife give you Christmas neckties?"

"Invariably. Half a dozen of 'em."

"Pretty hard lot, I suppose?"

"I won't go so far as to say that You see my wife is color blind and about half the lot isn't so bad."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Steam Roller Government.

Gentlemen who boast their standpatriotism gleefully herald the announcement of what they describe as "running the steam roller over the insurgents." Their gleeful anticipations are to all appearances unwarranted.

The steam roller process is derogatory to the dignity of the person rolled. Besides, it hurts. An unusually meek, apologetic man might submit to it once. A man strong enough to undergo it without fatal injury would be quite certain to cherish feelings of resentment, which might easily find expression in violent retaliation.

In the west and northwest states a good many Republicans have not forgotten that it was a "steam roller" convention at which office-holding southern Republicans, in collusion with the Aldrich cohorts from New York and New England, presented the machine nomination to Judge Taft.

These western and northwestern Republicans have not forgotten how the "steam roller" was trundled merrily over congressional attempts to secure a reduction of the iniquitous tariff.

Theodore Roosevelt roared and raved and swung the big stick. The Taft habit is more bucolic, less picturesque, lacking in dash and color. The steam roller suits it better than the big stick.

But the great disadvantage of a steam roller is its ponderousness. Those over whom the Taft roller has already passed are not anxious to submit to it as the vehicle to carry ship subsidies, the central bank, and other Aldrich schemes to success.

The steam roller must go slowly. Speed means a wreck. The steam roller will not bring these proposals into action until the next session of Congress. And before that is called the explosion of ballots will have put the roller out of commission.—Chicago Journal.

What About the Big Thieves?

Four checkers who worked for a few dollars a week on the docks in New York have been sentenced to a year each in prison for complicity in frauds by which the American Sugar Refining company is said to have swindled the Customs Department out of $30,000,000.

The millionaire directors and highly paid executive officers of the sugar trust are at liberty to enjoy their clubs, their automobiles and their champagne. Their wives and daughters can tour Europe without fear of husbands or fathers suffering incarceration in felons' cells. The underpaid workingmen who succumbed to the temptation of a few added dollars each week to buy little comforts for their humble homes, are sentenced to jail for swindling the government.

The poor men who received a few dollars for carrying out the swindle must go to prison. The rich men who pocketed millions of stolen money, the profits of the swindle, are still free.

President Taft asked congress to delay its investigation of the sugar scandal in order that the Department of Justice should not be hampered in prosecuting the guilty. The American public will not be satisfied if the sole result of the government's prosecutions is the conviction of a few weighers and checkers, while the big rascals go unpunished.

Taft Out of Sympathy.

There is a growing impression in the public mind that the President is out of sympathy with the nation-wide movement to check the aggressions of private monopoly. . . . His dismissal of Pinchot, hailed with such delight by the monopolists and their allies, will still further widen the breach between the President and the masses of the people groaning under the extortion of their exploiters.—Brooklyn Citizen.

Circumstances and Cases.

A poor Chicago window-washer, who on the spur of the moment, pocketed seven new 1-cent pieces, is sentenced to 75 days in the bridewell.

The $90,000,000 sugar trust, which stole so much from the customs department that United States Attorney Stimson said he would be well within bounds in demanding a $65,000,000 penalty, is let off with a $2,000,000 refund, and not one of its rich officers is locked up.

Are all men in this country free and equal? Or do circumstances alter cases?

The Way of a President.

A certain federal judge, in private conversation, made the remark that Mr. Taft, if he had been President at the time of the Civil war, would have saved the constitution and lost the union. The remark was apt.

Forms and procedure loom large in the mind of the present occupant of the White House. The effect of judicial experience is seen in many of the things which he does. The mental processes of Mr. Taft are very different from those of either Lincoln or Roosevelt. The Pinchot episode well illustrates this.

There can be no doubt that President Taft believes in the conservation policies of the Roosevelt administration and that he desired to retain the services of the chief of the bureau of forestry who held that position under Roosevelt. Yet Pinchot has been discharged by order of the President because a situation was allowed to develop under which the maintenance of Presidential dignity was made to appear of more consequence than fundamental policies of great concern to all the people, not only of the present day, but of succeeding generations.

It is impossible to think of Lincoln's meeting such a situation in such a manner.

One cannot fail to be impressed by a contemplation of what might have happened had a man of the Taft temperament been President in the trying days when the wise hand of Lincoln was steering the course of the republic.—Chicago News.

Congress vs. Officialdom.

There may be occasions when it is temporarily inadvisable that matters of international import be given to the public, but the idea that Congress can not require and secure the testimony of any government employe except by permission of the head of his department seems preposterous.

Congress is the government. Cabinet officers and even the President of the United States are simply intrusted with execution of the wishes of Congress.

Within the last few years there has been altogether too much tendency to conceal matters of public interest and public record. The American people have a right to know all about business connected by any department of government.

The least disposition on the part of an executive official to arbitrarily obstruct Congress in securing all evidence available in the coming investigation of Secretary Ballinger's department will naturally move the public to ask what it is that someone desires concealed, and why the desire for concealment.

Should Bare the Truth.

The American people have been awakened to a realization of their great stake in the safeguarding of their forest, coal and water resources, largely by the knowledge and enthusiasm of Gifford Pinchot—unquestionably the most competent chief forester to be found in America. Why did he compel President Taft to dismiss him from the service? Perhaps that will appear later. The main question, involving the good faith and integrity not only of the interior department, but of the Taft administration, is to be thrashed out by a joint committee of congress. This committee should have public confidence and should establish the truth without fear or favor.—Buffalo Commercial.

No Pensions Necessary.

One plan upon which government experts are working, but of which very little information has been given out, is a system of pensioning all national government employes on retirement.

The basis of computing pensions seems to be one-half per cent of the salary received at retirement, multiplied by the number of years the employe has been in the service. Thus a man 50 years of age at the time of entering the service would receive $360 on retiring at 70, if his retiring salary was $1,200, while, if he had entered the service at the age of 20 he would be entitled to $900 a year for life.

The public regards government employes as well paid for their services and sees no reason why they should not provide for old age by their own thrift, the same as men employed by private employers.

President's Wisdom Involved.

Pinchot violated an executive order, but there should have been no necessity for such an order. A great conflict is on between the interests and the people, and the rule seemed to provide a shelter for the former. That is the appearance of things; the facts will soon be known, for the probe is going deep and straight, if honest men in congress have their way. The issues of the investigation are great. They involve the itnegrity of a cabinet officer and the wisdom of the President himself.—Columbus Dispatch.

THE RETURN FROM ELBA!

MONEY FOUND.

Wealth Rewards Woman Who Empties an Old Chest.

Mrs. Emma Bailey died at New London, Conn., five months ago, leaving a comfortable home to her daughter, Miss Alice Bailey, but she left little else, so far as anyone knew. Miss Bailey is 57 years old and she looked forward to spending the rest of her life in the cozy little home, keeping the wolf from the door by sewing for her more prosperous neighbors and friends. One day Miss Bailey took a notion to go through an old cedar chest that her father, Capt. William Bailey, had carried to sea with him when he was master of whaling ships many years ago. She took out all the clothing, which had been kept there away from the moths, and at the bottom of the chest found that $3,514 had been deposited. The money was in the names of Mrs. Bailey and the daughter, which Mrs. Bailey named as trustee. Miss Bailey was frightened when she discovered the bank books, and she asked the bank officials if she was liable to arrest for having them. She was assured to the contrary, and then she inquired as to the proper procedure. A hurried calculation was made by Samuel M. Hinckley, president of the Whaling Bank, where the money was deposited, and it was found that compound interest for twenty years had accrued and the account is now worth considerably over $10,000. Miss Bailey's mother had evidently forgotten all about the savings of the old whaler, because during the last four or five years of her life she helped out the family income by keeping boarders while Miss Bailey was busy with her dressmaking. The modest home was free from debt, and, as the wants of the pair were few, there had been no occasion for any anxiety.

Real Tragedy Photographs.

Poor, backward Russia has, as the phrase goes, America beaten to a standstill for combined enterprise and luck as manifested in the moving picture business.

A Russian photographer has for exhibition a film 500 feet long showing the assassination of Prime Minister Ito on the railway platform at Harbin, the New York Evening Post says. The merit of the picture is that it gives just what it purports to offer—no $10 a week actor dressed up as a Japanese statesman succumbing to the blank cartridges of a fellow actor in a Korean pyramid hat, but the actual tragic scene as it was enacted in Manchuria a few months ago. The photographic apparatus had been set up to catch the details of the meeting between Prince Ito and the Russian finance minister, Kokovtsoff. The machine bagged bigger game than it counted upon. Most probably this is the only photograph in existence of a real assassination.

Whether the Japanese, after using the film as evidence in court, will permit it to go on the market is doubtful. But, in any case, the moving picture man will now go about his business with a fresher enthusiasm than ever. When he photographs the czar driving in his carriage there is always the chance of an unexpected bomb. When he follows the aeroplane's flight there is always the possibility of a break and a sudden swoop downward—subjects which he would find it difficult to secure actors willing to enact.

Swapping compliments is a good deal like swapping green goods.

Veteran Served on Each Side.

Amos Giess, a war veteran of Allentown, Pa., has celebrated his 72d birthday anniversary and is in vigorous health. That, however, is insignificant compared with Mr. Giess' thrilling experience in the War of the Rebellion, as related on that occasion to neighbors and friends. He is one of very few men who can truthfully say that they served in two armies—the Confederate and the Federal.

Mr. Giess in his earlier life was a bricklayer, and no man in those parts ever handled the trowel with greater dexterity. Late in the '50s he entered the employ of the late Samuel McHose of Allentown, renowned as a builder of blast furnaces, for which he had contracts all over the United States. In 1859 he took a force of nineteen men, most of them from that city, to Richmond, Va., to build the Westham furnace, along the James River canal. Among them was Mr. Giess. The only other survivors of that party are John Paul of Rittersville, and Levi Quier of Reading.

The spirit of rebellion was already high at that time, and things were not any too pleasant for the gang of Northern bricklayers. They were not exactly wanted, and they knew it, with the result that all of them, with the exception of Giess, made tracks for home before the breaking out of the war. Mr. Giess, however, was of a more venturesome nature, and he decided to remain. He associated with many of the Confederate leaders, frequented their councils as much as possible and was highly interested in the great drama that was unfolding itself day by day. Mr. Giess remained in Richmond for nearly a year after hostilities between the North and South had commenced.

Although a loyal Union man, he, in March, 1862, was suddenly informed that he "had the opportunity" of enlisting in the Confederate army or being conscripted. If he enlisted he had the "opportunity" of joining Gen. Marmaduke Johnson's light artillery, which was then being formed. If he refused to enlist he would be forced into the army as a conscript and assigned to some very undesirable regiment.

As he knew General Johnson personally and found him a very fine man, he concluded to "enlist," donned the Confederate gray and joined the command. They went into a camp of instruction and for two weeks he watched his opportunity to escape. One night it came, and crawling through the lines he succeeded in making his way back into Richmond.

During his stay in Richmond Mr. Giess had made the acquaintance of a German cigarmaker, a Northern sympathizer, who kept quiet about it. Giess succeeded in making his way to his friend's house and was immediately given shelter. There he learned to make cigars, which his friends afterward sold.

For a long time Mr. Giess did not venture out of doors save in the night. Finally, however, he grew bolder and, disguising himself as well as he could, and passing himself off as a German, foreign born, and acting as if he could speak English only with the greatest difficulty, he made his way all over Richmond, frequently conversing with Confederate officers who came in from the front.

He found a great deal of interest in visiting the schools in the suburban districts of Richmond, and one day he came across a little country school house some distance outside of Richmond. Hearing the pupils singing, he went in.

They sang "Dixie," "The Stars and Bars," "The Bonny Blue Flag," and other Southern songs. Finally Mr. Giess asked them to sing "Yankee Doodle."

The eyes of the teacher, a young woman, flashed fire; but she made no remark, nor was the song given. Next day Mr. Giess was arrested and lodged in the Richmond jail. He was in jail forty-eight hours. Then he was released. Mr. Giess then came to the conclusion that it was high time he got out of Richmond. He had succeeded in escaping from General Johnson's command in March and it was now December. Watching his opportunity he succeeded in appropriating a pass belonging to another man whose general physical description he closely resembled, and at 4 o'clock in the morning of a December day in 1862 he took his leave, reaching Washington by way of the famous Dismal Swamp and the Rappahannock River.

He suffered great hardships, not the least of them hunger and cold. He reached the capital in safety, however, and the first acquaintance he met was the late John L. Stiles, of Allentown, who was then a member of Congress. Stiles saw that Geiss was properly cared for and the two subsequently saw the battle of Fredericksburg.

Some time later Mr. Giess returned to Allentown and in August, 1864, he enlisted in the Two Hundred and Second Regiment and participated in the bloody battle in and about Petersburg.

Mr. Giess' father, the late Christian Giess, and a brother, William Giess, also served in the Union army, the former in the Fifty-fourth and the latter in the Ninth Regiment. The former was captured by the Cinfederates in 1863 and died some weeks later in Andersonville prison.

Judge Lurton a Prisoner of War.

Judge Lurton's career has had many dramatic episodes, and one of them, not hitherto made public, may be well worth repeating in this place, writes "Holland" in the Philadelphia Ledger. Some months ago a company of representative men living in the mid-West, were the guests of Judge Henry S. Severens, an associate circuit judge of the Sixth Judicial District, with Judge Lurton. The gathering took place at Grand Rapids, Mich., and in the course of the evening Judge Severens said to his friends that he had a little anecdote to tell them which might prove of interest to them. He said:

"A youth of 17 years of age, whose home was in Tennessee, enlisted in the Confederate army, and took part in several of the important battles that were waged in Eastern Tennessee and Northern Georgia. In one of these battles he was captured and sent to the Federal prison at Sandusky, Ohio. His mother was distracted. In ways known only to herself she was able to penetrate to the Union lines, and at last found herself in Washington, determined to have a personal interview with President Lincoln.

"What could she do there, a friendless and obscure woman, whose family had espoused the Confederate cause? But she found the way to meet President Lincoln, and to have an interview wth him. All that she asked of him was that he restore her boy to her, permit her to go to the Federal prison with an order for his release. And Lincoln gave her that order. She went to Sandusky, presented the order to the commandant, and speedily her boy was with her, free and on tacit parole.

"And there he sits now," said Judge Severens, pointing toward Judge Lurton. Not one of those present knew of this incident ercepting Judge Lurton and Judge Severens. But the anecdote as then told by Judge Severens was recalled after it became known that President Taft was considering the appointment of Judge Lurton as a member of the Supreme Court bench. And now that this appointment has been made, it will be possible for Judge Lurton to say to his associates upon that bench:

"I was a prisoner of war in the Federal prison; I was released by the personal order of President Lincoln, and upon the plea of my mother, and by reason of that release I was able to take up the study of law, and procure admission to the bar, else I should not now be here."

A Dead General.

"I know what it is to die."

Gen. E. M. Rogers, a soldier from private to brevet major in the Sixth Wisconsin, made the remark. In one of Gen. Grant's battles about Petersburg, in June, 1864, he received a dangerous wound. Upon reaching Washington it was found that gangrene had appeared. Within a week he was sent home, to Viroqua, to die. On the why he grew much worse. Blood poison was hastening the end.

In an interview Gen. Rogers tells the story.

"My high fever turned to an icy chill. I heard Dr. Rusk say to Dr. Tinker, 'the family would better be called.'

"My mother and sisters came to the bedside, took my hand, kissed my forehead, sobbed a good-bye and left the room—left it that my bride of a few months might be alone with her dying husband. My young wife was weeping when she entered the room, realizing that in a short time she would be a widow. Then came a minister. I heard some of his appeal that the soldier's life might be spared to his wife, mother, sisters and country. Night came—total darkness—my last night, yet I fought and still had just the least glimmer of a hope. I shivered with cold that no artificial warmth could prevent, and was, oh, so tired! When the last night was half gone I fell into a troubled slumber. I thought, or dreamed, that I was in camp on the shore of a river and could look across into the Eternal Beyond. I was waiting my turn to be ferried over. The water was clear and without a ripple. War scenes and bits of army life appeared. I saw Gen. James Wadsworth, our brave old division commander, shot and fall as I had seen him fall in the Wilderness, the May before. I saw thirty-seven of my company who had been killed at Gainsville, South Mountain, Antietam, Gettysburg and elsewhere, on the other shore. They seemed to be waiting for me. I was not afraid to go over, but still hoped for life and a return to the regiment. Over yonder I saw Co. I getting into line under Old Glory, as I witnessed it so many times in Virginia. I saw the ferry coming in my direction, saw it land, felt the angels lift me and carry me to the boat; realized that I was dead. My old company waved the flag and sang a welcome as we approached the shining shore. I was in heaven, free from pain. How quiet and peaceful it was, and what beautiful sights I saw.

"Two days afterward I awoke to look into the still sober but less troubled faces of my wife, mother and sisters, and to hear the doctor say, 'You have won the battle and will in time return to the regiment.' When I first looked at the dear ones my thought was to ask them why they had so soon followed, but the doctor's remark resurrected me."

A few months later Capt. Rogers limped back on crutches to his command, near Petersburg, and participated in the battle of Hatcher's run, but was obliged to quit the service because of the unhealed wound two months before Appomattox. Two years later he was made an officer in the regular army, but that same old Petersburg hurt led to his return to private life. In 1885 Gov. Rusk commissioned him quartermaster general of the state.

In spite of that ride to the Other Shore in 1864, he is, in 1909, at 70, erect and vigorous, but that Confederate bullet gave him a hitch in his step that will stay by him to the end.—J. A. Watrous, in Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Electricity has at last been applied to the Teddy bear, a Maryland man having patented one that opens its jaws and flashes lights from its eyes, nose and mouth, when a battery in its interior is pressed.

Though hydrophobia has been stamped out of Britain, it is still rampant in Germany, where every year over 2,500 dogs and cats afflicted with the disease are destroyed.

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER III.—(Continued.)

On the day after the Major's dinner party, Isabella was sitting in the veranda with a book open on her lap and Dido standing gravely near her. Mrs. Dallas in the cool depths of the drawing-room, was indulging in an after-luncheon siesta. The sunlight poured itself over the velvet lawns, drew forth the perfumes from the flower beds, and made the earth languorous with heat.

In the veranda all was cool and restful and pleasingly silent. Isabella, in her white dress, looked beautiful and pensive; while Dido, in reddish-hued robe, with a crimson kerchief twisted round her stately head, gleamed in the semi-gloom like some gorgeous tropical bird astray in our northern climes. Both mistress and maid were silent.

It was Dido who spoke first. She noticed that the eyes of her mistress constantly strayed in the direction of "Ashantee," and with the jealousy begotten of deep affection, she guessed that the girl's thoughts were fixed upon Maurice. At once she spoke reproachfully, and in the grotesque negro dialect; which, however, coming from Dido's mouth, inspered no one with merriment.

"Aba, missy," said she, in deep guttural tones, "you tink ob dat yaller-ha'r man!"

"Maurice! Yes, I'm thinking about him; and you know why."

Dido's fierce black eyes flashed out a gleam of rage, and she cursed Maurice audibly in some barbaric tongue which Isabella seemed to understand. At all events she interrupted the woman's speech with an imperious gesture

"No more of that, Dido. You know that I love Maurice; I wish to marry him. Why are you so bitter against him?"

"He take you from me."

"Well, if I marry anyone the same thing will happen," responded Isabella, lightly; "and surely, Dido, you do not want me to remain a spinster all my life."

"No, missy, no! You marry, an' ole Dido am berry pleased. But dat yaller-ha'r man, I no like him."

"We are engaged."

"Your mudder, she say no!"

"Nonsense! She likes Maurice herself," replied Isabella, uneasily. "Maurice wants our engagement kept quiet for the present, but when I do tell Major Jen and my mother, I am sure neither of them will object."

"H'm, we see, missy, we see," said Dido, darkly. "But why you marry dis man I no like?"

"Because I marry to please myself, not you," said Isabella, sharply. "Oh, I know your thoughts, Dido; you would like me to marry David Sarby. The idea! as if he can compare with Maurice!"

"Wrong, missy. I no wish dat man."

"Then Dr. Etwald—that horrid, gloomy creature!"

"Him great man!" said Dido, solemnly. "Him berry—berry great!"

"I don't think so," retorted Isabella, rising. "Of course, I know that he is clever, but as to being great, he isn't known beyond this place." She walked to the end of the veranda, and stood for a moment in the glare of the sunshine. Suddenly an idea seemed to strike her, and she turned towards the negress.

"Dido, you wouldn't like to see me the wife of Dr. Etwald?"

"Yes, missy. Him berry big great man! He lub you. He told old Dido so."

"He seems to have been very confidential," said Isabella, scornfully, "and from what I have seen, Dido, he has some influence over you."

"No," said the negress. But while her tongue uttered the denial, her eyes rolled uneasily round the lawn, as though dreading some invisible presence. "No, missy. Dido a great one, you know. She no 'frald ob dat doctor; but him big man, missy; you marry him!"

"I love Maurice!"

"You nebber marry him, missy. Nebber, nebber! I make de spell. I know. De spell say dat doctor he marry you!"

"Well, Dido, we will see. And now——"

She never finished what she was about to say, for at that homent Dido stretched out one arm. Across the lawn there crept a wizen, grey-haired little man, with a cringing manner. He was white, but darkish in the skin, and there was something negroid about his face. This dwarfish little creature was a tramp, who had become a pensioner of Isabella's. He had attached himself to her like some faithful dog, and rarely failed to present himself at least once a day.

What his real name was nobody knew, but he said that he was called Battersa. He was cringing, dirty, and altogether an unpleasant object to look upon; but Isabella was sorry for the creature, and aided him with food and a trifle of money. It may be here mentioned that Battersea, although he knew nothing of Obi, was terribly afraid of Dido. Perhaps some instinct in the negro blood—for he undoubtedly had something African in his veins—made him fear this unknown priestess of fetish-worship.

"Well, Battersea," said Isabella, kindly, "how are you to-day?"

"Very well, lady, very well, indeed. I met Mr. Aylmer, and he gave me a dollar."

"That was generous of him! But, why?"

"Because I said that a certain lady was——"

"Now, now," laughed Isabella, "no more of that nonsense, Battersea." She turned and ran along the veranda into the house. The tramp and the negress were alone.

"What de doctor say?" said Dido, in a low-voiced whisper.

"Two words. The devil-stick."

The negress started, and threw up her hands in surprise.

CHAPTER IV.

Evidently there was an understanding between these two strange creatures, and thereby an occult connection with the ideas and doings of Dr. Etwald. What the trio were plotting against Isabella and her lover remains to be seen; but it can be guessed easily that the message of the devil-stick carried by Battersea to Dido was of some significance.

Battersea himself knew nothing of its esoteric meaning, but to the negress the mention of the emblem conveyed a distinct understanding. She let her arms fall listlessly by her side, and, with an unseeing gaze she stared at the green trees bathed in hot sunshine. After a moment or so, she muttered to herself in negro jargon, and clenched her hands.

"Baal! the wand of sleep! the bringer of death!"

"What are you saying, Dido?" asked Battersea, his feeble intellect scared by the fierce gestures and the unknown tongue.

"I say deep things which you no understan'. Look at ole Dido, you white man."

Battersea whimpered, and, rubbing one dirty hand over the other, did as he was requested with manifest unwillingness. With an intensity of gaze, Dido glared at him steadily, and swept her hands twice or thrice across his face. In a moment or so the tramp was in a state of catalepsy, and she made use of his spellbound intelligence to gain knowledge. There was something terrible in her powers being thus exercised in the full sunlight.

"De debble-stick. Whar is it?"

"In the house of Major Jen. In a little room, on the wall, with swords and axes."

As he said this in a monotonous tone, Dido looked across the tree-tops to where the red roofs of "Ashantee" showed themselves against a blue July sky. She shook her list at the distant house, and again addressed herself imperiously to Battersea, commanding:

"Tell ole Dido ob de debble-stick."

"It is green, with a handle of gold, and blue stones set into the gold."

Dido bent forward, and touched the tramp on his temples.

"See widin dat stick," she muttered, eagerly. "I wish to see."

"There is a bag in the handle," repeated Battersea, with an effort. "Under the bag a long needle," then, after a pause, "the needle is hollow."

"Is der poison in de bag, in de hollow ob de needle?"

"No!" said Battersea, again. "The poison is dried up!"

At this moment a noise in the house disturbed Dido, and with a pass or two she released Battersea from the hypnotic spell. He started, rubbed his eyes, and looked drowsily at the tall negress, who had resumed her impassive attitude.

"What have you been doing, Dido?" he asked, stupidly.

"Obi?" was the brief reply. "You hab told old Dido what she wish about de debble-stick."

"The devil-stick," repeated the tramp, in wide-eyed surprise. "I don't know anything of it. Dr. Etwald met me, and ses he, 'You go to Miss Dallas,' and I ses, 'I does;' and he ses, 'You'll see Dido,' and I ses, 'I will;' and he ses, 'Say to her "Devil-stick," an' I ses, 'Right y'are, sir.' But es to knowing——"

"Dat nuffin!" said Dido, with a lordly wave of her hand. "I black; you hab de black blood in youse also. I mek you do Obi. Um!"

"What's Obi? What's you torkin' of?" asked Battersea, rather nervously. "An' 'ow does you know I hev black blood?"

"Obi say dat to me. Your mudder black?"

"Yah!" cried Battersea, derisively. "You're out of it. My mother white; but my father," here he hesitated, and then resumed—"Yes, you're right, Dido; my father was a negro! A Seedee boy who was fireman on a liner."

"I hab seen dat," replied Dido, nodding her head. "Black blood in youse, an' I can do Obi on you. I send your spirit to de house of Massa Jen! You tell me ob de debble-stick. But I tike care ob you. Now git to de kitchen; dere am food for you."

The old man's eyes brightened in anticipation of a feast, and he shuffled off round the corner as quickly as his age would allow him. Dido looked after him for a moment, considering the message he had brought from Dr. Etwald, and then began to think of the devil-stick.

She knew very well what it was, for her grandmother had been carried off as a slave from the west coast of Africa, and knew all about Ashantee sorcery and fetish rites. These she had repeated to her granddaughter, Dido, with the result that Dido, cherishing these recollections, knew exactly how to use the wand of sleep. She had spoken about it to Dr. Etwald, quite ignorant that Jen kept one as a curiosity, and now Etwald had intimated through Battersea that he wished her to do something in connection with the stick. What that something might be, Dido, at the present moment, could not guess.

She had exerted her magnetic and hypnotic influence over Battersea, not that she wished for a detailed description of the wand, for already she knew its appearance, but because it might happen that it would be necessary to use the tramp for certain purposes connected with the discovery of secrets. Dido exercised a strong influence over this weak old creature.

Battersea was supposed to be a Christian; but the barbaric fluid in his veins inclined him to the terrible grotesqueness of African witchcraft, and Dido and her words stirred some dim instinct in his mind. The negress saw that accident had placed in her way a helpless creature, who might be of use in her necromantic business; therefore, by hypnotizing him once or twice, she contrived to keep him within her power. All of which fantasy would have been denied by the average newspaper reader, who cannot imagine such things taking place in what he calls euphoniously a Christian land. But this happened, notwithstanding.

Having dismissed Battersea, the negress turned to seek Isabella. She was so devoted to her nursling that she could hardly bear to be away from her; and since her infancy Isabella had scarcely been absent an hour from her strange attendant. The girl had gone into the drawing-room, where Mrs. Dallas was still sleeping; and there, relieved for the moment from the prying eyes of the negress, she took a letter out of her pocket. It was from Maurice, stating that he was coming to see her that afternoon at 3 o'clock, as he had something particular to say.

It was now close upon the hour, and Isabella was wondering how she could get rid of Dido, whom she did not wish to be present at the coming interview. The inborn jealousy of the woman, and her advocacy of Dr. Etwald's suit, made her an unpleasant third at such a meeting; moveover, Maurice instinctively disliked this sullen creature, and was never quite easy in her presence.

Finally, Isabella decided to slip round back of the house and meet Maurice at the gate. She put on a straw hat, and ran lightly away to see her lover. She passed out by a side door, danced like a fairy across the intervening space of lawn, and slipped laughingly into the narrow path which wound through the wood to the avenue near the gates.

Just as she emerged into the open, she heard a sharp click, and saw Maurice approaching. He was dressed in his flannels, and looked particularly handsome, she thought; the more so when she beheld his face lighting up at her unexpected appearance. The magnetism of love drew them irresistibly together.

"My own dear love," he murmured, softly. "How good of you to meet me!"

"I came down here to escape Dido," explained Isabella, slipping her hand within his. "You don't like her to be with us!"

"I don't like her in any case, my darling. She is like a black shadow of evil always at your heels. I must get your mother to forbid her trespassing upon our meetings."

"My dear Maurice, how can you possibly do that, when you refuse to tell my mother of our engagement?"

"Oh, I had a reason for keeping our engagement secret, but it is no longer necessary, and I am going straight to ask your mother to give me this dear hand in marriage. If she consents, we will soon get rid of Dido."

"But my mother may not consent," said Isabella, a trifle nervously.

"Why not? I have a profession and a small property. We love one another dearly, so I don't see what ground she has for refusal. I wish to tell your mother of our engagement; for I must rescue you from the influence of that dark Jezebel. She is dangerous."

"I know she is; but she hates you!"

"I don't care for her hate," replied Maurice, carelessly. "It is a poor thing, and cannot possibly harm me. Surely Mrs. Dallas will not let herself be guided in so important a business by the will and feelings of that black wench."

CLAIM FOR THE CLASSICS.

Teachers See Their Efficacy as Preparation for Leaders of Men.

Views of leading headmasters printed in the Daily Mail in the last few days are sufficiently unanimous to suggest that a movement which might almost be termed a "classical renaissance" now accompanies the strong tendency in favor of technical, commercial and modern systems of education.

Oscar Browning says, according to the London Daily Mail: "I am a firm believer in a classical education. Whatever may be urged against it, no rival system has yet been invented which can surpass it. Modern languages and history are admirable studies, but a well-trained classic is better prepared for dealing with them than any one else. I am well acquainted with French, German and Italian, but I owe my proficiency in these languages to my classical training. Sir Henry Maine, one of the greatest publicists of our age, was a first-rate classical scholar; so is Goldwin Smith.

"The Greek language is the most perfect expression of the subtlest thought and emotion of the most gifted nation of whom we have any knowledge. The study, even the temporary and superficial study, of it leaves an indelible impression. It is the 'deep breathing' of the mind. He who knows most of Greek will know most of everything.

"The study of Cicero, Livy and Tacitus at Eton has had a profound effect on English history. They inculcate the dignity and importance of human affairs, the recognition of which is the first qualification for a leader of men. These studies produced the Ciceronian statesmen of the eighteenth century, whose busts decorate the upper school at Eton and to whom our country owes so much.

"Science is not an education and never can be; mathematics is not an education and never was. The only education worthy of the name is literature, and literary education to be sound, solid and enduring must be founded upon the classical languages and especially on Greek."

Dr. Gray of Bradfield College deprecates the existence of "two opposing systems of education for youths up to seventeen and eighteen. The alleged fact that a greater capacity for acquiring general knowledge is to be found among classical students," he says, "does not in itself form a proof that classical studies are the best mental gymnastics. It must be remembered that by far the greatest and most valuable academical prizes have been allocated to this particular sphere of learning, and to quote from my recent inaugural address at Winnipeg, 'just as where the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together,' so where the emoluments have been thither do the cleverest students concentrate their intellectual force."

Dr. Gray advocates a grand trunk system of education, in which one dead language, one modern language, history, geography, mathematics, English literature, natural science and manual training should all gain a proportionate place.

The Nature of It.

"A hotel keeper has an occupation which inclines him to amiability."

"How so?"

"Because to all inquiries about rooms, no matter how put, he likes to give a suite answer." — Baltimore American.

American capitalists are trying to form a merger of every acre of timber-producing land in Novia Scotia, investing $5,500,000.

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN

Why Plain Men Attract.

A fact that no one can deny is that for some women a really plain man seems to have a definite power of attraction. Can it be that, if beautiful themselves, they find a charm in their opposite; or is it that they brook no rival near the throne, and see in a handsome man more or less of a competitor? asks Mrs. Fitzroy Stewaart in The Srtand. A good looking husband or brother attracts notice, and her royal highness, woman, may refuse to be in the background. At any rate, there can be no doubt that an ugly man seems often to wield an influence that is quite uncanny.

The trend of the times may have something to say on the subject. A modern woman, with her brains and her freedom and her strenuous ideals, has no use for what is weak, insipid, and decadent. She has no place in her heart for the scented exquisite, who waves his hair, twists his mustache, manicures his hands, and admires his face in the looking glass. In fact, pink and white prettiness is now at a discount, and most of us would sooner see our men brown and battered and serenely conscious of their own lack of attractions. Rough-hewn, features, we say, show strength, and a plain form may be the shell of a great soul, a keen brain, and souring ambitions. Certain it is that the Adonis type has gone out of fashion. The woman of to-day scorns the "beauty man," avoids him as a friend, and disregards him as a husband.

Russian Military Suit.

Very smart and jaunty is the little suit of dark blue mohair, sicilienne, intended for wear under a heavy fur coat. The Russian belted smock is suggested in the coat, which opens over a vest of white broadcloth, this vest and the turndown collar, which is a continuation of the long revers, being braided with crosswise trips of gold soutache. Tiny gilt buttons fasten the front of the vest and above is a little yoke of tucked cream net. Lines of black silk braid and a black belt passing through gilt rings add to the military air of the little suit.

Needlework Notes.

A child's thimble is useful to slip into the tip of a kid glove while mending it.

An odd hatpin holder is a bag of ribbon embroidered in flowers and filled with rice.

Crossbar muslin with hand embroidered scalloped edges makes a dainty and serviceable school apron for a small girl.

A fancy letter for marking towels is made of slanting satin stitch, French knots and feather and outline stitches.

Embroider your name on a narrow piece of silk ribbon and sew it on the strap of your parasol. It provides an excellent and inconspicuous mark of ownership.

Pretty sewing bags are made of flowered silk gathered on oval embroidery hoops, with a bow of ribbon at each corner and the hoops ribbon-wound.

A tiny sewing outfit, to fit in the traveling bag, will be no end of a comfort for one going visiting. It may be made of linen or silk, with just a bit of embroidery to give it a chic air.

An Ice Poultice.

In many cases of inflammation an ice poultice is a very useful application. It is made in this way: Spread a layer of linseed meal, three-quarters of an inch thick, on a piece of cloth, and upon the meal put at intervals lumps of ice about the size of a marble. Sprinkle meal over the ice and cover all with the cloth, turning the edges over. In this way the ice will last much longer than it otherwise would, and the poultice will be quite comfortable.

Ragged Shoe Linings.

The buyer of one of the largest stocking departments in this city says that the stocking trade is increased to a large extent by the carelessness with which men and women wear shoes with ragged linings. Even a small hole in the lining of a shoe is sure to repeat itself in the same place in the stocking, and when there is a large opening it is sure to ruin the stocking. Shoe departments mend shoe lining for their customers at small expense.

Threading Needles.

There are women who are so sensitive about growing old that they stop sewing in public as soon as they begin to find it hard to thread a needle. But difficulty in threading a needle is not limited to the aged. Here is a hint which will make the task easier.

In threading a needle hold the needle firmly between thumb and first finger. The thread is held in the left hand with a short end extending from between tips of first finger and thumb. The knack lies in pressing the two thumb joints hard together, keeping thread taut, when it will be found to go easily into the eye.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

The large rolling-pin brim shrdlu

Small boys are wearing tam-o'-shanter hats in cloth, bearskin and corduroy, the ear flaps silk lined.

The large rolling-brim hats of the Gainsborough type hold first place for afternoon and evening wear.

Fine gold wire is entwined through curls, while immense cabochons of dull coloring appear in the hair.

Mandarin is the name given to a yellowish tan, while Corinth is an extremely faded shade of old rose.

The new scarfs this year are wide, perfectly flat and very long, many reaching to below the knees in front.

Two rich materials, tapestry and fur, are to be found on some lovely little turbans, and the effect is beautiful.

As trimming on daytime dresses and evening robes, beads are used with great success. They are seen in all colors.

Nun's veiling is a material particularly suitable for the small mourning hat. It drapes easily and is light in weight.

The wrist or elbow puff is a familiar sleeve treatment at this hour. But the puff is not the baggy thing of old. It is moderate to the point of modesty.

One-piece dresses made without collars are often suplied with that very necessary article in a separate neckpiece made of gold net, finished with a velvet bow at the front.

Emancipation of Women.

The emancipation of women has led to some questionable social conditions. When she is educated she marries later in life and is less inclined to marry. When she marries later in life she has fewer children. If this means an improvement in quality rather than an increase in number, the outcome is rather wholesome. Problems are introduced which as yet have not been solved. All we can do is to state them. It is claimed that the better educated, the higher developed a woman is, the less inclined she is to have offspring, and, when she is a mother, the offspring are not as healthy and vigorous as those of other women.

The kitchen is practically the sole survival of the old industrial aspects of the home, and one result has been that the children have been individualized and relieved of the obligations of household duties. The Sunday-school, the prayer meeting and the church have to a great degree assumed the former religious functions of the home; the kindergarten, the school, the playground and the social settlement have usurped the home's educational work, and the state has taken over, to a great extent, the responsibility for the education of the child.—Leslie's.

Right and Wrong Walking.

Women who desire to appear attractive should pay considerable attention to their manner of walking. The effect of a beautiful gown is often ruined by the wearer's unsightly stride. It requires no scientist to discover character delineations unfolded by the woman's walk. The most casual observer is at once conscious of some important phase of her character. Her walk, if graceful, natural and unexaggerated, expresses gentility. If women only realized what a story is told by the walk, how careful they would be to cultivate a walk which tells a pleasant story.

Make Home Happy.

Make the home life as happy as you can for the children. Many a boy goes astray, not through lack of care and training, but because home life is not made as happy as it might be. Children, while they are young and impressionable, should be surrounded with happiness. It is as essential to their well being as sunshine is to flowers. If, as they grow up, they find that happiness is not to be had at home, they soon learn to look for it elsewhere.

Hand-Run Tucks.

"I have discovered an easy way of making hand-run tucks in lingerie," said a seamstress. "Crease the first tuck as usual for machine tucking and adjust the tucks, but do not thread the machine. Then run through the tucker. The needle will leave a distinct line, along which to run your hand sewing. The marker also leaves a line for the next tuck. It is best to sew each tuck as it comes from the tucker, as handling obliterates the marks."

Health and Beauty Hints.

Borax and ammonia lighten the color or brown hair.

The best cleansing agent for greasy hair is a solution of one tablespoonful of tincture of quillaia in one quart of hot water.

That the eye must have plenty of rest goes without saying. Nowhere does lack of sleep make itself felt more quickly or unpleasantly than in the eyes.

The habit of taking medicines of any sort for headache is vicious and in the end harmful, says a writer. While medicines sometimes give temporary relief, they do not remove the causes.

For a delicate child give nightly a warm bath, followed by a gentle, thorough rubbing with warm olive oil all over the body and limbs. This simple, safe, home treatment works wonders if given a fair trial.

Good health is partly dependent upon freedom of the body, and to attain this the abdominal muscles upon whose motion depends the activity of the digestive functions should be allowed room for unhampered movement.

Do not, even in a case of emergency, risk making a child's bed up on the floor; the impure air that is near the floor is most pernicious, and there is also almost a certainty of drafts, which will result in a stiff neck or toothache.

Coquettish Theatre Bonnet.

One is fairly captivated with the little bonnets which pretty women are wearing at the theaters, says a New York writer. These gay little head dresses—for they are scarcely more than that—do not hide the waves of the coiffure and make a most charming frame for the face. This bonnet is of coarse white net over blue satin, the net being darned with rows of baby blue velvet and ribbon, a frill of net finishing the edge. Turquoise colored beads and pearls also decorate the cabuchon.

Applying Enamel.

Whenever you want to apply an enamel finish, lightly rub with a medium grade of sandpaper. There are several liquid paint and varnish removers on the market if the old paint is in a bad condition. Many women are able and have the time to give the finish in a room a coat of enamel paint. Dust and dirt do not adhere to this finish, and it is a great labor saver as well as a delight to the eye. It is also both sanitary and artistic.

Aids Working Women.

The New York Equal Suffrage society, of which Mrs. Clarence Mackay is the president and leading spirit, has reduced its annual dues from $5 to $2. According to Mrs. Mackay, this reduction is for the purpose of getting self-supporting women as members. She believes that women wage-earners need the ballot more than any other class to protect themselves against the man-made laws regulating hours of work.

Bead and Silk Purses.

The revived fashion of bead and silk purses and bags has brought out a large assortment of patterns, many of which are copied from antiques, and women are making them for themselves and their friends. With the patterns in some of the houses are to be had instructions for the work and all the trimmings, frames, clasps, etc.

"Sour Grapes."

She could cook, she could not bake, she could not wield a garden rake, she could not sew, she could not darn, she could not knit socks out of yarn and she could not a husband get; so she became a suffragette and joined a club who motto said: "Till we can vote we shall not wed."

To Remove Spots.

If when ironing anything white you find a soiled spot, dampen a piece of white cloth and put a little cream of tartar on, then rub the soiled spot. You will be surprised to see it disappear.

Womanly Strength.

The strongest woman in the world is not the richest, the best educated, the most graceful, nor the one endowed with the greatest physical beauty, but the purest woman.

A WOMAN'S THOUGHT.

I am a woman—therefore I may not
Call to him, cry to him,
Fly to him,
Bid him delay not!

Then when he comes to me,
I must sit quiet;
Still as a stone—
All silent and cold.
If my heart riot—
Crush and defy it!

Should I grow bold,
Say one dear thing to him,
All my life fling to him,
Cling to him—
What to atone
Is enough for my sinning?
This were the cost to me,
This were my winning—
That he were lost to me.

Not as a lover
At last if he part from me,
Tearing my heart from me,
Hurt beyond cure—
Calm and demure
Then must I hold me,
In myself fold me,

Lest he discover;
Showing no sign to him
By look of mine to him
What he has been to me—
How my heart turns to him,
Follows him, yearns to him,
Prays him to love me.

Pity me, lean to me,
Thou God above me!
—Richard Watson Gilder.

The Day of the Slave

"The idea of expecting anyone to be serious to-day!" she mocked, mischievously. "Why all Nature is simply hilarious! Riotous birds, frolicking——"

"Nature go hang!" he exploded. "you're just choking me off. You always find some excuse for not listening."

"Well, then, why insist upon expressing yourself as to the future? Why not be content and happy in the now?"

"When a certain important matter is settled, I shall be prepared to enjoy the 'now,'" he finished.

"Your confidence is amazing."

"Certain doom is easier to bear than suspense," he asserted. "It's no use, Stella, the time has come and——"

"Hark! Hark! Hear that perfectly wonderful bird song? Why, it's like a part of our new duet."

She broke into a ringing carol which apparently silenced the bird, but presently it rallied and poured down a flood of thrills that threatened her with extinction.

"OH YOU—YOU WRETCH."

"Help me, Ned," she cried.

Ned succumbed, to her blandishments, as usual, his glumness fled, he lifted up his voice with hers; and together they produced such a volume of melody that the bird, after another frantic overflow, gave it up and flew away.

"Wasn't it the funniest contest?" she bubbled. "Our voices harmonized beautifully, in the clear air."

"Our voices always harmonize; they were made for each other. Stella——"

"Oh, yonder are stepping stones!" she cried, running down the hill to the stream. "Can't we cross here, and not tag the others away down to the bridge? We'd beat them to the picnic grounds, too."

A wicked inspiration filled Ned with exultation, if he could only stick it out. Objection was sure to add to her determination.

"Looks deep in the channels each side of that big rock, and you can't jump the gaps, either."

"Well, you can help me across," she said confidently.

"Oh, yes," he assented, "I can help you across easily. But I must put in another stone first." He felt mean, but reminded himself that she deserved it.

In a few minutes he had swung her safely across to the large rock in the center of the stream; as he leaped to it himself, the newly placed stone swayed and turned.

"Oh!" she cried, "It might have thrown us both in!"

"That's so," he returned.

He hid a grin, as with the hooked handle of her umbrella he helped it into the deeper channel, where it settled to the bottom.

Suddenly realizing the disadvantages of her position, Stella shivered, saying: "Let's hurry, Ned. I'm afraid this rock will turn over, too."

"Oh, no, it's solid," Ned stamped. "Good thing, too; I need firm footing for the jump; channel's wider on this side. Here goes!"

"Oh, I thought sure you'd fall in, Ned. Put in several more stones for me, those are so wide apart I don't believe I can get over.

"No, I don't think you can," Ned replied.

"Well, then, hurry and get the stones."

"Yes, enough to build a bridge," Ned assented, regarding the building material indifferently.

"But you needn't build a bridge; three more will be enough, I'm sure."

"Or two, perhaps," Ned amended.

"Why don't you put them in, then?" she snapped, out of patience.

"Oh, there's no hurry," stretched back on the grass.

"Well, of all the— Maybe you think I like being a prisoner on a rock in mid-ocean," she suggested sarcastically.

"Maybe I think I like it."

"Ned Holcomb! What on earth do you mean?"

"That's easy," Ned sprang up; "every dog has his day, likewise slave. This is the day of the slave."

"Oh, you—you wretch," she spluttered, not even pretending to misunderstand him. "But I'll show you I'm not so helpless as you imagine." She made a motion as if to attempt to leap.

Ned smiled, repeating: "This is the day of the slave. I am going to have a hearing—Stella, will——"

She clapped her hands over her ears and gazed at the treetops. Ned composed himself at ease on the grass. Stella boiled with indignation.

"I'll fling myself into the deepest water and drown if you don't help me off instantly!" she threatened, darkly.

"Oh, you wouldn't drown. I'd pull you out and put you on the rock again to dry."

She stamped in vexation, the tilted heel glanced, she staggered and caught herself with an alacrity that belied her threat. Ned remained inert and unconcerned.

"I wish I had something to throw at you!" she stormed.

"You couldn't hit me, you know," he grinned.

She thrust her bare arm to the elbow in the water, but failed to fish up a stone wherewith to display her accuracy of aim and punish him.

"Ready to listen?" Ned laughed.

She disdained to answer. "This rock is as hot as—as Gibraltar. My feet are blistering."

She flounced about and studied the back trail of stones. "I believe I could jump it with my shoes off," she commented, careful that he should hear.

"Maybe," he returned. "You'd only get a good wetting if you fell in, you know."

"I should think you'd be ashamed of yourself," she opined, after a sulky silence.

"Oh, surely not now," he protested. "I'm puffed with pride. I've instituted a rebellion—which took a lot of courage—and I've laid a siege which I mean to maintain until capitulation. It's only when I look back at my former abject condition that I blush."

"I presume you expect to dictate the terms of capitulation," she jeered.

"Certainly," Ned agreed.

Silence for a space. Then she jerked her hat low, hid her face in her handkerchief and burst into sobs, quavering: "I never dreamed you'd treat me like this."

Ned set his teeth, again reminding himself that she was an adept at simulation. "Better have my handkerchief," he offered; "that bit of lace is inadequate for such a shower."

At length the young man raised to an elbow and listened, a smile growing to a broad grin. "Our little drama is to have spectators," he mused.

Stella listened an instant, then sprang up, crying vehemently: "Oh, oh! You wouldn't dare to keep me here till they come!"

"I'm in a daring mood; however, it rests with you."

"But just imagine what they'll think!"

"I know what the fellows'll think. I hear their cheers for the erstwhile spiritless slave. As for the girls, you can, perhaps, picture their thoughts and actions."

"Oh, please, Ned, please take me off. They'll laugh at me forever! Please, please, Ned!"

Ned choked, but replied firmly: "It cuts me to the heart to refuse you, Stella, but I must. I am determined to have my answer if the whole world stands gaping. Stella, will you marry me?"

Stella closed her lips stubbornly. Around the bend came lilts of song and merry whoops from the approaching party, as yet hidden by the woods. She made again as if to attempt the leap, faltered and shrank, then turned to her relentless jailer and nodded violently.

"I can't accept signs that may leave loopholes for evasion," Ned asserted; "I must have a plain, verbal answer—Stella, will you marry me?"

"Oh, yes, Ned, yes! Hurry! They'll be here in a minute!"

"Marry me soon?"

"Yes, yes! Whenever you please! Hurry, Ned!"

"All right, girlie," the stones flew into place, and as he swung her over Ned whispered, "Forgive me, dear; it was brutal."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Anecdotes Told of Wit.

When A. T. Stewart conceived the idea of setting up a coat of arms he went to W. R. Travers, the New York wit, for advice. Mr. Travers suggested an employer rampant, chasing a lazy salesman with a yard-stick, and Mr. Stewart did not speak to him again for a month. This anecdote is probably as authentic as the other, which states that Mr. Stewart being extremely loquacious at a state banquet at Delmonico's, Mr. Travers silenced him by calling the length of the table: "Cash!"

Acme of Real Stupidity.

It is claimed that in his boyhood Shakespeare was so stupid that he did not know enough to come in out of the rain. Perhaps through this stupidity he got so wet that he became the great intellectual ocean whose waves touch the shores of all thought.

Editorial Notes

The Fight of Republican Factions

The Richmond Palladium (Rep.) owned by Mr. Leeds, who has just bought the Indianapolis Sun, contained the other day evidence of the quality of "harmony" that exists among the Republicans. Mr. Leeds is for Beveridge and he thinks that there is a conspiracy to "down him." And here is what his paper said:

"With all the political finesse of his long experience as Cannon's whip, James E. Watson marshalled his political allies against Beveridge and insurgency in the Sixth district at the Rushville convention. Skillful manipulation and well-matured plans, which sought to put Beveridge in a box and yet leave no trace to the outward eye only fail of complete success by the efforts of Beveridge's strong following in Wayne. * * Watson's attempt yesterday will set the district to thinking. It is believed that this is the beginning of the fight by the regular organization of Aldrich and Cannon to smash insurgency at any cost. The plans are, it is said on good authority, to defeat the whole Republican ticket in this state in the hope that the patronage will revert to Watson and Hemenway as advisors to Mr. Taft in the next national campaign. * * Watson will stump the state making speeches in defence of the tariff. It is pointed out that this is calculated to have a bad effect on the whole state situation and indicate that Watson is either blind or fully intent on the destruction of Republican success, for his reputation as a lobbyist at Washington is widely known. And then came Mr. Watson and offered the following suggestion in rebuttal:

"To defend a bill passed by a Republican senate, a Republican house and signed by a Republican president; to defend a bill voicing the judgement of congress on a principle that has been fundamental in Republican politics from Lincoln to Taft; to defend a bill which I personally believe to be what President Taft called it—'the best tariff bill ever passed by the Republican party'—that is treason and betrays a disposition to destroy the party!"

Mr. Watson concluded if that was treason and was evidence that he had entered into a conspiracy to "smash Beveridge," that it was for Mr. Beveridge's friends to put it in their pipes and smoke it, whether it tasted good or not. Harmony? Why, to be sure!

To Leave Taft Out

The Republican state committee has been reorganized by electing B. M. Lee, a Beveridge man, choirman, and John F. Hayes, Mr. Beveridge's private secretary as secretary. Announcement is made by those in authority that the campaign is to be "a Beveridge campaign." In veiw of this statement it might be well to inquire of Mr. Beveridge as to where he stands on the ship subsidy grab and the central bank hold-up. It might be a good thing, also, to have him state precisely how much of the tarriff graft he favors and how much he opposes. How large a private tax does he think the trusts and monopolies should be allowed to levy on the people? Where the tarriff now puts one dollar in the treasury for public purposes it puts five in the pockets of favored individual for private purposes. As Mr. Beveridge has said that he thinks five is too much, would he be satisfied with four or three? He should make it clear where he stands with respect to these amounts. In the meantime the people of Indiana should get ready to send a man to the senate who is opposed to and will vote against the entire private tax, a thing that Beveridge will not do.

Staggers Skeptics

That a clean, nice, fragrant compound like Bucklen's Arnica Salve will instantly relieve a bad burn, cut, scald, wound or piles, staggers skeptics. Microbes in the Scalp

The Latest Explanation is That Microbes Cause Baldness

Professor Unna, of Hamburg, Germany, and Dr. Sabourand, of Paris, France, share the honor of having discovered the hair microbe.

Baldness is not caused through a few weeks' work of these hair microbes, but is the result of conditions brought about by their presence. Baldness may not occur until years after the microbes began work, but it is certain to come sooner or later.

The microbes cut off the blood supply. They feed on the fatty matter about the roots of the hair, through which the blood is absorbed. Finally the fatty matter is consumed, the food supply of the hair is gone and it starves and finally dies.

Resorcin is one of the most effective germ destroyers ever discovered. Beta Naphthol is a most powerful, yet absolutely safe germicide and antiseptic, which prevents development of germ matter, and creates a clean, healthy condition.

Pilocarpine, although not a coloring matter or dye, is an ingredient well established for its power to restore natural color to human hair when loss of color has been caused by a disease

Borax, because of its well-defined softening and cleansing properties, is most useful in the treatment of scalp and hair diseases. Glycerine acts as a stimulant to the hair bulbs, and has a soothing, healing and nourishing influence. Alcohol is indispensable in medicine because of its antiseptic, stimulating and preservative qualities.

We want every one who has scalp or hair trouble to try Rexall "93" Hair Tonic, which contains all these ingredients. If it does not give you complete satisfaction in every particular, we will return every penny you paid us for it, for the mere asking and without question or formality.

Of course you understand that when we say that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will grow hair we do not refer to cases where the roots are entirely dead, the pores of the scalp closed, and the head has the shiny appearance of a billiard ball. In cases like this there is no hope. In all other cases of baldness Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will grow hair, or cost the user nothing. Two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Butler only at our store—The Rexall Store. Geo. W. Geddes. 1t

With the big Panama canal debt, the deficit in the postal department, and now a bill before the house asking for appropriations amounting to $42,355,276 for waterway projects, it is hard for the average calculator to look upon the head of the government with any grert degree of optimism.

FRANK SWANTUSCH'S TRAVELS

At many places on the route we have found formations unlike anything seen before but nothing more striking than this rare specimen. Here is a spring whose shape and coloring is just like those of a Morning Glory that grew in our grand mother's garden. A little distance beyond we enter Upper Geyser basin, in which we find Fan Motor and Rivereside Geyser all on the Firehole river. Riverside Geyser is peculiar because it gushes at an angle across the river, almost reaching the farther shore. After crossing Firehole river we come to the Grotto Geyser the most curiously formed of all freaks of geyserland. On account of numerous scallops in the rim of this old sage it is called the Grotto. 500 ft. from the Grotto is the Giant Geyser. Here we turn to the right along our road and reach strange freak the Devil's Punch Bowl.

Crossing a foot bridge over Iron Creek we arrive at Sunlight basin an area containing several beautiful pools of which Handkerchief and Emerald are the most charming. Handkerchief is so named because a kerchief thrown in the spring wholly disappears from sight, is boiled about in the waters below for several seconds and is again brought to the surface, all by the action of the water itself. Emerald pool receives its names from the color of its waters, the size is 30x60 feet and its coloring is of such an emerald green that it is pronounced a rare gem of springs in the Park.

We now drive into camp where tents are pitched for lunch about 30 rods from Old Faithful Geyser. Our guide conducts us over the great area of crusted surface of craters and pools and geysers and other freakish formation of prominence, such as the Giant and Giantess, Lion and Lioness, with their two cubs and Castle Geyser Beehive, Cascade and Butterfly Geyser, Peanut, Orange and Oyster shell spring Topas pool, Devil's pump, Sponge and Danger pools, each of which has its own attractive features. Of all objects in this region Old Faithful is most engaging, its eruptions take place every 65 to 70 minutes with the regularity of time itself. This gives it the name it bears. It throws its boiling water 150 feet high and falling at its base in sprays and mist and steam reflects all colors of the prism producing an astonishing effect.

From here we travel one and one half mile to Kepler Cascades, they are composed of three large bunches of rock 150 feet drop, we view them from the road down into the canyon and see them full of majesty and charm. Returning to our coaches we travel about three mile through heavy timber and picturesque places to another geyser (The Lone Star) this has a crater about a foot across at top and 12 feet high. In the center is a large opening around which are numerous small apertures through all of which the water gushes with great force when the geyser is playing. It erupts at intervals from thirty minutes to two hours gushing as high as 60 feet. It stands alone in wild forest miles away from any of its kindred formation. If you could see this marvel of beauty, its cone colored with broad virtical strips of brown and white, softly blending into faint tints of yellow gold, the whole cone covered with countless beads of white, and out in the silent woods alone you would not wonder at its romantic name, "The Lone Star."

Our road now takes us up Spring Creek Canyon, a winding gorge two miles long, thence up the summit of the Rockies. Here the elevation is 8345 ft. above sea level, the water shed is known as Continental Divide. The rain from the same cloud often divides here and part of it goes to Atlantic and part to the Pacific Ocean. Continuing over the divide we go down Cork Screw Hill, which road is so crooked that the team can eat oats out of its own wagon while driving down the hill (that's what some Pioneers say.)

We now reach De Lacy Creek, here tents are pitched for the night, the location is between two high mountains. Here is the best chance to see wild game roaming Deer, Elk, and Bear skulk through the silent forest and loiter in the dense woods back from the road side in this vicinity, we had the pleasure of seeing two deer.

Leaving De Lacy camp the next morning we drive three quarters of a mile to an elevation overlooking Shoshone lake. Here is the finest and broadest view of landscape we get from any point in the park. The eyes fall first on Shoshone lake, covering an area of twelve miles square, then rise in admiration to three majestic peaks of the Teton mountains, 1400 feet above sea level, which makes part of the boundry line between Wyoming and Idaho. Then they linger long in bewildering gaze over miles and miles of boundless forest over mountain and valley and plain—all constituting a landscape of hundreds of miles of lakes and streams, mountains and vales finally fading away in the purple and haze of the far horizon. From this point on for nine miles we encounter that scenes that delight the eye and holds the attention of the tourist completely.

We finally arrive at Lake View, a location giving us the first view possible of Yellowstone lake and its surroundings. At this point we are about 1000 feet above the lake itself. This view reveals Red mountain and Storm mountain to our right in the landscape before us and a towering range of snowclad peaks directly across the center of the lake known as Hoodoo mountain, among whose highest peaks are Mount Langford, Mount Stephens and Mt. Doans, these proud sentinels apparently guarding this treasure scene. The lake covers an area of 139 square miles, has an elevation of 7741 feet of sea level and is 1700 feet deep at some places, with an average depth of 200 feet. Three beautiful islands dot its surface and greatly add to its charm. This is the largest navigable body of water of its altitude in all the world.

From Lake View we make a quick descent of a mile upon our road and arrive at West Thumb, a thumb inlet at the west end of Lake Yellowstone. Here we see various objects of interest different from anything seen upon our route. The shore of the lake at this end is of a whitish crusted formation arranged in crude benches and formed selicious deposits which flow from numerous hot springs nearby. Among the most interesting features here are the Thumb paint pots, which are springs of boiling mud of various shades and tinges, much like the Gibbon and Mammoth Paint pots which we have already seen. The unique feature at this place, however, is what is known as Fish Cone, which a boiling spring located a few feet out in the lake, with its cone standing about two feet out of water It is a very common thing for people to stand upon the edge of this cone, cast their "fly" out in cold waters of the lake, catch the speckled beauties, and while they are yet on hook, dangling from the pole, place them in the boiling waters of Fish Cone where they are cooked in a few minutes. This is a curious and interesting sport to those who care to indulge in fishing.

It is such a strange experience that those who read it, unless they have it done, will likely look upon it as an Indian tradition or a fairy tale of the "wild and woolly west," but thousands of visitors to this weird region can testify to the truth of this statement The Elk spring and Twin springs here are also delightful to behold. We drive on a little farther and we pass the government fish hatchery. Here the U S government is spending time and money in the industry of hatching fish for the purpose of keeping the cold water streams and lakes in the park replenished with trout in order that the tourist may get his fill of the fascinating pastime of angling. About half a mile farther on we find the tents pitched and our lunch awaiting us, (this is on the bank of Yellowstone lake) and after lunching we have the opportunity to go and catch some of the speckled beauties if we wish We also have the privilege to take a gasoline launch and make a eighteen mile tour of the lake. This trip is replete with magnificent scenery. The grandeur of the lake, with the steam rising from almost countless hot springs along the edge, the vast, almost boundless body of timber stretching away over valley and hill up to what is known as "timber line" on the mountains and the three proud peaks of the Titons seen in the distance as you round Dot island, with Sleeping Giant constantly visible on the trip, all constitute one of the most sublime landscapes ever seen.

Those going the overland route have the pleasure to see the Knotty Forest, through this strange forest we drive a distance of three miles, finding the trees nearly all deformed by large knotty formation extending entirely around the body of the tree and these huge knots appear upon various parts of the trees and even upon the limbs, giving them a very odd appearance. This condition extends over a great area of the forest. The cause of this singular formation is still a mooted question, but some still insist that it is merely a fungus growth. The furniture in Old Faithful Inn and Klamer's Curio store nearby, however, is all made of knotty timber from this forest and indeed a very rare possession. Having passed through the forest we descend the natural Bridge Divide, coming in full view of the Sleeping Giant whose towering peak is near the outlet of Yellowstone lake. One does not need to draw upon his imagination to see the great Giant lying upon the top of this peak, he is in the attitude of repose and the image is so plain and distinct that it is noticed at once. A little farther we come to the natural Bridge which is another novel sight. It consists of a bridge of native rock about 40 feet in length, spanning a chasm about 30 feet wide. It is divided lengthwise by a space, perhaps eighteen inches wide, having about six feet of bridge upon one side of the space and four feet upon the other side. This bridge is just as naturs's masons made it and no human hand is permitted to mar or deface it It is a unique sight, however. From here on the woods are full of objects, both odd and delightful, now and then we get a glimpse at wild animals in the timber along the drive.

We arrived early at lake camp grounds which was a very delightful spot for camping. Three of us strolled south along the shore with our fishing rods. We had gone about a mile when we spied a drove of elk which were grazing on the hillside, and when one of the gentlemen gave a shrill yell they soon disappeared in the timber. That night about 11 o'clock one of the roustabouts came up with water from the lake and said there was a big bear in bathing, so all that were still up (and some which had retired) went down to the lake which was only a few rods to see Broon taking his bath The next morning we were called early to view the grand suprise, which I will try to describe, and give you a faint idea of its grandeur Far over on the eastern sky, just after the first faint streaks of dawn, the upper rim of what seemed a great glaring ball of fire stole softly above the horizon. As it crept a little higher into the sky it threw a broad crimson streak upon the lake, and when it had risen about half above the horizon it sent out from its diameter a brilliant, horizontal crimson plane which gradually widened from sides of the glaring orb until it seemed about 50 feet wide when it had reached the eastern shore. It quickly crossed the lake a gleaming, glistening plane of rich crimson and its glittering brilliancy was doubly intensified by the deep blue waters of the lake in rich contrast as they were, and by the time this blazing bar reached us it had grown to such a width that it took in most of our shore and its dazzling brightness fairly took away our senes. The scene was so gorgeous and so grand that we stood amazed in a blaze of glory, gazing with startled eyes upon the golden plane, the blue waters upon either side and the green landscape beyond We had no words to tell its sublimity, speech could not contain our thoughts, when this crimson orb had risen above the sky line the dazzling plane had vanished. After having witnessed this inspiring sight we have breakfast and then start for a eighteen mile drive.

The next point of interest is Mud geyser. This is a muddy, noisy, growling mud volcano whose peculiar rumblings are heard half a mile before we reach the hideous spectacle itself. When its awful rumblings are first heard one is momentarily startled. We find this volcano of boiling mud slush located about 100 feet to left of the road and its funnel-like crater extending down into the earth about 30 feet. It is about the most hideous and yet most fascinating freak in the park. Its eruptions are not so forcible as those of some of the other geysers, but it is almost constantly in action. The eruptions begin with a strange rumbling which increases in intensity until in a few seconds its dull, heavy growling can be heard a half mile away, then it bursts forth in gulps and throws out a thick, pasty, bluish gray mud and steam, presenting a sight which is both repulsive and interesting. Following the trail about 200 feet on the mountain side from Mud geyser we find Gable geyser, whose cone is shaped like the gable of a house. Inside this cone is a boiling hot spring whose water is as clear as crystal. Boarding our coaches again we drive about a mile beyond where we enter the largest valley in the park, known as Hayden Valley. This is a large park in which grows an abundant supply of grass and a favorite feeding resort for deer, elk and buffalo. It is traversed by several mountain brooks, the principal of which are Trout Creek, so named because of its being such a fine trout fishing stream, and Alum Creek, so called on account of the stringency of its waters. In traveling the next mile or two along our route we find Yellowstone Valley narrowing down until it becomes a deep gorge with a roaring river plunging down its gradual incline. The road in this distance has taken us through many beautiful winding crooks and turns, around the mountain sides at a great elevation above the valley where we saw a vast stretch of meadows and forest dotted with peaks and streaked with streams and containing other objects that delight the eye. At the end of this mile we reach a fine substantial bridge that Uncle Sam has built across the world famed Yellowstone river just above the Rapids. This structure cost the sum of $45,000,000 and is a sample of what the government does in improvements to render a tour through this fairyland in safety and pleasure. Here we can get a good look at the Rapids or Cascades, and their dashing torrents serve to give us the first faint impression of and are the introduction to the amazing sights we are soon to gaze upon down the canyon.

Harry Miller, of Garrett, is under $100 bond to appear in court for stealing coal from the B. & O. Ry. Co. If what Cullie Hanna of this place says is true, it would be wise for the Lake Shore Co. to send one of their detectives to this city.

Miss Lois Clay entertained fourteen of her friends at a Valentine party Monday evening. The rooms were artistically decorated in red and white. Games and music was the chief feature of the evening. An elegant three course supper was served to which all did ample justice.

Mrs. E A. Eakright and Mrs. Jasper Pifer entertained the ladies of the Missionary Society and their husbands, also a number of invited guests, at the home of Mrs. Eakright last Thursday evening. There were fifty present in all. A short program was rendered, after which a two course luncheon was served. At a late hour the guests departed, thanking the ladies for a pleasant evening.

Mrs. Slaybaugh, wife of County Treasurer W. H. Slaybaugh, who is confined at the Turner hospital in Elkhart, is still in a critical condition, but is thought to be slowly gaining. The lady was removed to that institution several weeks ago to undergo a surgical operation. A host of DeKalb county friends will be overjoyed to learn of her recovery.

Those who have staked their faith in Butler are beginning to see that they have made no mistake. Slowly but steadily has she arisen from a deserted railroad town to a small manufacturing city, and only by the untiring efforts of her progressive citizens who would not say "die." They could see that there was a future for her because of the excellent location and commercial center and vast agricultural resources which are the most valuable assets any city can offer There are very good prospects for Butler to become a city of eight or ten thousand within the near future.

On Thursday evening, February 3, about forty friends and relatives were pleasantly entertained at the country home of Mr. and Mrs Samuel Miller. The evening was spent in a social way. An elegant supper was served. Mr. Miller has recently added to his already beautiful home an acetylene lighting plant which makes a light superior to electricity in brilliancy and are very much prettier. This with their fine heating system, telephone and rural mail delivery certainly gives them nearly all the advantages of a modern city home.

A jolly crowd of Auburn ladies, members of a Sunday school class of the Lutheran church, spent Thursday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Marion Knepper. They came with well filled baskets, and to say that a feast was spread is putting it mildly. The day was spent with music, songs and readings A most enjoyable time was had, and the only regret was that the day was too short The following persons were present: Rev. J. H. Newhauser and wife, Mrs R A. Wilson, Mrs Phil Sibert, Mrs. Rollie Moffet, Mrs. Frank Baughman, Mrs. Myron Brandon, Mrs. M. E Boren, Mrs. Wm. Rhodeffer, Mrs. Leonard Grosh, Mrs. G. A Maurer, Mrs. Wm Zeigler, Mrs. Chas. Pommert, Mrs G. A. Mader, Mrs. Chas. Bolton, Mrs Rock, Mrs. Chas. Leason, Mrs. Jud Miller, Mrs Rosso and Mrs. Hompsher. The children present were John Wilson, Walter Sibert and Francis Leason. Mrs. Knepper was a former member of the class before coming to Butler. Mrs. Jeff N Boyle and Mrs Jerry Bolinger rendered valuable assistance in entertaining the visiting ladies.

ZION LACE INDUSTRIES. ZION CITY, ILLINOIS

ZION LACES and many interesting features in their manufacture are on exhibition in one of our show windows. This display is educational and every person should see it.

From 3,400 to 4,500 bobbins are required to thread one lace machine, besides the beam and warp, making a total—when the machine is threaded—of 13,000 threads in actual work. When a machine is fully threaded there are 6,700 miles of cotton on it, enough to reach from here to England and nearly back again.

See the illustrations of the various machines in operation—where they take in the thread and turn out the dainty, attractive laces—also skeins of yarns, yarn spools—pieces of lace just as they come from the machines. Especially interesting is the process of clipping, scalloping and separating. The exhibit is so unique and the values so unusual that a visit will be of material interest to you.

"Louis Cross-Eye."

Even monarchs are nicknamed—if they deserve it—by their loving or detesting subjects. The Detroit News tells of one royal nickname that even the Frenchmen of the fifteenth century could not have invented.

A doctor, visiting a Western city, went over the local museum. After admiring one or two of the exhibits, the curator, who was an old man, said: "Ah, but we've got a chair here that belonged to Louis Cross-Eye."

"Oh," said the doctor, "who was he?"

"Don't you know, sir? Why, he was one of the Kings of France."

"King of France? Louis Cross-Eye? There must be some mistake. Show me the chair."

The old man promptly complied, and pointed with conscious pride to a ticket inscribed:

"Once the property of Louis XI."

"Fort Sheridan?"

"No. It's a new place."

"The Philippines?"

"That ain't just it, but it's somewhere around there."

"Perhaps you mean Manila?"

"Manila! That's right! I knew I would get it after a while. I want a bottle of Manila extract for flavoring. They're going to have ice cream."

INSOMNIA

Leads to Madness, if Not Remedied in Time.

"Experiments satisfied me, some 5 years ago," writes a Topeka woman, "that coffee was the direct cause of the insomnia from which I suffered terribly, as well as the extreme nervousness and acute dyspepsia which made life a most painful thing for me.

"I had been a coffee drinker since childhood, and did not like to think that the beverage was doing me all this harm. But it was, and the time came when I had to face the fact, and protect myself. I therefore gave up coffee abruptly and absolutely, and adopted Postum for my hot drink at meals.

"I began to note improvement in my condition very soon after I took on Postum. The change proceeded gradually, but surely, and it was a matter of only a few weeks before I found myself entirely relieved—the nervousness passed away, my digestive apparatus was restored to normal efficiency, and I began to sleep, restfully and peacefully.

"These happy conditions have continued during all of the 5 years, and I am safe in saying that I owe them entirely to Postum, for when I began to drink it I ceased to use medicines." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

FAMOUS "GOLD BRICKS" OF HISTORY

Dr. Frederick A. Cook is not the first and very likely will not be the last to offer the public a "gold brick," in the way of great discoveries, says the Washington Post. The fakers have been found in all lands, and in almost all times, and their dealings have been in fake discoveries in science, in medicine, in literature. Some were successful in fooling the public for long periods; others were soon caught and exposed. For three centuries we have had among us persons persistently claiming that Shakespeare was a colossal faker, and palmed off on a credulous public the writings of one Bacon, as being the productions of his own brain and pen. The Baconites are still very strong in numbers and literary ability. Dr. Cook has had many predecessors and will no doubt have many successors in the years to come, and the people will continue to be gullible. P. T. Barnum, the great showman, said the people liked to be humbugged. That may be putting it pretty strong, but when we have once been humbugged it delights our souls to see somebody else get into the same category.

One of the greatest, if not the greatest, commercial fakes ever perpetrated upon the public was that of John Law in his famous Mississippi bubble, during the reign of Louis XV. France at that time was bankrupt, when along came a canny Scotchman, John Law, with his scheme to make all Frenchmen roll in wealth, and presented his plan to colonize Louisiana. Paper money, or rather paper promises, was to be the basis of this wealth, and he flooded the nation with his paper. Princes and peasants, nobles and clergy, men and women fought for the chances to subscribe for this stock. In one day he had all France rolling in wealth and on the next steeped worse than ever in poverty. Before the collapse, however, all Europe was in a craze to buy shares in the Mississippi company, and history says that at one time there were half a million foreigners in Paris eagerly speculating in the stocks and the prices rose to 15,000 francs a share. But the end came, and it came suddenly. No one except Law was looking for a break. He saw it coming and fled the kingdom.

Law found his example in what history knows as the "South Sea Bubble." This was a scheme that found its birth in the active brain of William Paterson, during the reign of Queen Anne. Paterson was the founder of the Bank of England, and had won high fame as a sound financier, so it was easy for him to find buyers for his shares when he placed the glittering South Sea scheme of colonization before the eyes of the people. He selected the Isthmus of Panama as the place to plant his colony. Advertisers of gold mines and other get-rich-quick schemes might find it to their advantage carefully to peruse the flamboyant pamphlets issued by Paterson nearly two centuries ago. After a while the end came; the colonists sickened and died, money became scarce in Scotland, and nobody wanted to purchase any more of the shares, and Panama was left to its fevers.

There have been fakers of history, and the name of Herodotus, like that of Abou ben Adhem, leads all the rest. He has always been called the "Father of History," because he was the first to attempt to put into concrete form the story of what the world had done and what it was then doing. For nearly 2,400 years he has been read with delight by scholars, and they freely admit that his historical "gold bricks" are so well garbed that they are almost as good as the genuine article.

Among the hosts of literary gold brick peddlers, Thomas Chatterton will ever stand at the head. "The marvelous boy that perished in his pride," when only 14 years of age, fooled all the literary people of England. Upon some old parchments he found among the things his father had left he pretended to have discovered fragments of ancient poems, sermons, and articles descriptive of the city churches, all written in the old lettering and spelling. They showed remarkable powers, both for a poet and a descriptive writer, and at once had all literary London agog. It was not long, however, before the literary world found that it had been hoaxed by a boy. Chatterton went to London at the age of 17 to make his way as a writer, but soon fell into habits of intemperance, and at the age of 18 he ended his life by drinking poison.

One of the popular poets of the present day in his early career handed out to the public a specimen gold brick which was so much like the genuine article that most of the literary critics were taken in. James Whitcomb Riley said, in a conversation with a friend, that he could write a poem that would be readily accepted as being an original by that master poetical genius of America, Edgar Allan Poe. A few days later a paper in a small Indiana town announced that among some rubbish in an attic an old book had been found that once belonged to Poe, and on the fly leaf was an original and unpublished poem by that author. It attracted wide attention, and was almost universally accepted by the critics as genuine, but when an offer of a large sum came for the manuscript by a collector the fake was acknowledged.

It is hard to determine to what class the great Moon hoax properly belongs, whether among those against science or literature. So complete was it as a treatise on science and astronomy that it entrapped the great Arago into accepting it. Its author was a literary genius, with a very large knowledge of science and astronomy. It purported to be the story of how Sir John Herschell had constructed a powerful telescope, and had been able to bring the moon in so close a range of vision as to be able to distinguish animals and men moving on its surface. Known truths of science were so cleverly interwoven with the imaginary that the closest observer had hard work to distinguish between the false and the true.

The people of England have had at least two gold bricks offered them in the shape of spurious claimants to the crown. At least half a dozen claimants to be the Dauphin of France, the son of Louis XVI, who was supposed to have been starved to death during the French Revolution, have appeared at one time or another. In 1603 Otrefief, a monk, pretended to be Demetrius, son of the Czar Ivan, who had been murdered. We know little of any religious impostors prior to the coming of Christ, although the Bible tells us that several false Christs had arisen before the coming of One now acknowledged by the Christian world as the real Redeemer. But since his day claimants of divine rights have been many. Mahomet, perhaps, is clearly entitled to stand at the head, and today his followers are counted by the millions.

Evidently getting his inspiration from the story of Mahomet, Joseph Smith, the father of Mormonism, discovered his Bible written on plates of gold, which had been hidden for ages until the angel guided him to the hiding place. The first book of Mormon did not contain all the present creed of that sect, but was added to from time to time by Smith, who, like his prototype, Mahomet, had visions many, in which he talked with God. In the year 743 one Adelbert, a Gaul, pretended to have received a letter from Christ, which had fallen down from heaven as he walked the streets, and was picked up by him. He soon obtained many followers, who went out into the wilderness and lived as John the Baptist had lived, on locusts and wild honey. They soon fell under the ban of Rome and were put down.

Spain furnished one of the most successful and most impudent of his class of impostors in one Gonsalvo Martem, who in 1300 claimed to be the angel Gabriel who had been sent down to earth to reform the churches and drive out error. Lady Hester Stanhope, the favorite niece of William Pitt, the great minister of Great Britain, withdrew to Syria, and there declared herself to be the bride of the Messiah.

America has furnished its share of religious enthusiasts. Among them William Miller stands out the most prominent, because of the number of converts he made. In these later days we have had Alexander Dowie, Elijah II, with his noted city Zion and his many troubles with the courts. But it would take page after page to tell of all the religious fakes that have led the people at one time or another.

One of the most impudent as well as successful fakes ever perpetrated was that of the Cardiff giant, or petrified man. In making some excavations near the town of Cardiff, in Onondago County, New York, the workmen unearthed this supposed petrifaction, or at least this was the claim made by those who were engineering the thing. It was taken over the country and put on exhibition in all the large cities, proving to be a drawing card for the exhibitors, who reaped a comfortable fortune from it. The whole thing was a fake. (It had been cut in Chicago out of a block of gypsum.

Forgeries for political purposes have been quite common in America. The most noted of these is the Morey letter of 1880, when Gen. Garfield was the Republican candidate for the presidency. The letter pretended to have been written in reply to one addressed to him by Morey, in which Gen. Garfield took strong grounds against the exclusion of the Orientals.

A few years later another political letter, which, however, was not a forgery, caused a widespread commotion in this country and resulted in the calling home of the British minister at the suggestion of President Cleveland. Mr. Cleveland was a candidate for re-election, and the tariff was in issue. A pretended former subject of Queen Victoria wrote to Mr. Sackville-West, the British minister, saying that while he was an American by adoption he desired to vote in the way that would do the most good to Great Britain, and asked for his opinion as to what effect the tariff would have on the mother country. It was a political trap and ought not to have deceived even a tyro in politics, but the minister fell headlong into the trap and replied, advising his correspondent to vote for Mr. Cleveland.

The most infamous of all such forgeries was that perpetrated in May, 1864, by two newspaper men of New York City. The two parties were preparing to enter upon a new political campaign, and the government was putting forth its strongest efforts to put an end to the Civil War. One night, just as all the morning papers were about to go to press, a proclamation, written on Associated Press paper, and purporting to come from the office of the association, was delivered at all of the New York newspaper offices. The proclamation bore the signature of President Lincoln, and was written in the most depressing spirit, giving new details of the horrible slaughter on the Southern battlefields, and calling for a new levy of 400,000 men. The effect of such a proclamation, written in such a vein, may well be imagined.

How many Philadelphia capitalists mourn the dollars which disappeared from their coffers into the cavernous and rapacious maw of the Keeley motor, that mysterious invention that was to revolutionize the mechanical world! A twin brother to the Keeley motor was the Logansport, Ind., lamp that, once lighted, was to go on and on, like the brook, and never need replenishing or trimming. The light went out, and so did the inventor, taking with him the good hard dollars of a hundred or so of his dupes.

Pittsburg millionaires, Cleveland bankers, New York capitalists and diamond dealers all paid tribute, and heavy tribute, to the brilliant and mysterious schemes of Cassie Chadwick, just as the Parisian money-makers did to the Humbert family.

Since history first began to be written there have been fakers ready to make diamonds out of charcoal and transmute base metal into the purest of gold, and they all found willing dupes.

Americans of the last generations laughed and grew fat over the fakes offered them by that prince of showmen, Phineas T. Barnum. The world will never again see his like. There was Joice Heth, the negress, 161 years old, who had once belonged to Augustine Washington, the father of the immortal George, and who was an eyewitness to the cutting down of the cherry tree. Dis de Bar, with her spirit pictures, has been exposed time and again. Of faking travelers we have had hundreds of them. Witness Americus Vespusius, who gave to our continent its name. He faked the honors which belonged to Columbus, and saw many lands no one else has seen. There was Sir John Mandeville and Marco Polo. They had their believers in their day, but in this iconoclastic age they are put down as fakers.

It is not so many years ago that the false Roger Ticheborne handed out to the English people a first-class gold brick when he set up his claim to vast estates. He won notoriety and a long term in prison. There was Peter Ney, the North Carolina school teacher, who some fourscore years ago had nearly all the people in the two Carolinas ready to back him as Napoleon's greatest marshal, Michael Ney.

There have been deceptions which accomplished a good purpose. Take that of the Cid, who died on the field of battle, and his officers tied him, clothed in full armor, on the back of his war steed, sitting upright with sword clasped in his mailed hand, that his soldiers might not know he was dead. Being led by a dead general they won the battle. Had they known of his death they would have been disheartened and lost a victory.

Only three or four years ago the good people of Washington and Alexandria were handed a first-class gold brick from the historic Carlyle mansion house, in the shape of a "petrified" head, supposed to be the head of a British soldier. It was pronounced genuine by a distinguished antiquarian of the Smithsonian Institution. The "discoverer" coined quite a few museum dimes before the fake was exposed. Of nature fakers, according to our late chief magistrate, the very woods are full.

DR. COOK'S NOTORIOUS FORERUNNER.

Nearly three centuries ago there was a great explorer, who sought the Northwest passage, which was the dream of explorers in the seventeenth century as the North Pole has been the dream of explorers of a later generation. He had made several attempts to find that mysterious and ever-elusive passage to Cathay, and at last had been told of a mighty river far in the interior of the new continent, which would lead him to the salt sea of the West. This great explorer was Samuel de Champlain, the founder of Quebec and the discoverer of the Great Lakes.

At the same time there was another who was ambitious for fame as a great and successful explorer. This ambitious young man spent a winter in Canada among the Indians. One day he suddenly appeared at Quebec, just as a ship was sailing for France. He arrived in France, and had wonderous tales to tell of great discoveries, of hardships endured, of difficulties surmounted and dangers dared. He was received by the King and Queen and all the notables of the kingdom, and again and again told the story of how he had succeeded where Champlain and Cadillac and Cartier and a host of others had failed. He was the hero of the hour, the pet of Paris and of France. Honors were showered upon him. He told how he had paddled up this river in his canoe, and down that; how he had threaded his way through dense forests, and fought with wild beasts, and with wilder and more savage men; how at last he had come to the shores of a great salt sea, a boundless ocean stretching ever and ever westward. All this, and much more, glibly fell from his tongue a dozen times a day, and the King and nobles vied with one another in their haste and liberality to fit out a new expedition under Champlain to complete the discoveries and set up a claim to the land and the ocean for the kingdom of France.

Much against his will, the "discoverer" was forced by the King to go with this new expedition as its pilot and guide. Champlain landed at Quebec, and almost immediately started on his quest for the salt sea. Day after day he pushed his little force through the wilderness, until at last he came to a tribe of Indians, who recognized his guide.

Then came the end. It was developed that the guide had spent the winter with these Indians, and had not been a mile farther west. He had never seen the salt sea, and the Indians themselves had never heard of any such sea within thousands of leagues of where they were. Champlain turned back toward Quebec, and Nicholas Vignau, the great fakir of the seventeenth century, quietly dropped out of sight.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN NOW TO BE WRECKED.

New York's Madison Square Garden, designed by the late Stanford White and erected at a cost of $3,000,000, has been sold to a real estate syndicate and will be torn down and replaced by a modern office building. The property has been on the market for some time at $3,000,000.

GORKY NOW IN DISFAVOR.

Russian Writer to Be Excluded from Revolutionary Party.

The pleasant life led by Maxim Gorky at Capri, beneath the warm Italian skies, does not meet with the approval of his comrades of the Social Democratic or Revolutionary party.

They resent the manner in which he welcomed a change from his former extreme poverty. He has been arraigned for a "tendency to good living and a love of comfort," and the former cobbler's apprentice, butcher's boy, kitchen scullion and tramp, who is now the most famous of the younger Russian men of letters, is to be excluded from the party for which he has sacrificed so much. Admirers of Gorky in this country and in England do not approve of the attitude taken by the revolutionists.

MAXIM GORKY.

Even after he had won literary fame as the "prince of pessimists" Gorky had a hard struggle for liberty and a living. In 1905 he was imprisoned in the Peter and Paul Fortress at St. Petersburg, and but for an agitation throughout Europe would doubtless have lost his head.

POOL COST OF MEALS

Carthage, Mo., Women Co-Operate and Believe Have Solved Servant Problem.

LIVE WITHOUT COOKS.

Co-Operative Kitchen Where Each Member Shares the Expense Proves a Success.

The co-operative kitchen, founded recently by Carthage women, has passed the experimental stage and will now become a permanent institution, a correspondent of the Kansas City Star says. A number of women who had been troubled by the servant problem decided about three months ago to pool their interests, or rather their troubles, and endeavor by their combined efforts to secure servants and gratify their appetite without contaminating the feminine portion of their several families with the odor of the kitchen.

Many were skeptical when the idea of the undertaking was first suggested, but those even most positive of the failure of the undertaking have now applied for admission to the dreamful kitchen, where servant troubles are only horrid nightmares; delicious meals the regular order and contentment reigns supreme.

It was decided to lease a residence and convert it into the co-operative kitchen. Three large rooms were made into a dining room. Each family furnished its own table and chairs, and every one "chipped in" to furnish the kitchen and second floor, where one large room is used for the children. A nurse is always waiting to take the crying baby while the "old folks" are enjoying their meal. The balance of the second floor is used as the servants' quarters. A regular menu is served, but should any family wish something special, it is bought and charged extra. Each member bears her pro rata of the expense.

OUSTED FROM CHIEF FORESTER'S POSITION BY TAFT.

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

Gifford Pinchot, who was released from the service of the government, has made the study of the conservation of forests his life work. His father was interested in forestry, and it was Pinchot money that endowed at Yale the first chair for the study of forestry established in any American university. He is a man of large means, and it is said that he always distributed his salary among his subordinates, and at various times went into his own pocket to carry out important work for the government. After being graduated at Yale Mr. Pinchot went abroad, where he studied European methods of forest preservation. Upon his return to this country he became chief forester of the great Vanderbilt estate, Biltmore, and, after spending four years in private life, he was in 1897 made special agent of the Interior Department to report on forest preserves. His advancement was rapid, and in 1898 President Roosevelt appointed him head of the forest service. Mr. Ballinger at that time was chief of the land office, and Mr. Pinchot was his superior. When Mr. Ballinger became Secretary of the Interior positions were reversed. Mr. Pinchot is 45 years old.

MORE PINKHAM CURES

Added to the Long List due to This Famous Remedy.

Oronogo, Mo.—"I was simply a nervous wreck. I could not walk across the floor without my heart fluttering and I could not even receive a letter. Every month I had such a bearing down sensation, as if the lower parts would fall out. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done my nerves a great deal of good and has also relieved the bearing down. I recommended it to some friends and two of them have been greatly benefited by it."—Mrs. MAE MCKNIGHT, Oronogo, Mo.

Another Grateful Woman.

St. Louis, Mo.—"I was bothered terribly with a female weakness and had backache, bearing down pains and pains in lower parts. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound regularly and used the Sanative Wash and now I have no more troubles that way."—Mrs. AL. HERZOG, 6723 Prescott Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, indigestion, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result is worth millions to many suffering women.

TO CURE RHEUMATISM.

Prescription That Cured Hundreds Since Published Here.

"One ounce Syrup of Sarsaparilla Compound; one ounce Toris Compound; add these to a half pint of good whisky. Take a tablespoonful before each meal and at bed time; shake the bottle well each time."

Any druggist has these ingredients or will quickly get them from his wholesale house. Good results are felt from this treatment after the first few doses, but it should be continued until cured. This also acts as a system builder, eventually restoring strength and vitality.

Epidemic of Itch in Welsh Village.

"In Dowlais, South Wales, about fifteen years ago, families were stricken wholesale by a disease known as the itch. Believe me, it is the most terrible disease of its kind that I know of, as it itches all through your body and makes your life an inferno. Sleep is out of the question and you feel as if a million mosquitoes were attacking you at the same time. I knew a dozen families that were so affected.

"The doctors did their best, but their remedies were of no avail whatever. Then the families tried a druggist who was noted far and wide for his remarkable cures. People came to him from all parts of the country for treatment, but his medicine made matters still worse; as a last resort they were advised by a friend to use the Cuticura Remedies. I am glad to tell you that after a few days' treatment with Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent, the effect was wonderful and the result was a perfect cure in all cases.

"I may add that my three brothers, three sisters, myself and all our families have been users of the Cuticura Remedies for fifteen years. Thomas Hugh, 1650 West Huron St., Chicago, Ill., June 29, 1909."

"Run, is it?" he repeated, scornfully. "Faith, an' I didn't, naither. I just observed the gineral's express orders. He told us, 'Strike for home and yer counthry,' and I sthruck for home.

BREAKS A COLD IN A DAY

And Cures Any Cough That Is Curable—Noted Physician's Formula.

This is said to be the most effective remedy for coughs and colds known to science. "Two ounces Glycerine, half ounce Concentrated Pine; put these into half a pint of good whisky and use in doses of teaspoonful to a tablespoonful every four hours. Shake bottle well each time." Any druggist has these ingredients in stock or will quickly get them from his wholesale house. The Concentrated Pine is a special pine product and comes only in half ounce vials each enclosed in an air-tight case. But be sure it is labeled "Concentrated." This formula cured hundreds here last winter.

The Chestnut Horse.

There is an ancient tale of a band of Arabs being pursued by their enemies which sums up their theory about a horse's color. Among the fleeing band was a man with unusually keen eyesight, and from time to time he would describe to his leader the horses ridden by the enemy.

"What manner of horses do they ride?"

"Black horses."

"Then there is no need of haste."

At the noon halt the leader again asked, "What manner of horses do they ride now?"

"Bay horses."

"Then we must ride harder."

A few hours later the leader asked, "Are they horsed again?"

"They ride chestnuts."

"Then we ride for our lives."

The Retort Erudite.

A famous scholar, whose hobby was the derivation of words, had occasion to store his furniture while proceeding to the continent in quest of the origin of the term "juggins." During his researches in Berlin he received from the warehouse company the following letter: "Sir—We have the honor to inform you that the mattress you sent to our store had the moth in it. Since the epidemic would expose the goods of other clients to injury, we have caused your mattrass to be destroyed."

The scholar replied: "Dear Sir—My mattress may, as you say, have had moth in it, but I am confident that it had an 'e' in it also."—London King.

Deafness Cannot be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

FARM AND GARDEN

Back to the Farm.

There are three all-important things to be weighed by the city man who wishes to return to the farm. The first is his wife. If she is in every sense of the word a helpmate, loves the country and can give up what she has been used to in the city for the sake of the children and the building of a real home, then the prospects are fairly favorable to begin with. The second thing to be considered is your years and capacity for work; the third, what is your capital? If all these are favorable, don't lose a day in trying to get suitably located. If any one of these points is doubtful, deliberate well and move slowly. If you have a fat bank account and a wife tied to the fleshpots of the city you can do nothing in the country; but, on the other hand, if your wife be one with you heart and soul, then capital might at a pinch be forgotten. As to the second point—that of years and capacity for work—this is very important, because so many of those who are earnestly desirous of forsaking the city to-day are well advanced in years, who think that the country would afford them an easy means of earning a living. There is nothing easy on the farm.

Loss on Farm Crops Due to Fungi.

Prof. W. A. Orton, in an article on the importance of the development of farm crops resistant to disease, justifies his statements by pointing out that the present losses from plant diseases are a heavy tax upon the farmer. He states that in the United States alone the average annual loss from oat smut is more than $6,500,000; from loose-smut of wheat, $3,000,000, and from bunt, or stinking smut of wheat, more than $11,000,000. Loose-smut annually diminishes the value of barley $2,000,000, a careful estimate of the loss in one State last year placing it as 7 per cent. The combined effect of the various diseases of fungal origin attacking the potato diminish the yield of this crop over $36,000,000 each year. The above account shows that an annual loss amounting to over $55,000,000 is sustained, due to the injury caused by fungi to cereals and potatoes alone.

The Farm-Wife.

Where ends the road across the hill?
I do not know—I do not know;
But all day long and all the night
I long to go—I long to go!

It runs so straight beneath the sun,
So white beneath the moon;
It calls me from my work and dreams,
And I must answer—soon.

I bolt my door. I do my tasks,
I kiss my goodman's cheek—
Yet I cannot hear my baby's laugh
For what the road would speak.

Where ends the road? I only know
Here, from the pasture-bars,
It is familiar to the sun
And mistress to the stars.
—Reginald W. Kauffman, in Lippincott's.

Owls for Orchards.

The fruit growers of New Zealand, after long racking their brains in vain to find some way of getting rid of the small bird pest, recently thought of trying owls, says the Sydney Mail. A hundred small German owls were ordered from Europe, and a part of the order was delivered last September. The owls were liberated in the fruit-growing districts and immediately proved a wonderful success. They killed waxeyes, finches, green linnets, thrushes, blackbirds and sparrows; also mice, rats and young rabbits. They fed their young on caterpillars, grubs and beetles, and their only fault seemed to be an occasional fondness for a barnyard chicken.

Butter Fat and Butter.

What is the difference, you ask, between butter fat and butter? Or how much butter will a given amount of butter fat make? Well, the difference is usually about 15 or 20 per cent—that is, eighty pounds of butter fat will churn about a hundred pounds of butter. The amount varies according to the way of doing the work, for some butter has more water, salt and curds in it than any other butter. Anyway, there will be more butter than butter fat.

Animal Food for Poultry.

Bones and meat secured from the butcher and cut into fine pieces by means of a bone cutter are perhaps the best substitute for the insects a hen finds when on free range. Horse meat, being free from tuberculosis, is probably slightly preferable to that from the butchers' stalls. Skim milk is a good substitute for meat, but being so bulky the fowls rarely eat enough of it to supply the required nutriment unless it is soured to a clabber and whey drawn off. Dried beef scrap is a product of the packing-houses and if of assured quality makes a fair substitute for fresh meat. It should be fed in hoppers and should constitute about 8 or 10 per cent of the grain ration.

Landing Blocks of Ice.

An easy way to take the blocks of ice from a pond after they are cut is shown in the accompanying sketch, from Popular Mechanics. A plank ten to twelve feet long, with a handle attached to one end and a block of wood nailed to the other, takes the place of ice tongs. One person can take out a heavy block of ice as easily as three men could with ice tongs. In removing ice blocks with this board, the operator will not get wet.

Value of a Good Garden.

A good home garden is a great institution. It means more on many farms than the crop of wheat, corn or oats. It furnishes food for the family throughout the summer, and, if properly handled, a liberal supply for winter. Some gardens are handled so skilfully that there is a surplus of vegetables for sale almost every week. It means much to the farmer and his family and should be planned with the utmost care and given the very best attention.

Increasing Flow of Milk.

It must be remembered that beyond a certain point grain will not increase the flow of milk at all. The cow has a limit; she can use just so much food and pay for it, and no more, and it is the business of the dairyman to find that limit, and he can readily do so by very gradually increasing the ration and keeping close watch of the cow's condition, of the volding and of the milk yield. Every cow should be forced right up to her limit. She represents a sum of money and when idle earns nothing, but has to be fed and is taxible. Most profit comes from keeping cows busy, and at their best all the time that they are in milk.

COW STALL FOR WINTER.

A stall with movable wooden floor and fastening for the same. The advantage of this design will be appreciated in winter when the concrete is too cold for the comfort of cows. Two iron pins set in the concrete floor near the front corners of the stall keep it in place. The floor panel is easily removed for cleaning.

Profitable Hog Has Strength.

The profitable market hog must possess a good, strong constitution, for without this no hog can make a good market hog. The hog that possesses a good, strong and vigorous constitution is invariably extremely good through the heart and chest, and here is where he lives, and he cannot be strong and vigorous if he lacks in this essential of development. He should have a good strong back, be broad and strong through the loins, for it is a mere chance if we ever find a profitable market hog that is weak and poorly developed through the loins.

Correcting Defects of Hoof.

If the horse has defective feet keep them carefully trimmed and shod, if necessary. The soft hoof should be shod and re-shod every six or eight weeks in the winter when the ground is frozen, and at all times of the year where the roads are rocked or gravelled. By keeping the horse with poor feet properly shod it will do good service without loss of time. It is best, however, to breed for good feet.

Wisdom in Buying Feed.

When much food is to be bought the aim should be to grow so much coarse fodder that whatever is bought will be bought in the shape of fertilizer. The wisdom of doing this arises from the less cost of transporting concentrates because of the less bulk which they contain in proportion to their nutriment. The fertilizer may be very profitably used in growing the coarse fodders needed.

Moisture for Brood Eggs.

A hen left to herself will get off her nest very early in the morning, when the air is cool. She has the eggs heated to 103 or 104 degrees. She gets off the nest, and the cool air, coming in contact with the warm eggs, causes the moisture to precipitate, and it moistens them sufficiently without any additional wetting.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Ginger Cake.

One egg, one-half cupful of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-half cupful of sour milk, a level teaspoonful of soda, one-half cupful each of New Orleans and Porto Rico molasses, two cupfuls of sifted flour. Mix the egg, sugar and butter till light, then add the ginger, cinnamon and molasses; dissolve the soda in the sour milk and add that; then add the flour, mixing all well together. Bake in a moderate oven.

Casserole of Beef.

Line a casserole or baking dish with boiled rice about one-half inch thick. Fill this cup with well-seasoned boiled beef or any left-over meat ground. Place a rice covering over all and heat them in the oven. Serve with sauce of one cupful strained tomatoes, eight teaspoonfuls of flour and butter, salt, pepper and sugar to taste, place one onion in mixture, removing when done.

White Cake.

Two-thirds of a cup of butter creamed with two scant cupfuls of sugar, one scant cup of milk worked into the butter and sugar, four cupfuls of flour well sifted with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, the whites of three large eggs or of four small ones, and one-quarter of a teaspoonful of flavoring, added last of all. Bake in a moderate oven.

Oyster Pie.

Drain three pints of the best oysters and add one quart of thick, sweet cream and enough fine cracker crumbs to thicken, add pepper and salt and pour into a deep dish lined with puff paste. Cover with the paste and bake three-fourths of an hour. The paste for both upper and under crust should be quite thick.

Chocolate Sauce.

One pine of sugar, one pint of milk, one egg well beaten, one tablespoonful of butter, two squares of chocolate. Cook these ingredients in a double boiler until of the consistency of cream, then remove from the stove and add a teaspoonful of vanilla. Serve hot.

Cold Meat Loaf.

Two cupfuls chopped fresh or cooked meat, one egg, piece of butter if meat is lean, one cupful of sweet milk, two cupfuls of crackers or bread crumbs, one apple chopped fine, one onion chopped fine, salt, pepper, and sage to taste. Bake one hour.

Sauce for Jam Pudding.

Put into a saucepan, two cupfuls of brown sugar, one cup of water, half stick of cinnamon, one teaspoonful of butter and a pinch of salt. Boil rapidly until the sauce is the consistency of sirup. Just before serving add one tablespoonful of brandy.

Baken Bananas.

Peel firm bananas and split in half lengthwise. Lay in a buttered pudding dish, sprinkle with fine crumbs and bits of butter. Sift on a little salt and bake until tender. Serve in the dish in which they were cooked.

Orange Ice.

Stir two pounds of sugar into half-gallon of boiling water, boil for a few minutes, then set aside to cool and add the juice of six oranges and the juice of four lemons. Freeze and pack away until wanted.

Layer Cake.

Cream a tablespoonful of butter with a cup of powdered sugar, add four beaten eggs and a cup of flour sifted with a teaspoonful of baking powder. Bake in layer tins. The recipe will make two layers.

Hints About the House.

Cranberries cooked with grapes make a good dessert or pie.

Sprinkle granulated sugar on top of jellies to prevent mold.

Boil vinegar in the fish skillet or pan to destroy the fish odor.

To remove the odor of fish from steel knives wash them in hot vinegar, then suds.

Whipped cream tinted with any vegetable matter is tempting on a cup of hot chocolate.

If a lamp wick does not move easily in the holder draw out one or two threads from one side.

In making fruit pies, when they boil over sprinkle some salt in the oven and it will not smell.

A wire brush is excellent for cleaning milk bottles and a little soda in the water sweetens them.

Dry salt and a brush will take dust off from velvet, plush and heavy embroidery that cannot be washed.

Even a dishcloth may prove expensive; if dirty it may cause typhoid; if linty it may clog the plumbing.

In making cheese balls to serve with a lettuce course work brown nuts into the cheese and note the delicious flavor that this imparts.

If your rags curl up at the edges, they can be made to lie flat by dampening the curled edges and pressing with a hot iron.

To keep celery fresh a long time wet a towel in cold water, wrap around stalks, then roll in thick paper, put in a cool place.

Covering the pan when fish is frying is apt to make the flesh soft. A solid firm meat, that is at the same time flaky, is what the good cook likes.

A clean cloth dipped in hot water, then a saucer of bran, will speedily clean white paint without injury to it. The soft bran acts like soap on the dirt.

Nearly all metal teapots will corrode or rust slightly when put away for a time. A woman who travels says she preserves such articles by filling them with flour. It is dry and will not admit the least moisture.

HOPE TO FREE MORSE.

Friends Working to Secure Release of Convicted Napoleon of Finence.

Efforts to secure a pardon for Charles W. Morse, the fallen Napoleon of finance, who has begun to serve a sentence of fifteen years in the federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., for violation of the federal banking laws, have begun. His counsel, Martin W. Littleton, and his wife, who has clung to her husband with great fidelity and who disposed of her jewelry and most of her personal effects a few months ago to aid in the fight to secure his freedom, will lead in the movement. Every influence, political and other, will be brought to bear to procure a Presidential pardon, for that is now the sole avenue of escape before the dethroned ice king.

In the great federal penitentiary Morse has been assigned to work as a tailor, and in this occupation he will be obliged to put in eight hours a day. Early to bed and early to rise is the rule of the prison and Sunday, with the few holidays which are interspersed throughout the year, will be the only day of rest. The food, while wholesome, will be of the plainest and will be a remarkable change for a man who has for many years been accustomed to the delicacies of the most luxuriant restaurants in New York.

Convicts in the prison are divided into three classes. As long as Morse remains tractable he will be in Class 1 and will be allowed to draw books from the library, receive visitors and write letters. If he becomes bad, in the prison meaning of the term, he will sink to Class 2 or Class 3, and those in the latter grade are deprived of all privileges.

The rise and fall of Charles W. Morse forms an interesting chapter in the recent history of New York's financial methods. As a young college man in Maine he engaged in the ice business and prospered, and with a good working capital came to New York, where he formed the Ice Trust, with a capitalization of $40,000,000. Then he branched into the banking business and soon owned or controlled twenty different financial institutions, using one bank security for securing control of another. Not content with these triumphs, which netted him many millions, he organized the Consolidated Steamship Company, with a capitalization of $120,000,000. Had not the panic of 1907 occurred, Morse would have been able to swing his great enterprises, but he fell one of the victims of that disastrous financial crash and in a night the title of Ice King, Banking King and Steamship King passed away from him forever. In an endeavor to save himself he misappropriated funds of the National Bank of North America, and it is for this offense he is now a prisoner in the Atlanta penitentiary.

Intelligence of the Fox.

The intelligence of the fox is often shown by the way he refuses to be headed when he has made up his mind as to the safe course to take, says the London Globe. The West Somerset have an excellent fixture at Kilve, but it has one drawback—the sea is not far off, and foxes naturally often make for the cliffs, a secure refuge. A fox can be easily headed at times, but that is nearly always when to be seen would betray him to his enemies the hounds and give them an advantage; but when, if he makes his point, the advantage is on his side, then nothing will turn him.

To return to the West Somerset at Kilve; they found a fox, and the whipper-in, seeing that the fox meant to go to the cliffs if possible, started to head him off. The ground was open, and for half a mile the whipper-in and fox were taking parallel lines, the fox clearly meaning to slip by and find a refuge in the cliffs. The man turned the fox away at last, but in a short time the hounds lost him, and I believe he got back after all.

Again the master ranged up some of the field to prevent another fox going back into a certain covert. In vain whips were rattled against saddle flaps; the fox went right through the watchers and made his point. It is a thing I have often noticed both with stag or fox, that the quarry seems to distinguish between real and false dangers.

High Cost of Beauty.

Though the prescription seems to have disappeared from the pharmacopia of modern "beauty specialists," it was for centuries notorious that to feed on snake meat was the way to win perpetual youth; to cure goiter, again, or any other swelling, all that was necessary was to munch a viper, from the tail up, as it might be a stick of celery; while yet another snake, if eaten, conferred the power of understanding all the tongues of birds.

Our idea of a foolish woman is one who is afraid of a mouse and isn't afraid of a man.

Stops Neuralgia Pains

The shooting, tearing pains of neuralgia are caused by excitement of the nerves: Sciatica is also a nerve pain.

Sloan's Liniment, a soothing external application, stops neuralgia pains at once, quiets the nerves, relieves that feeling of numbness which is often a warning of paralysis, and by its tonic effect on the nervous and muscular tissues, gives permanent as well as immediate relief.

One Application Relieved the Pain.

Mr. J. C. Lee, of 1100 Ninth St., S. E., Washington, D. C., writes:—"I advised a lady who was a great sufferer from neuralgia to try Sloan's Liniment. After one application the pain left her and she has not been troubled with it since."

A NEW TOWN EVERY WEEK.

And a New School Every School Day.

The above caption about represents the growth of Central Canada. The statement was made not long since by a railroad man who claimed to have made the remarkable discovery that such was the case. There is not a district of a fair amount of settlement in any of the three Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, but has its school, and the railways have stations every seven or eight miles apart, around which group the towns, some large and some small, but each important to its own district. Schools are largely maintained by public funds and the expense of tuition is but a nominal sum.

The final returns of the grain production for Central Canada for 1909 are now in, and the figures show that the value of the crops to the farmers of that country is about $195,000,000, as compared with $120,000,000 last year. American farmers or those who have gone from the United States, will participate largely in these splendid returns, and these comprise those who have gone from nearly every state in the Union.

One of the many proofs that might be put forward showing the immense wealth that comes to the farmers of Central Canada is seen in the sum that has been spent during the past two or three months by the farmers who have for the time being ceased worrying over the reaper and the thresher, and are taking to enjoying themselves for two or three months. It is said that 50,000 people of these Western Provinces spent the holiday season visiting their old homes. Most of these passengers paid forty and some forty-five dollars for the round trip. Some went to Great Britain, some to the Continent, others to their old homes in Eastern Canada, and many thousands went to visit their friends in the States. The amount paid alone in transportation would be upwards of two million dollars. Some make the trip every year. It need not be asked, "Can they afford it?" With crops yielding them a profit of $20 to $25 per acre, and some having as much as twelve hundred or more acres, the question is answered. The Canadian government agents at different points in the States, report that they have interviewed a great many of those who are now visiting friends in the different States, and they all express themselves as well satisfied, and promise to take some of their friends back with them. There is still a lot of free homestead land in splendid districts, and other lands can be purchased at a reasonable price from railway and land companies.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for children teething; softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic. 25 cents a bottle.

It is said that 6,784 out of the 300,000 working girls in New York get vacations through churches, social settlements and societies.

WESTERN CANADA
Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, says:
"The stream of emigrants from the United States to Canada will continue." Senator Dolliver recently paid a visit to Western Canada, and says: "There is a land hunger in the hearts of English speaking people; this will account for the removal of so many Iowa farmers to Canada. Our people are pleased with the Government and the excellent administration of law, and they are coming to you in tons of thousands, and they are still coming."

Iowa contributed largely to the 70,000 American farmers who made Canada their home during 1909. Field crop returns alone during year added to the wealth of the country upwards of $170,000,000.00
Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts. 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. Schools and churches in every settlement, climate unexcelled, soil the richest, wood, water and building material plentiful.

Do You Feel This Way?

Do you feel all tired out? Do you sometimes think you just can't work away at your profession or trade any longer? Do you have a poor appetite, and lay awake at nights unable to sleep? Are your nerves all gone, and your stomach too? Has ambition to forge ahead in the world left you? If so, you might as well put a stop to your misery. You can do it if you will. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will make you a different individual. It will set your lazy liver to work. It will set things right in your stomach, and your appetite will come back. It will purify your blood. If there is any tendency in your family toward consumption, it will keep that dread destroyer away. Even after consumption has almost gained a foothold in the form of a lingering cough, bronchitis, or bleeding at the lungs, it will bring about a cure in 98 per cent. of all cases. It is a remedy prepared by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., whose advice is given free to all who wish to write him. His great success has come from his wide experience and varied practice.

Don't be wheedled by a penny-grabbing dealer into taking inferior substitutes for Dr. Pierce's medicines, recommended to be "just as good." Dr. Pierce's medicines are OF KNOWN COMPOSITION. A Surprise

Friday, February 11, being the forty second birthday anniversary of Mrs. Dan Burkhart, the friends, to the number of 36, gathered in the evening to remind her of the event.

The early part of the evening was spent in a social way. Then games were played in which all participated, the old as well as the young, and all had a jolly time.

A lap supper was served to all.

At a late hour the guest left for their homes wishing Mrs. Burkhart many returns of the day.

Mrs. Burkhart was the recipient of a number of nice presents, and postal cards galore.

Eat What

You want of the food you need Kodol will digest it.

You need a sufficient amount of good wholesome food and more than this you need to fully digest it.

Else you can't gain strength, nor can you strengthen your stomach if it is weak.

You must eat in order to live and maintain strength.

You must not diet, because the body requires that you eat a sufficient amount of food regularly.

But this food must be digested, and it must be digested thoroughly.

When the stomach can't do it, you must take something that will help the stomach.

The proper way to do is to eat what you want, and let Kodol digest the food.

Nothing else can do this. When the stomach is weak it needs help; you must help it by giving it rest, and Kodol will do that.

Our Guarantee

Go to your druggist today, and purchase a dollar bottle, and if you can honestly say, that you did not receive any benefits from it, after using the entire bottle, the druggist will refund your money to you without question or delay.

We will pay the druggist the price of the bottle purchased by you.

This offer applies to the large bottle only and to but one in a family.

We could not afford to make such an offer, unless we positively knew what Kodol will do for you.

It would bankrupt us.

The dollar bottle contains 2½ times as much as the fifty cent bottle.

Kodol is made at the laboratories of E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago.

A Surprise

On Saturday evening February 19 1910 about forty neighbors and friends gathered at the home of Frank Praul to remind Mrs. Praul of her thirty-seventh birthday. To say she was surprised, puts it mildly, as the crowd rushed in she resisted, but soon peacefully submitted welcoming them as best she could.

The evening was spent socially and with music.

At twelve o'clock the baskets were unpacked and a lap-supper was served At a late hour the guests began to depart wishing Mrs. Praul many happy returns of the day. Mrs. Praul was the recipient of many tokens of love and friendship.

TEACHERS' MEET APRIL 7, 8 AND 9

A Strong Program Outlined and Good Attendance is Desired

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of the Northern Indiana Teachers' Association will be held at Fort Wayne, April 7, 8 and 9, 1910, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The general meetings will be on Thursday evening, Friday afternoon and evening, and Saturday forenoon. The high school, grade, art and manual training, penmanship supervisors, primary and kindergarten, music, ward principals and reading sections will hold their meetings on Friday afternoon. The principal speakers are as follows:

Dr. George E. Vincent, of Chicago University.

Dr. Wm. H. Allen, of the New York Bureau of Municipal Research.

Dr. Luther Halsey Gulick, of New York.

Dr. Wm. E. Chancellor, formerly superintendent of schools, Washington City.

Dr. Wm. R. George, founder of the George Junior Republic.

Lieut. E. H. Shackleton, of the British Navy, who has gone nearest to the South Pole.

President W. A. Millis, Hanover College.

Miss Eleanor Smith, of Chicago.

Prof Geo. H. Tapy, of Wabash College.

Dr. C. H. Bennett, of Bradley Polytechnic Institute.

This will be one of the strongest programs in years. There is every indication that there will be a large attendance.

Methodist Church Notes

Text for next Sunday morning, Galatians 2-20: "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me." The choir will sing special music at the evening service and the minister will give a brief talk on "Our Best Hymns"

Adults and children not in any other Sunday school are eagerly requested to come to our school.

The Epworth League meeting at 5:30 is of special interest and profit to young people. The public invited to all these meetings.

WHERE WILL THE COURT HOUSE BE

Waterloo Offering Grounds and Money to Hold Election---Committee Appointed

That the matter of erecting the new court house at Auburn at an exorbitant cost to the taxpayers of the county without consulting the wishes of the people, is very evident, and whether there are any ground for the charge of graft or not the fact remains that the people were not awakened any too soon.

The question first to be considered is whether we as a county can afford a building at the cost of $300,000. And the next is where do the majority of the taxpayers want the building? The HERALD has been advocating a change of the county seat, or at least an expression of the voters. Waterloo has finally awakened to the situation and pulled the cork under. We feel now that the matter will receive due consideration and that the people will get a chance to vote on the removal of the court house. It need not cost the county a cent for the election, as Waterloo will put up the expense for such election. The Waterloo Press has the following to say on the subject:

A mass meeting was held in the old engine house Tuesday afternoon which was well attended by representative citizens for the purpose of discussing the new court house project. There seems to be a growing sentiment over the county against the erection of a court house at Auburn. This is due to the fact that Waterloo is more centrally located, and more easily reached, as well as the topographical condition being more favorable to a building such as has been proposed. It is for these reasons that the matter was discussed and not that any antipathy is held against our neighboring city, to the south.

There is no better place in the county to construct buildings than in Waterloo. Foundations can be had without such great expense, and Waterloo has plenty of ground on which to locate such a court house. All this ground necessary for a court house, jail, and power house, with plenty of space for parking, will be furnished free of cost to the county. In addition to this, money will be raised for the necessary costs of holding a special election, and a very substantial bonus besides will be offered for the new structure.

This was the sentiment expressed at the meeting Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Robert Patterson, president of the Commercial League, presiding at the meeting, with Karl Gerner as secretary.

Enthusiastic speeches were made by various ones present, and a committee on solicitations was appointed, consisting of H. D. Boozer, H. K. Leas, E. A. Zerkle, W. F. Bowman and Frank Fisk. The president also appointed W. H. Leas and Karl Gerner as a committee to look up the legal side of the question.

Several men present volunteered a subscription of one thousand dollars each in event that the county seat be changed to Waterloo. The meeting adjourned until this evening and it is expected that a report from the committee will be made.

Now boost! Butler is boosting, Garrett is boosting, and Corunna, Spencerville, St. Joe and other parts of the county will boost for Waterloo.

The tile was returned last Friday from Bucyrus, showing the test of the quality of our clay for making of brick and tile, and Mr. Groscup, the party who is thinking of engaging in the brick and tile business here, pronounces it to be of first class quality, and is willing and ready to organize a company for the purpose of establishing a brick and tile yard on the grounds known as Hoopengarner eight and half acres, located south of the target. Jeff N. Boyle went to Syracuse, Monday, and secured a forty day option on this tract of land at price which is very reasonable. Mr. Groscup doesn't ask for any bonus, but simply wishes to put in his machinery at a nominal price and take his pay for the same in stock, and work for the company at reasonable wages during the coming season. He will be in Butler sometime this week to complete arrangements and to organize a company. And it is up to the people of Butler as to whether or not that they want an institution of this kind.

Mrs. Thomas W. Preston

Orpha H. Keasey was born in Clay township, Nov. 12, 1856, the daughter of Edward and Lucinda Keasey, pioneers in LaGrange county.

She was married Dec. 24, 1876, to Thomas W. Preston. From her birth until her marriage she made her home with her parents in Clay township. From her marriage until about four years ago she and her husband made their home on a farm in Bloomfield township, north of LaGrange. Mr. and Mrs. Preston came to LaGrange in the spring of 1906, and continued their residence in this town until last December. They then moved to Butler, Ind., where Mrs. Preston died suddenly on Wednesday, Feb. 16. Mr. and Mrs. Preston were the parents of four children. Of these Robert Earl, Carrie Ethel and Harry Edward Preston are living. Glenn Ellis Preston, the fourth child, died at three years of age. Among the surviving relatives are Mr. and Mrs. Keasey, the parents, two sisters, Mrs. Lillie Yergin and Mrs. Carrie Elliott, of Goshen, and one brother, Charles Keasey, of Sturgis. Two sisters, Mrs. Nellie Newman and Mrs. Belle Sitter, are dead, as are also a sister, Nora, and a brother, Seymour, both of whom died in infancy.

This, in brief, is a story of a life so far as days, months and years are concerned. There is another story, however, that tells us of a larger life here on earth, wherein were assumed duties and responsibilities and burdens which were accepted in love and discharged in mercy and grace. Mrs. Preston joined the Protestant Methodist church, with which her father has been connected for half a century as a local preacher, in her fourteenth year. She continued as a member of that denomination in Clay township until her marriage. Then, with her husband, she joined the Methodist Episcopal church at LaGrange, which relation she sustained until her death. While living on the farm north of LaGrange, Mr. and Mrs. Preston assisted in organizing a Sunday school at the Maple Grove school house. Mrs. Preston was the superintendent of this Sunday school for four years. From the time she joined the church of her parents in Clay township, until the first manifestations of her last illness compelled her to conserve her strength, Mrs. Preston was always active in religious work, more especially through the years of her residence on the farm north of LaGrange.

She had suffered more or less for four years, and about two years ago her illness became so acute and its results so weakening that she was compelled to remain at her home. She never complained, however, but sweetly and graciously accepted her affliction She seemed to understand that the end was inevitable and could not long be delayed, and she looked forward to her death without a fear and without a murmur. She was strong in her faith and hope and the lengthening shadows of her closing days on earth were to her but the message of the dawn of a better tomorrow. Mrs. Preston will be longest remembered, outside of her family, as a thoughtful, helpful neighbor and friend. She was loving and loved, and in sickness and sorrow, in health and strength, she sought to make the burden lighter, to be comforting and sympathetic to all with whom she came in touch. In her own family she was tender and true, and to her husband and her children her death carries with it the message of a loss that only the healing of the years can soften.

This is the story briefly told of the larger life, the life that is not to be measured in days, or months, or years, but the shores of which reach and touch the infinite days the spirit of a gracious woman is with the Common Father of us all.

For though from out our bourne of time and place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face,
When I have crossed the bar.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to express our thanks to the Pythian Sisters, Knights of Pythias, neighbors and friends who so kindly and ably assisted us during the death of our wife and mother, also for the beautiful floral offering from these orders.

T. W. PRESTON AND FAMILY.

Andrew Fisher, a farmer living south east of Butler, fell from a load of hay last Thursday, and in falling struck the side of his head on the wagon which nearly severed one of his ears. Only a small part of the ear was left hanging when the doctor arrived. It was put back in place and bandaged up and it is thought the injured member will heal up without causing any serious trouble. Besides bruising the side of his face quite badly one leg was nearly broken and is causing him considerable trouble.

WANTS HER LETTER PUBLISHED

For Benefit of Women who Suffer from Female Ills

Minneapolis, Minn.—"I was a great sufferer from female troubles which caused a weakness and broken down condition of the system. I read so much of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other suffering women I felt sure it would help me, and I must say it did help me wonderfully. My pains all left me, I grew stronger, and within three months I was a perfectly well woman.

"I want this letter made public to show the benefit women may derive from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JOHN G. MOLDAN, 2115 Second St., North, Minneapolis, Minn.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials like the above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made exclusively from roots and herbs.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

If you want special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. She will treat your letter as strictly confidential. For 20 years she has been helping sick women in this way, free of charge. Don't hesitate—write at once.

Bothwell and Queen Mary.

Dunrobin castle, in Scotland, was the scene of a discovery a few years ago of a document relating to Mary Queen of Scots, which, had it seen the light when poor Mary Stuart was about to commit the crowning act of folly in marrying Bothwell, would have changed the whole aftercourse of her life. The document was the original dispensation granted by the Vatican to Lady Jane Gorden to enable her to marry her cousin, the earl of Bothwell. When the latter wanted to espouse his sovereign he declared his union with Lady Jane Gordon null and void on the ground of their relationship and obtained a divorce. The assumption is that Lady Bothwell was only too glad to get rid of the aristocratic blackguard she called husband, for she must have had the dispensation, the production of which would have made her marriage valid and prevented Mary's taking place. That she had it is proved by its being found in the chester room at Dunrobin, where it had lain for three centuries, and whither she doubtless brought it on her second marriage in 1573 to Alexander, earl of Sutherland, ancestor of the dukes of Sutherland.

HARD TO DROP,

But Many Drop It.

A young Calif. wife talks about coffee:

"It was hard to drop Mocha and Java and give Postum a trial, but my nerves were so shattered that I was a nervous wreck and of course that means all kinds of ails.

"At first I thought bicycle riding caused it and I gave it up, but my condition remained unchanged. I did not want to acknowledge coffee caused the trouble, for I was very fond of it. At that time a friend came to live with us, and I noticed that after he had been with us a week he would not drink his coffee any more. I asked him the reason. He replied, 'I have not had a headache since I left off drinking coffee, some months ago, till last week, when I began again, here at your table. I don't see how anyone can like coffee, anyway, after drinking Postum!'

"I said nothing, but at once ordered a package of Postum. That was five months ago, and we have drank no coffee since, except on two occasions when we had company, and the result each time was that my husband could not sleep, but lay awake and tossed and talked half the night. We were convinced that coffee caused his suffering, so he returned to Postum, convinced that coffee was an enemy, instead of a friend, and he is troubled no more by insomnia.

"I, myself, have gained 8 pounds in weight, and my nerves have ceased to quiver. It seems so easy now to quit coffee that caused our aches and ails and take up Postum."

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

PRISON WHERE JOHN R. WALSH, CHICAGO FINANCIER IS A CONVICT.

John R. Walsh, 72 years old, bank president, railroad magnate, politician and publisher, whose name was once a synonym of all that is powerful and influential in the business world, is in the Federal prison at Fort Leavenworth, where he exchanged his name for a numeral and took his place among the thousand convicts there. This man, who for more than four years fought a losing battle for his freedom, lost in the final legal skirmish when the United States Circuit Court of Appeals denied his application for a new trial, after the Supreme Court of the United States refused to consider his case. Four years ago Walsh's handling of the deposits in the bank of which he was president attracted the attention of financiers, and as a result his bank was closed and his property was taken as security to save a panic when the bank's doors were shut. He was eventually convicted of misappropriating the funds of the bank and sentenced to five years in prison. Of his vast fortune of $20,000,000 he was able to save only $700,000. Walsh started life in Chicago as a newsboy.

From newsboy to millionaire and now a convict in the government prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., is, in brief, the history of John R. Walsh of Chicago. Walsh was born in Ireland in 1837 and at the age of 13 found his way to Chicago, naturally without a dollar, and sold papers for a living. When the civil war broke out he started in competition with the American News Company of New York. In 1866 the Western News Company was founded as a result of negotiations between the American News Company and Mr. Walsh, the latter assuming the duties of manager. This was the foundation of Mr. Walsh's success.

In 1881 he founded the Chicago National Bank. The institution grew rapidly and gained the reputation of a political bank as a result of the large deposits of public funds obtained through Mr. Walsh's influence among politicians of both parties. Subsequently he established the Home Savings Bank and the Equitable Trust Company, and was accounted one of the successful men of Chicago.

At one time he owned a controlling interest in the old Chicago Herald and later established the Chicago Chronicle, as a Democratic paper. The free silver agitation caused him to change it to a Republican organ. Shortly after launching the Chronicle he conceived the idea of a great system of railroads tapping the coal fields of Indiana, Illinois and Missouri and extending also into Michigan and Wisconsin, and it was to finance those schemes that he committed the banking irregularities for which he is now serving a five-year sentence in Fort Leavenworth penitentiary.

BRIDEGROOM IN A CRATE.

Wayne Montgomery, of Hatfield, Ind., who was married recently, was handcuffed, paraded about the streets of Hatfield and then taken to Rockport, where he was tied to the door of the Town Hall. He was finally released by the marshal. The next night he was seized by a number of his friends at Hatfield, placed in a crate and nailed up. The crate was then placed on a traction car going to Rockport, with instructions to the conductor to put the crate off at the freight depot in Rockport, and that they would go the next morning and release the newly-wed from the crate. The conductor refused to be a party to the scheme and released Montgomery.

BLOOD LUST SEIZES PET WOLF.

The call of the wild was too strong for a pet wolf to resist, and he made his escape at the home of Reuben Masters, Owensboro, Ky., dashed into the house and was springing at the throat of a young girl when Mr. Masters hurled himself between his daughter and the enraged animal. The teeth of the wolf closed like a vice on the man's arm. With his free hand he grabbed the wolf by the throat, and the two went to the floor in a struggle. The wolf was finally choked to such an extent that he released his hold on Mr. Masters' arm. A neighbor ran in with a hammer and killed the wolf while Mr. Masters held it. It was sent to him from Idaho a year ago, and had always been perfectly gentle.

LIVING IS HIGHER ALL OVER THE WORLD.

But Americans Are Declared to Pay More of the Increase than Any Other Nation on the Face of the Globe.

Showing quantities of foodstuffs purchasable for a given sum in 1899 and 1907.

Almost everybody in America realizes the increased cost of living. Living is higher all over the world. The increase in this country, however, is greater than abroad, as is shown by an article in the New York Herald, of which what follows is a condensed version:

Investigation showed beyond a doubt that the conditions existing in the United States are duplicated in the principal countries of Europe. Prices for the necessities of life are also increasing abroad. Their ratio of advance is in many cases much less than in the United States, but it is sufficient to indicate "whither we are drifting."

Bread, which is a universal staple, was, according to a report made by Consul Mahin at Nottingham, advanced to the consumer in that locality last March 1 cent on a four-pound loaf, with the minimum price per loaf 11 cents for the poorest grade and 13 cents for the best. Prices have been advanced in that district in a similar ratio.

In the city of Washington, an agreement between bakers has been reached, under which they have decided upon the necessity of increasing the price of bread by reducing the weight of the loaf as a better expedient. On Oct. 1 milk, which had been sold up to that time at 8 cents per quart, was increased to 9 cents. Particularly does this affect the purchaser of a small quantity, since the increase upon a pint was from 4 to 5 cents.

From all parts of Germany smart advances in prices in the necessities of life, especially in foodstuffs, are reported by consuls.

In Japan, while there are no statistics of living expenses, there has been an increase in the cost of living, which has kept pace with the increase of wages.

In a recent French publication the increase recorded in foodstuffs and other necessaries was: Bread, 15 per cent; beef, 22 per cent; veal, 14 per cent; mutton, 25 per cent; pork, 27 per cent; pastry, 25 per cent; petroleum, 10 per cent; butter, 14 per cent; cheese, 25 per cent; fresh fish, 50 per cent; fresh vegetables, 15 per cent; coal, 34 per cent; firewood, 24 per cent; candles, 10 per cent, and household utensils, 25 per cent.

Same Story from Austria.

In Austria the government has found the situation so serious that it has taken steps to check the advance of prices for provisions.

With the exception of mutton and pork, the prices of all meats were higher in Great Britain in 1908 than in the previous year. Almost all fruits, except apples and pears, were dearer in 1908 than in 1907. Onions and peas were the only two vegetables which sold at a lower price.

Something has seemed to check the efforts of the United States government to reach and exempt the increase in prices of foodstuffs and necessaries since 1907. Nothing has been done by it since that year in the way of arriving at a complete showing of this enormous rise in things which every family must have.

This was the period last covered by the Bureau of Labor, which issued about that time the result of a very complete investigation as to the situation in which the man of small salary was placed. The year 1908 has been covered in an investigation of wholesale prices, but it did not reach the retailer, who gets the purchaser's price.

From the last figures collected by the government which are available, thirteen of fourteen articles which are farm products were found to have increased, white hops, which are not an absolute necessity to the average home, and are more likely to be purchased in liquid form than the dry package, decreased.

Very Few Decreases.

In the division of food products, which include bread, vegetables, sugar, meats, butter, flour, fish and rice, of forty-eight articles about which the statistics were grouped, only seven were found to have had their wholesale price decreased. Practically the same ratio was apparent in clothing, where of forty-four articles only five decreased, and the others were higher in price.

Coal, coke and petroleum went up, while of articles of fuel and lighting only candles and matches were lowered. The story is the same of house furnishings, drugs, building materials and implements. Everywhere the tendency was upward.

England has kept a closer watch upon the growth of the increase than the United States, and has a report upon the cost of living which comes down into 1908. Taking London as an example of high prices, it is found that the general level for commodities for 1907 was 1 per cent higher than two years before.

In reaching this conclusion the investigators took twenty-one articles of food, but excluded coal, an important factor. The retail price of this fuel in London in 1907 was 13 per cent higher than it was in 1905.

In France, Also.

There is a system in France which enables that government to keep in very close touch with the cost of living, and its people speak out when the cost rises too rapidly to enable them to keep pace with it.

Investigations of the two years ended with 1907 show that the trend of prices there has also been upward. Pork showed an increase of 7 per cent at Amiens, but in six other towns the increase was from 16 per cent to 23 per cent. While mutton remained almost stationary in some quarters, probably nearer the source of supply, it jumped in others from 2 per cent to 10 per cent. Beef showed the same peculiarity, and its increase in some cities was from 7 per cent to 9 per cent.

It is estimated that the average expenditure of a French working class family on other foods than meat, owing to the changes, was increased 4½ per cent, and if meat were included the advance would be 5 per cent.

Prices Still Going Up.

While the investigations of wholesale prices made by the United States in 1908, just before it stopped this record, showed a slight decline in prices of some ordinary articles which are looked upon as necessities, food still showed an increase. This increase has not only been maintained, but has increased by leaps and bounds.

Food as a whole increased 2.4 per cent in the average price of 1908, as compared with 1907. In making this table the government statisticians found that twenty-eight articles had increased in price, among which were beans, beef, flour, meal, sugar, rice, eggs and fresh vegetables.

The investigation of 1908 showed a remarkable tendency in the fluctuation of prices. Prices reached their highest in January. Then there came a slight decline, to be followed by another rise in July. August seemed to bring rather lower prices. That month and June showed the lowest of the year. Prices advanced in September and October, remained practically stationary in November, and advanced in the last month of the year.

"OLDEST" INDIANA ELK HAS HIS TITLE DISPUTED.

Elks of Indiana are engaged in a spirited but friendly dispute as to who is the oldest Elk in the state. The honor is claimed by many for A. L. Brown, 80 years old, of Valparaiso. Mr. Brown, known to every man, woman and child in Valparaiso and affectionately called "Uncle Al" by the children, had a clear field a day or two ago, when a rival at Elkhart was heard from. The latter says that he is not only an Elk, but six years the senior of "Uncle Al." Mr. Brown is a retired farmer. His wife is dead and he lives with a son. The enthusiastic Elks of Valparaiso induced "Uncle Al" to join their local lodge. After making thorough inquiries they let it become known that the oldest Elk in the state, if not in the country, belonged to their lodge. Later the challenge came from Elkhart to make good the claim. "Uncle Al" is the mascot of the Valparaiso baseball team. He has not missed a local game in years of the sixty that he has lived in Valparaiso.

WOMAN'S DEATH IS MYSTERY.

The murder near Cincinnati of Miss Anna Lloyd on New Year's eve remains a mystery, despite most vigorous work by the coroner and the police. The tragedy closely resembles the famous case of Mrs. Bessie Hollister, of Chicago, who was attacked and strangled a few years ago. Miss Lloyd, who was a stenographer, was attacked in a lonely spot in North Fairmount, a suburb of the city, and choked to death.

ROLLING PIN STILL REIGNS.

Lady Anne Lindsay, the author of the old poem, "Auld Robin Gray," was not only a delightful conversationalist, but she was a great story teller.

This gift made her not only a welcome guest abroad, but a valuable member of the home circle, for it is related in "A Group of Scottish Women" that at a dinner party which she was giving to some friends an old man servant caused some amusement by saying in a perfectly audible undertone:

"My lady, you must tell another story. The second course won't be ready for five minutes."

DOCTOR'S BEST FORMULA

For Remarkably Quick Action on Colds and Coughs.

This prescription will frequently cure the worst cold in a day's time, and it is a sure cure for any cough that can be cured. "Two ounces Glycerine; half ounce Concentrated Pine; put these into half a pint of good whiskey and use in doses of teaspoonful to a tablespoonful every four hours. Shake bottle well each time." Any druggist has these ingredients in stock or will quickly get them from his wholesale house. The Concentrated Pine is a special pine product and comes only in half ounce vials, each enclosed in an air-tight case; but be sure it is labeled "Concentrated." This formula cured hundreds here last winter.

Scratched So She Could Not Sleep.

"I write to tell you how thankful I am for the wonderful Cuticura Remedies. My little niece had eczema for five years and when her mother died I took care of the child. It was all over her face and body, also on her head. She scratched so that she could not sleep nights. I used Cuticura Soap to wash her with and then applied Cuticura Ointment. I did not use quite half the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, together with Cuticura Resolvent, when you could see a change and they cured her nicely. Now she is eleven years old and has never been bothered with eczema since. My friends think it is just great the way the baby was cured by Cuticura. I send you a picture taken when she was about eighteen months old.

"She was taken with the eczema when two years old. She was covered with big sores and her mother had all the best doctors and tried all kinds of salves and medicines without effect until we used Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. H. Kiernan, 663 Quincy St., Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1909."

The Center of the Earth.

In the Zuni cosmogony, the earth is conceived of as flat, and shaped like a pancake. Being a chosen people of the gods they were commanded early in their tribunal career to go to the exact center of the world, and there build their homes; and one of the most interesting legends of the people relates the story of their wanderings in search of the middle place, and tells how they knew it when they reached it. It is about 200 yards south of their village in western New Mexico, 35 miles south of Gallup on the Santa Fe route. It is marked by a crude shrine, built like a bake oven, out of flat stones. Two large removable flagstones close the entrance, which faces the rising sun.

On the top are a number of concretionary formations, known to the Indians as thunder stones. In the interior are large numbers of feather tufted prayer sticks, and several earthenware vessels filled with sacred meal. Numerous ceremonial dances, in the nature of rain-making rites, are performed around this holy place.

A Generous Gift.

Professor Munyon has just issued a most beautiful, useful and complete almanac. It contains not only all the scientific information concerning the moon's phases, in all the latitudes, but has illustrated articles on how to read character by phrenology, palmistry and birth month. It also tells all about card reading, birth stones and their meaning, and gives the interpretation of dreams. It teaches beauty culture, manicuring, gives weights and measures and antidotes for poison. In fact, it is a Magazine Almanac, that not only gives valuable information, but will afford much amusement for every member of the family, especially for parties and evening entertainments. Farmers and people in the rural districts will find this Almanac almost invaluable.

It will be sent to anyone absolutely free on application to the Munyon Remedy Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

A Soldier's Beginnings.

We were visiting at Sandringham. Sir Evelyn Wood, who is very deaf, crept up as near as he could to the musicians, and in one of the pauses he said to me, "Are you fond of music?" I answered, "Yes." "Do you play anything?" I said, "No." "Well," he went on, "I am so fond of it that, would you believe it, I began to practice scales at twenty-four. But one day my sister came up and put her hand on my shoulder and said, 'My dear boy, you had better give that up,' and so I did." He also told me that he began life as a sailor, then went to the bar and finally entered the army. The only profession he had not tried was the church, and his enemies say he would have tried that, only he did not know what church to choose.—"Life of Sir William Broadbent."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. FARM NOTES

Profit in Crop Rotation.

Farmers in lower Delaware are greatly interested in an experiment just concluded by Capt. William E. Lank, who has thoroughly proven the advantage of the rotation of crops on a four-acre field. Last spring he manured the four acres, which had been in corn the previous year. The manure was plowed under, the ground well harrowed and peas drilled in. The crop grew well, and in June the peas were sold at a net profit of $92.

As soon as the peas were removed, plows again turned the soil over and it was planted with corn. From this a fine crop of fodder was saved, yielding a net profit of $65. The ground now has a fine set of scarlet clover on it, the seed having been sown at the last harrowing of the corn, with every indication of $40 worth of clover hay in the spring and a constant improvement to the land.

First Imported Horses.

It is said that the first horses imported into New England were brought over in 1629, or nine years after the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. One stallion and seven mares survived the voyage. From this it will be seen that the first nine years of our history was a horseless "age" in New England. The colonists in Virginia differed from the sober-minded Puritans of New England in being fond of sport, loving fast horses and trying their speed on the race track. The horses imported were English hunters and racers. Fearnaught, brought over in 1764, left his mark on a numerous progeny of uncommon beauty, size and speed.

Construction of Colony House.

During the dull season our local lumber dealer and his assistant built some portable colony poultry-houses as follows, writes an Indiana correspondent of Orange Judd Farmer: The frame is securely bolted to the sills, which are made sled-runner style. The walls are made from closely-fitted tongue and groove drop-siding. The floors are tight, and the ventilators covered with screen wire to keep out rats, weasels, etc.; the cover is roofing felt. Each house is painted. The size is 6 by 8 feet; 6 feet high in front and 4 at the back. They cost me $15 each for all material and work. Very likely they could be built for less in places where lumber is cheaper.

Keeping Up Spraying Fight.

The fight against insect, scale and fungus diseases in our orchards must not be dropped with the harvesting of the fruit crops. It cannot be hoped that you have, by your spraying operations during the summer season, killed all the scale insects and fungi, and doubtless during the press of work on the farm during the midsummer season the matter will have been neglected, or very little done, since the fruit was formed, and it can be depended upon that there will now be on your orchard trees a fine collection of all sorts ready to hibernate and come forth in the spring stronger than ever.

Good Roads of Sawdust.

Making good roads with sawdust is being practiced in a number of localities in the South. Two ridges of earth are thrown up (a road machine being required to do the work) at a certain width from each other, the space between being filled with a six-inch bed of sawdust. Dirt is then mixed with the sawdust, and it is claimed that heavily loaded vehicles in passing over this kind of a road make no impression upon it. It is estimated that the cost of building is about $250 per mile.

Feeding Calves by Hand.

It is always best to feed the calves by hand, because one knows just what they are getting and how much. It is really not such a terrible task to feed a dozen calves, but is quite a nuisance to go through the motion just for one or two. Perhaps a great many dairymen who object to raising calves or their own herds would change their minds if they should practice it in a wholesale way.

Light in Cow Stables.

The light in a cow stable should come from the rear of the cows, so the milkers can see to clean the cows properly for milking. This arrangement is accomplished in modern stables by building them thirty-four to thirty-six feet wide and having two rows of cows facing toward a feeding alley in the center.

Whitewashing the Houses.

Nothing is better for poultry buildings from a sanitary point of view than a good coat of whitewash. Especially is this true when getting the poultry houses ready for the winter. All may not be aware there is quite a science in whitewashing. There are different kinds, and each is adapted for a different use.

Inoculation of Alfalfa.

The results from more than 100 cooperative experiments in growing alfalfa, located in over one-half of the counties of New York State, indicate that where neither the lime nor inoculation is applied the chance of a successful crop is not more than 20 per cent, or one chance in five.

Animal and Bird Farm Aids.

According to the Department of Agriculture of France a toad is worth $9; a lizard, $9; a swallow, $20; a titmouse, $8; the robin, $4; a mat, $30; an owl, $12; a screech owl, $16; a fern owl, $30. That looks bad when some of us come to think it over and call to mind how many of our friends we have killed.

Feeding Substitute for Corn.

In these days of high priced corn there is a lesson in the experience of Boyden Pearce of Hancock County, Me., who says: "I have been forced to depend upon my farm for my pork and have learned that plenty of rutabaga turnips, clover and one bag of corn will put a hog through the winter; then to pasture till fall. It makes good pork and at a low price. There is money in it and no need to depend upon the West for pork."

World's Wheat Crop, 1909.

Broomhall's final estimate of the 1909 wheat crop of the world places the total wheat production of the wheat acreage of the world at 3,347,000,000 bushels, an increase of 285,000,000 bushels over the production in 1908, a 427,000,000 bushel increase over the crop of 1907. The production in Europe aggregated 1,872,000,000 bushels, being 160,000,000 bushels over the 1908 crop. The crops of North and South America reaches 1,040,000,000 bushels, or 80,000,000 bushels over last year. It is likely that this great production will not be more than enough to supply the demands of the world's population.

How West Has Developed.

Five years ago it was freely predicted that land values in the West had reached their height, but they are 20 to 40 per cent higher now than then. The families of the first comers are grown. The second generation has come to the fore and is taking part in the business of the communities. They have grown up with the country and know what it can produce and just how valuable it is for the purpose of production and for a home.—C. M. Harger in the Atlantic Magazine.

Salt for Milking Cows.

Your cows will get enough salt by simply putting a lump of rock salt in the manger. A cow giving a good flow of milk, well fed, ought to have two ounces of salt a day, an ounce in the morning and an ounce at night. Some advise giving this to them on their ensilage, when you feed ensilage and grain. You can take a small piece of salt in your fingers and weigh it, and will soon be able to judge the amount in an ounce.

Cleanliness in Dairy Counts.

Cleanliness in all lines of dairying counts for quality of products. After milk vessels have been washed with soap and hot water they must be finally rinsed with scalding water. When scalding water is used no drying with rags will be necessary, as the heat from the water will dry the vessels without aid. Sunning after cleaning is to be commended.

Providing Salt for Pigeons.

On one of the largest squab plants in this country salt is furnished the breeders by dipping the small sacks in water and then allowed to dry until they become hard and firm. These are then placed in the lofts and the pigeons pick out the salt through the sacks. Never give common granulated salt loose.

Working for Top of Ladder.

Do not hesitate to work on the top rounds of a ladder in the poultry business. The higher you get the less crowded it is, and therefore the better the business pays, says a writer in an exchange. You may feel a little lonesome at times, but it is the kind of loneliness that is right easy to bear.

The Power in Gasoline.

The power of gasoline is really marvelous. The man who has used gasoline power for years does not marvel at it as does the recent purchaser. A gallon of this liquid will easily carry five passengers ten or fifteen miles, or it will grind feed cheaper than the man with horses that need the exercise can do it. Great is gasoline.

Cleanliness in Dairy.

No matter what time of the year it is, too much cannot be said in favor of cleanliness in the dairy. Many persons think that in summer time, when the cows do not sleep in the filthy lot, it is not necessary to wash the udder before each milking. This is a mistaken idea.

Treatment for Cowpox.

A good way to cure cows troubled with cowpox is to separate the affected cows from the herd and milk them last. Wash the hands in a solution of half an ounce of hyposulphite of soda to one quart of water before and after each cow is milked.

Extra Feed for Cows.

As pasture grass becomes short and killed by frosts begin to give the cows extra feed, as they will hold up to milk. Taking the cows into winter in good condition, other things being equal, will mean a steady, high milk flow through the winter.

Care of Dairy Buildings.

Take care that the buildings in which milking is carried on are well aired and free from avoidable dust. Fresh air and sunlight should be constantly admitted, and litter or feed should not be handled during the milking hour.

A Blemish Is Costly.

Soundness is an essential feature in the makeup of a driving or riding horse when placed upon the market. A small blemish will not only lower the value of the horse, but will often prevent the sale entirely.

Accidents Due to Harness.

Never work a young or spirited team with a poor harness. Many an accident that ended in serious damage and the ruin of a good horse has been caused by harness which gave way at a critical moment.

Public Troughs Dangerous.

Be careful about letting your horses drink from public watering troughs when there are any contagious diseases in the country. The trough is a fine distributing center for infection.

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

White Soft Soap.

One can perfumed lye, five pounds of drippings or grease, one-half pound borax, eight gallons cold water; melt grease or drippings and strain; when cool enough to bear the hand in it, then add the lye and stir with a stick until all is dissolved; add borax and stir. When all is well blended add eight gallons of cold water (hard or soft) and stir about five or ten minutes. In three or four days it will be firm like jelly, making an excellent soap for boiling clothes, making them white and sweet; also good for washing dishes and scrubbing.

To Boil Vegetables.

When boiling vegetables be sure the water is at boiling point before putting in the vegetables to be cooked. If it is cold or lukewarm the freshness and flavor will cook out into the water. Place the saucepan over the hottest part of the stove, so that it will boil as quickly as possible, and be careful that the boiling does not cease until the contents are thoroughly cooked and ready to be dished.

Kentucky Gingerbread.

Cream together one cupful of butter and one and a half cupfuls of New Orleans sugar. Add four eggs beaten light, one and one-half cupfuls of New Orleans molasses, one cupful of buttermilk to which one teaspoonful of soda has been added, four cupfuls of flour, and two level tablespoonfuls of ground ginger. Bake in a shallow pan, in a moderately hot oven.

Chocolate Almonds.

Shell the almonds and pour boiling water over them. Allow them to stand for a few minutes, then slip off the skins, and lay on a platter to dry. This process is called "blanching." When the almonds are dry dip them in melted sweet chocolate into which a teaspoonful of butter has been stirred and lay on waxed paper until dry.

Jam Pudding.

Three eggs, one cupful of sugar, half cupful of butter, two cupfuls of flour, one cupful of jam, three tablespoonfuls of buttermilk in which a teaspoonful of soda is dissolved, two teaspoonfuls of powdered cinnamon, one teaspoonful of cloves, ground; half teaspoonful of ground allspice, half teaspoonful of nutmeg. Bake and serve with sauce.

Pineapple Sherbet.

Mix three cups of granulated sugar with three-fourths of a cup of flour and stir these into a half gallon of boiling water. Boil for ten minutes, strain and cool. Add the juice of two lemons and two cans of grated pineapple. Freeze slowly, pack well and allow the sherbet to stand for an hour or longer before serving.

Pineapple and Nut Salad.

Cut the fruit into little balls with a potato cutter, blanch and chop the nuts, dice the celery, serve in white lettuce leaves well chilled, and cover with heavy mayonnaise, to which add a little whipped cream just before serving.

Inexpensive Yellow Cake.

Two eggs, two tablespoonfuls butter, one and one-quarter cups sugar, two cups flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one cup milk, one teaspoonful flavoring extract. If one desires a white cake add three whites of eggs.

Apple Meringue.

Line a pie plate with crust and fill with stewed apples, sweetened and flavored. Bake until the crust is done, then cover with meringue made of whites of egg and powdered sugar. Return to the oven and brown.

Baked Mush.

Instead of frying the mush, roll the slices in egg and then in buttered crumbs and bake in a hot oven until golden brown. This is much more wholesome and is delicious.

Hints About the House.

Don't fill an oil or any other kind of stove or lamp when it is lighted. This seems superfluous advice, but with the coming of cool weather it cannot be too often repeated.

The soiling of walls caused by persons leaning their heads against the wall may be almost entirely removed by laying a sheet of blotting paper on the spot and ironing over it with a hot iron.

When books become badly soiled on the edges, if not gilt edged, close the book tightly, then erase the marks with an ink eraser. This will cut off all the rough edges, all soiled marks and leave the book clean.

Constant washing ruins a brush that has an expensive back. Therefore, a brush for daily use should have an ordinary wooden handle and back with good stiff bristles to withstand the softening action of water and borax.

It is well to have hanging close beside the refrigerator a long, slender rod, on which is fastened a sponge or rag. This can be run down the drain pipe every two or three days, and is of great assistance in keeping it clean.

The famous southern flapjack is nothing more nor less than the northern apple turnover fried instead of baked. It is made with apple sauce, not the uncooked fruit, and is seasoned to suit the family taste. Ordinary pie paste is used.

Five cents' worth of sugar of lead crystals dissolved in a pailful of water makes a solution which fixes the tone of pinks, blues and lavenders. The fabrics should remain in the sugar of lead bath half an hour or so before going to the suds.

Worn brooms or whisks may be dipped into hot water and uneven edges trimmed with shears and then dipped in cold water and all water shaken out. This makes the straws harder, and the trimming makes the broom almost as good as new.

A PRISON HORROR.

Awful Fate of a Russian Political Offender.

David Soskice writes in McClure's Magazine of the horrors of the Schluesselberg, Russia's political prison.

"Grachevsky, unable to stand his life any longer," says he, "struck a guard in order to be executed. But the commandant of the fortress declared him to be insane and therefore exempt from punishment.

"'Then,' said Grachevsky, 'it remains for me but to kill myself.' He was taken to the 'stable' and kept there under most vigilant watch.

"'One night,' related Ludmilla Volkenstein, 'a terrible, inhuman shriek was heard. Footsteps hurried toward Grachevsky's cell. Feeble groans followed, and then his door was quickly opened, and it was evident that something terrible had happened to him. Smoke and the smell of burnt clothing and flesh pervaded the building and hung about it till the following day. We then knew that Grachevsky had burnt himself alive. He had soaked his clothes and bedding with the oil from the little night lamp, and, rolling himself up in his blanket, had set it on fire. For several days beforehand he had disarmed the suspicions of his guards by exceedingly rational behavior, so that they had relaxed their watchfulness a little and enabled him to commit the dreadful deed.'"

A Tame Wild Mouse.

I was waiting at the drumming log of the ruffed grouse for the bird to come and perform before me. My place of concealment was in the branches of a fallen dead spruce. I had not been waiting long before a white footed mouse appeared among the branches on the ground almost under me. It was interesting to see how freely he moved from place to place, appearing now here and now there, all the while traveling under the snow, which had many caverns formed in it by the sun, for it was early spring. Another mouse soon made his appearance, and I watched the two for some time as they searched for food. It was not long before one of the mice was nibbling at my shoe, but the slightest movement of my foot, which was resting on the trunk of the tree, sent him scurrying to the shelter of the branches below. By patient advances, however, I was able to touch the little fellow with the tips of my extended fingers, and five minutes later I was stroking his back as you might stroke a kitten.—St. Nicholas.

The Difference.

"The difference between a slow-going Englishman and a hustling American," said little Binks, "is nowhere more thoroughly exemplified than in the way they go after public office."

"Don't think I ever noticed it," said Dawson.

"Well, it's plain enough," said little Binks. "Over here a man runs for office, while the Englishman contents himself with merely standing for it."—Judge.

Pleasant, Refreshing, Beneficial.

Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna appeals to the cultured and the well-informed and the healthy because its component parts are simple and wholesome and because it acts without disturbing the natural functions, as it is wholly free from every objectionable quality or substance. In its production a pleasant and refreshing syrup of the figs of California is united with the laxative and carminative properties of certain plants known to act most beneficially, on the human system, when its gentle cleansing is desired. To get its beneficial effects, always buy the genuine, for sale by all reputable druggists; one size only, price fifty cents a bottle. The name of the company — California Fig Syrup Co.—is always plainly printed upon the front of every package of the genuine.

California Fig Syrup Co.

LOUISVILLE, KY. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. NEW YORK, N. Y.

EIGHTEEN YEARS AGO HE HAD LESS THAN THREE DOLLARS.

He Is Now One of the Richest Farmers in Saskatchewan, Central Canada.

Arriving in Canada in 1891, just eighteen years ago, E. A. Guillemin, could speak but his native language. He is a Frenchman. He had but a little over $2 in his pocket, thus being short over $7 of the $10 required to secure entry for a homestead of 160 acres. He eventually borrowed the money, and, near Forget, Saskatchewan, he started life in Canada on the homestead in which to-day he is the fortunate possessor of fifty quarter sections of land, or 8,000 acres.

Now Mr. Guillemin did not acquire all these acres as a result altogether of his farming operations, which were extensive. He looked with satisfaction upon what he was doing on his limited area, he was saving, careful and had foresight. Surrounding land could be had for about $3 per acre, and he continued buying as his savings would permit, until now he has fifty quarter sections, some of which he can sell at $25 per acre.

Threshed Fifty Thousand Bushels.

This year he was engaged in threshing on his place for 54½ days. He threshed out 50,000 bushels of wheat, of which he sold 34,000 bushels, one train load, at a price varying from 84 to 87 cents per bushel. He has on hand still 16,000 bushels. In addition to wheat he raised 30,000 bushels of oats, 7,000 bushels of barley and 500 bushels of flax. He owns 104 horses and a number of cattle, but since the construction of the railway he has been engaged chiefly in raising wheat. This year he bought his first threshing machine, paying for it the sum of $2,100. He estimates that the machine earned for him this fall $3,000, thus paying for itself in one season, and leaving him $900 to the good. The weather was very propitious for farm threshing, not a single day being lost in the two months which were spent in this work. The wheat averaged 23 bushels to the acre and graded No. 1 and No. 2 Northern. In the past nine years, seven good crops have been harvested on this farm. For six successive years the returns were excellent, that is in the years 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905 and 1906. In the two following years there was a partial failure. As the years have passed the quality of the buildings on the farm have been steadily improved, and are now as good as can be found in the district. About $10,000 has been invested in this way by Mr. Guillemin. The farm consists of 6,880 acres, of which about 6,000 acres were under crop this season.

WESTERN CANADA

What J. J. Hill, the Great Railroad Magnate, Says About its Wheat-Producing Powers

"The greatest need of this country [United States] is, in another generation or two will be the providing of homes for its people and producing sufficient for them. The days of our prominence as a wheat exporting country are gone. Canada is to be the great wheat country."

The great railroad magnate is taking advantage of the situation by extensive railway building to the best fields of Western Canada.

Upwards of 125 Million Bushels of Wheat were harvested in 1909. Average of the three provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will be upwards of 23 bushels per acre.

Free homesteads of 160 acres, and adjoining pre-emptions of 160 acres (at $3 per acre), are to be had in the choicest districts.

Editorial Notes

The editor of the Milford Mail, who has been a minister of the gospel for a number of years and performed the marriage ceremony many times, has this to say on the subject of marriage:

"No matter how refined a woman is if she marries a course, immoral man she will be likely to have a course, immoral man for her husband. In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred a vulgar horse jockey will remain a vulgar horse jockey still, in spite of the possession of a refined, intelligent wife. With that possession his reverent admiration for her superiority has departed. She is now simply the woman who has joined her lot with his, and must take him and his circumstances for what they are. He will have no patience with fine ladyism, or her distaste for course thoughts and actions. She must come down to his level and stay there. She must bear his children, and cook, wash, iorn and mend in the homely house that is all that he is able to provide for her, just the same as if she had never been his social superior. Should she rebel and leave him her future is blasted, and though she may be strong enough to rise out of her misery, she can never efface the results of her folly. But the probabilities are that she will drag out her dreary days in surroundings utterly repugnant to every fibre of her nature because she will not be allowed to take her children—which are his also—and she cannot leave them behind her. The romance of this kind of clandestine marriage is very soon dispelled, and only hard bitter facts remain."—Exchange.

EELS IN JAPAN.

The Restaurant Cook Catches Alive the Fish the Patron Selects.

Entering a Japanese restaurant, a guest who wishes broiled eels and rice is led to a tank of squirming fresh water eels and bidden to point out the object of his preference, says a writer in the Delineator. The cook, who stands by, selects the wriggling victim of his choice, strikes its head smartly upon a wooden block and, squatting by it, grasps the creature's neck, inserts a knife in the left side of the vertebrae and dexterously runs it down to the tail, then, rapidly applying his instrument to the other side of the backbone, repeats the process, leaving the eel split open.

Then, chopping the flattened eel into three inch lengths, the pieces are plunged into boiling water to make the skin tender, long bamboo splints used as skewers are thrust through them, and they are then placed on rods over glowing charcoal and broiled brown, being plunged from time to time into a vessel that contains old soy of the color and consistency of molasses. These preparations concluded, the steaming eels again are drained and placed in red lacquer boxes with rice and set before the customer.

The Phonograph.

One need not be afraid of operating a machine too constantly, as there is little danger of wearing it out, and the motor will give better service when used frequently than when allowed to stand unused. In all cases avoid winding the spring too tightly. Stop when it offers strong resistance. In many cases it is specifically stated that the needles should not be used more than once, and these directions should be observed. Not to follow them means almost certain damage to the records. The machine should be kept well oiled; otherwise its motion will become sluggish. Sewing machine oil may be used for that purpose. The records should be kept free from dust, as dirt clogs the sound wave grooves and tends to give a scratchy sound to the reproduction. A good record cleaner may be made by gluing a small piece of velvet carpet to a wooden block. Such a cleaner always should be used on dusty records before they are placed on the machine. —Suburban Life.

A Dismal World.

"Why are you sad, my dear? You ought to be supremely happy. Here, I've just inherited a fortune, and everything looks rosy. I can't understand why at such a time as this you should look so dismal. What is it? Have you heard bad news from home?"

"No, no; it isn't that. I'll try to throw it off. I suppose I'm foolish not to be thoroughly happy. Let us not mention the matter again."

"But I insist on knowing what it is that so depresses you. If it's anything that I can help I shall"—

"Well, if you must know, I've just heard that the Snobleighs next door are going to move away, so she'll not be here to feel jealous of me when we begin to put on style after you get your money."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"QUICK MEAL" STEEL RANGES are just heavy enough to be good, durable and lasting. The parts strengthened are the parts where the most wear is. The walls are so well lined with Asbestos that no heat is lost, it being radiated just where needed.

"QUICK MEAL" STEEL RANGES are made almost entirely of steel, consequently cannot crack and are stronger.

Itching Eczema Washed Away

Is it worth 25 cents to you to stop that awful, agonizing itch? Surely you will spend 25 cents on your druggist's recommendation, to cool and heal and soothe that terrible itching eruption?

By arrangement with the D. D. D. Laboratories of Chicago, we are able to make a special offer of a 25 cent bottle of their oil of wintergreen compound, known as D. D. D. Prescription. Call, or write, or telephone to Stone's drug store, Butler, Ind.

We absolutely know that the itch is stopped AT ONCE by D D. D. Prescription, and the cures all seem to be permanent.

THIS IS CERTAIN

The Proof That Butler Readers Cannot Deny

What could furnish stronger evidence of the efficiency of any remedy than the test of time. Thousands of people testify that Doan's Kidney Pills cure permanently.

Grateful endorsements should prove undoubtedly the merits of this remedy. Years ago people right in this locality testified to the relief they had derived from the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. They now confirm their testimonials. They say that time has completed the test.

John Otto, 735 N. Main St., Auburn, Ind., says: "While in the army, I lifted heavily and strained my back and after that I had a great deal of trouble from this source. There were severe pains in my loins and kidneys and when I caught cold, the complaint was aggravated to such an extent that I was unable to stoop or lift. The kidney secretions were also highly colored and passed too frequently. I tried many prescriptions and remedies, but found no relief until I commenced using Doan's Kidney Pills. I have often recommended this excellent preparation."

The above statement was given in April, 1906, and was confirmed by Mr. Otto on February 3, 1909. He said: "I give you permission to continue the publication of my former statement, regarding Doan's Kidney Pills. I have had no occasion to use this remedy during the past three years."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. 8-2

FRANK SWANTUSCH'S TRAVELS

Having crossed the cement bridge we drive about a mile when our tents are pitched and lunch awaits us After lunch we return by coach to a point just below the Rapids where we alight and follow a broad walk to a plank platform which stands just above and overlooks the great upper falls of the Yellowstone. The canyon here is a narrow gorge whose high walls of solid rock are literally covered with a rich moss of greenish yellow. The wild plunging water rushes through the narrow gap and pours down a great pitch of 140 feet Its immense volume strikes the river bed of broad shelves of rock below and rebounds against the walls of its abyss in a tumbling roaring mass The splashing of these turbulent waters against the rocky walls fairly fills the canyon with great clouds of spray and mist in which the colors of the prism are reflected in such great profusion that a thousand tangled rainbows seem to be playing in the dancing mist. We stand and feast our astonished eyes upon this superb scene. It sets your heart beating and your brain throbbing with extreme delight. The thrills of joy we experience here are in such contrast with the tame events of humdrum, every day life that we want to dwell right here forever in this refreshing delight, but more bewilding sights are yet before us upon this canyon tour. A mighty region of countless marvels, world renowned and nowhere equalled, now stretches down the river below us, it is known as the grand canyon of the Yellowstone. This is the dreamest, most awe inspiring scenic marvel upon the globe. Such gigantic walls and falls are here! Such length and breadth is depth of gorge! Such towering slopes and peaks and columns wrapped in colors gorgoous robes! Such tints and changing shades! To gaze into their mysterious depths and dwell upon their wonders is to become deeply awed by one's surroundings Sights that bewilder and enchant the mind, sights beneath and beyond all words to tell. To sum them all up briefly one concludes that unequalled sublimity itself has strewn with lavish hands all over the vast sweep of miles of marvelous grandeur.

The grand canyon is five miles long, over 2,000 feet down the greatest depth and 4,000 feet across its widest place, while its great walls slope at such an angle that at its bottom it is only 200 feet in width. It has a vast area and width and height are dotted with numerous lofty perpendicular ledges and peaks and rock towering hundreds of feet in this vast cavern and resembling the old castle ruins of Medieval times when nobles and lords and kings rose and fell in foolish pride and fickle power. Eagles have built their eyries upon the very summit of these high castle rocks, where both young and old flit and play about their nests, and the old birds soar in sweeping curves, screaming in wild delight down Freedom's vast ravine. The canyon is great in depth that one who is strolling along its bottom even at noon hours when the sun is glowing in the heavens, can readily see the stars shining in domed sky above him. We board our coaches and drive about five miles down to Inspiration Point, getting glimpse of this realm of wonders along the road now and again. Inspiration Point is about 1,500 feet above the bottom of the canyon. It is regarded by some as the most advantageous point for viewing these august surroundings. Here we look out upon scenes dazzling, imposing and majestic A silver dawn breaking a black and starless night, or a radiant bow of calm arching all the clouds of storm, is a surprise that delights the eye; but here in the silent wilds of a grand west only known of recent years is a wondrous gorge five miles long into whose vast depth we are gazing, upon scene after scene that amaze and bewilder the soul. High and wavy walls of rock and earth, jutting crags and rugged points, all tinted and colored by nature's generous hand in gray and white, black and gold, orange and red, crimson, green and blue, yellow, pink and drab, all lying blinded and intermingled in streaks, blocks and figures of various shape and forms, with every tint, shade and blend known to reality and man's imagination All of these gorgeous and matchless coloring seen on every ledge and peak and extending over all the bottom of this great gorge, covering these walls for miles, with the magnificent Yellowstone river more than a quarter of a mile beneath us with its rolling waters of deepest green, all fill this canyon with gleaming glory The mind never tires of these magnificent sights—language has no words to tell them, brush no power to correctly paint them, and waning years can never bury them "beneath the moss of silence forgetfulness." From Inspiration Point we ride back toward camp about a mile, keeping near the edge of canyon to get every glimpse we can, until we arrive at Point Lookout. Here we got another impressive view of nature's massive structure and gorgeous coloring in this night cavern. The eye takes in a portion of the upper falls, the lower falls, the river and most of the objects we saw from Inspiration Point. It is a grand sight, being regarded by some people as somewhat superior to the one from Inspiration Point. Point Lookout is 1,200 feet above the bottom of canyon and is a commanding position, presenting a picture almost as sublime and absorbing as that seen from any other point of the canyon. Now following a narrow trail on foot from Point Lookout winding down the side of the canyon about 400 yards we arrived at the prominent point of jutting rocks known as Red Rock. Here we got the finest possible view of the lower falls, being nearer to them than from any other available point. The scene is a marvelof beauty and grandeur. A short distance above these falls the river is about 250 feet wide, but by the time it reaches its awful precipice it has narrowed down to about 74 feet. The bed of river along here is solid rock, smoothe and almost level.

The pressure of the narrowing stream crowding its vast volume of water through a small space becomes so great that the river is shot through this gap with such astonishing force that it takes a long, curving leap from the crest of the falls before gravity carries it down a stupendous fall 360 feet to its roaring abyss below. Its velocity and descent are so great that the river is converted into a colossal column of foaming spray nearly 100 feet wide which broadens as it falls, filling the basin below with a dashing silvery mass. The Falls of Niagara are broader, those of Yosmite are greater in height, but the sublimity of this framing column surpasses that of any other falls in the world. The thundering roar of these waters as thay leap in through desperate plunge in an unbroken, perpendicular fall of 360 feet, striking and rebounding against the canyon walls can be heard at a great distance down the river and its wild vibrations grow fainter and fainter until they are lost in echoes hushed. As the river flows down through this marvelous gorge it dwindles away in the distance among the glittering scenes of various colors and tints until it appears to be merely a whispering mountain rill, soon lost in the hazy distance. The high rocky walls of the falls, the vast column of white with its foaming basin below, and the grim river flowing away, make a picture that is indeed sublime, and it is not at all difficult to understand why the tourists love to linger here and look with wide open eyes and loiter and gaze again and again upon grandeur unexcelled. Reluctantly we leave these unrapturing scenes and follow the trail back up the hill to our coaches and drive across the cement bridge to camp. Not far from here we are shown Uncle Tom's Trail, which winds down the canyon and over the dizzy precipice 1,500 feet to the river's edge. None but those who insist upon going ever make this trip any more because the descent is fraught with many dangers and difficulties. For some years the government maintained wooden steps on stairway at the most dangerous places, but caution induced them to remove them some time ago. Out of the thirty tourist in our camp there were only two to go, that was a professor from Roanoke, Alabama and myself and three of the roustabout boys. At many places on the journey the tourist hangs on to a rope and is slowly let down a high wall of rock to good footing below, by this method he gets over the dangerous places and in a little time reaches the river where he looks like a Tom Thumb when seen from top of canyon. The scene here from the edge of river if simply overwhelming and we were more than double paid for making this dangerous descent. Here at the river's edge were several hot water fountains spouting small stream of boiling water out of solid rock. After this venture some trip we go to Artist Point. This is 2,000 feet above the bottom of the canyon and is the place where the renowned artist, Thomas Moran, assiduously labored with the utmost of his great artistic skill upon his excellent reproduction of this gleaming gorge which for years has adorned the walls of the great American Congress, much to his honor and to the pride of all those who see it The view here is truly marvelous and imposing and the beholder becomes so nearly lost in contemplation that he stands gazing and wondering again upon the grandeur inexpressible until brought back to composure by the guide's suggestion that it is time to return to camp and replenish the inner man. The greatest artists of our time have said that this brilliant gorge cannot be portrayed correctly The combinations of tangled colors, merging and mingling their tints and shades, and blending again and again in confusion and profusion seem to baffle the finest skill of the best artists of modern times. With every new position of the sun a new effect in coloring is produced, reminding one somewhat of the changing lights and shades of the old kaleidoscope, and so numerous are these changes and so delicate are the tinges of different hues that the mind cannot fully grasp the entire effect before it has blended into another combination. The next morning our route is over the Yellowstone river below the canyon and we leave that region of untold majesty forever, perhaps, and drive through the deepest, thickest forest we had yet seen, a perfect dream of woodland, driving over another great divide about 8,231 feet above the sea level. From here we descend gradually and continuously down a fine descent through the forest until about one-half mile below the divide we pass a singular freak known as the Wedded Trees. These are two distinct trees grown out of the ground about five feet apart and about fifteen feet high are joined together by an ingrowing limb. The branch of one tree has become grafted into the other. About three miles farther we come to the Virginia Cascades, a beautiful fall of water which nearly slides down on smooth surface af rock 60 feet down the mountain side along Gibbon river. This is all a charming region to Norris Basin on which route we again return and which was described in the beginning of the circuit through the park.

Ordinance Notice

Butler, Indiana, Feb. 10, 1910.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

You are hereby notified that the common council of the city of Butler, Indiana, did on the 10th day of February, 1910, adopt an ordinance that an improvement be made in said city as follows:

Be it ordained by the common council of the city of Butler, Indiana, that it is desired and deemed necessary to construct on and along Broadway street in the city of Butler, county of DeKalb and state of Indiana, from a point sixty (60) feet north of the north line of Monroe street in Lingenfelter's addition to said city of Butler, Indiana, to the north curb of Green street, a distance of fourteen hundred sixteen feet (1416 ft.), width, twenty-eight (28) feet. From the said north line of Green street south to the north curb line of Main street, a distance of three hundred twenty-nine (329) feet, width thirty-eight (38) feet. From the north curb line of Main street, south, a distance of ten hundred thirty-nine (1039) feet, width forty two (42) feet. From said ending point ("ten hundred thirty-nine (1039) feet south of north curb line of Main street") south, to south curb line of Willow street, a distance of two hundred forty-eight and one-half (248 1-2) feet, width thirty-six (36) feet. From south curb line of Willow street, south to south corporation line to the city of Butler, DeKalb county, Indiana, a distance of thirteen hundred eighty-six and seven-tenths (1386 7-10) feet, width twenty-eight (28) feet. Total length of Broad way street to be improved forty-four hundred nineteen and one tenth (4419 1-10) feet.

Also that it is desired and deemed necessary to construct on and along Main street in the city of Butler, DeKalb county and state of Indiana, from the east corporation line of the city of Butler, DeKalb county, state of Indiana, to the east curb line of Pearl street, a distance of twenty-three hundred ninety and eighty-four hundredths (2390 84-100) feet, width twenty-eight (28) feet. From said east line of Pearl street, west, to west curb line of John street, a distance of six hundred sixty-two (662) feet, width thirty-eight (38) feet; from said west curb line of John street to west curb line of west street (south) on east side of Packer addition to the city of Butler, a distance of twenty-two hundred eighty-eight and ninety-two hundredths (2288 92-100) feet, width twenty-eight (28) feet. Total length of Main street to be improved, fifty three hundred forty one and seventy-six hundredths (5341 76-100) feet, an improvement as follows:

That the roadway of said Broadway and Main streets for the distance and between the points aforesaid, and the roadway of all intersecting and entering streets and alleys lying within said portion of said Broadway and Main streets not included in the roadway thereof be improved by grading, curbing and paving the same with vitrified brick, sheet asphalt, creosote block, bitulithic, or saxite laid on a concrete foundation from curb line to curb line to the uniform width as above specified, placing the necessary marginal curbing and curbing said roadway with cement or stone curbing.

All work done in the making of said described public improvement shall be in accordance with the terms and conditions of such improvement resolution, and the details, drawings, plans, profiles and specifications for such proposed improvement which are on file and may be seen in the office of the city clerk of said city of Butler, Indiana.

The said common council of said city of Butler, Indiana, has fixed the 10th day of March, 1910, at 1:30 o'clock p m., at its office in said city of Butler as the time and place for the public consideration of the proposed improvement, at which time said common council will hear all persons interested, or whose property is liable to be assessed for said improvement, and will decide whether the benefits to the property liable to be assessed for such improvement will equal the estimated cost thereof.

By order of the common council of the city of Butler, Indiana.

L. C. BUEHRER, City Clerk.

Two of Hicksville's former public school teachers are planning a tour of Europe this season as soon as their schools close. The teachers are Miss Kate Meek, of Fort Scott, Kansas, and Miss Angie Wright, of Auburn. Whether they have serious designs upon some prince, earl, duke or lord we have not been able to learn. But they surely ought to have efficient funds by this time to support a title in grand style. These popular teachers never spare money or time in better preparing themselves for school duties.—Hicksville News

A boy in one of the schools in a neighboring town giggled when the teachers read the story of the Roman who swam across the Tiber three times before breakfast. "You do not doubt a trained swimmer could do that, do you James?" "No, sir," answered Jimmie, "but I wonder why he didn't make it four times and get back to the the side his clothes were on."

The Waterloo School Board at their last regular meeting took an advanced step in placing the Waterloo schools in the front rank for the coming year. The board decided to employ three teachers in the High School department with a view of affording the pupils an opportunity of choosing a wider range of studies. It is the purpose now to add at least two studies, viz. Book keeping and zoology curiculum. This will be an inducement for a larger and wider attendance of pupils and the board is to be commended.—Waterloo Press.

In the bustle and excitment of taking preliminary steps toward becoming a grandfather, the editor of the Times-Herald of Fort Wayne, last week forgot to make any reference of the marriage of his only son to Miss Edna Pope. In excusing himself the editor relates the following story: An old farmer drove to town sixteen miles to do some trading and was preparing to go home late in the afternoon. He sat in his wagon and appeared in a deep study He wanted to be sure that he had bought everything he needed, and had done all his errands and had forgotten nothing He didn't come to town often and sixteen miles was no slouch of a drive so he wanted to be absolutely sure Something bothered him but he couldn't think of anything more so he straightened up, chirruped "Gid-ap" to his horses and started away. Arriving home late in the night he was met at the barnyard gate by his youngsters who cried in a chorus: "Where's maw "Thar, Gol-durn my buckskins, ef haint done gone an' forgot maw! knowed thar wus sunthin," said the farmer.

When a New York woman recently missed $56 and a diamond ring worth more than twice as much, she concluded that she had thrown them in the ashes. She telephones to the street cleaning department, and was told to go to the dump where the ashes from her street would be emptied. When the woman called she was surprised and delighted to discover that they had not only looked for it, but had found it and were honest enough to give it to her. It was not surprising that the men were honest; it was remarkable that the property was found.

Emperors as well as actors have press agents—a fact which causes the judicious to read with greater interest than confidence many of the anecdotes of contemporary monarchs. Two lately published about the Tsar are enlightening, if true. It is said that he has been testing the equipment of the private soldiers. On one day he walked about the grounds of his palace for two hours, wearing the accoutrement of an infantry soldier on the march. On another occasion the Tsar came upon one of the sentries who had been suddenly attacked by a hemorrhage. He told the soldier to report himself to a doctor at once, but the man demured on the ground that he could not leave his post till relieved. The Tsar told him that he had sworn to obey his Emperor, and that the Emperor had the right under the code to relieve a sentry. The soldier thereupon turned over his rifle, and sought medical assistance for himself. The Tsar kept guard until a new sentry arrived.

Anything which throws light on the causes of the enhanced cost of living or gives the consumer an accurate idea of the distribution between producers and middlemen of the money he pays for foodstuffs is read with interest. The information may not enable the consumer to better himself, but it will at least teach him who, if anybody, is to be blamed for a state of affairs which is a daily distress. At present he makes wild guesses, which may be quite out of the way. The other day the secretary of agriculture gave out a scrap of information to the effect that on the average the city retailer of meats made a gross profit of 38 per cent on each pound of meat he sold. The secretary proposes now to enlarge the field of inquiry and discover who is responsible for the high prices consumers have to pay for eggs, potatoes, flour, vegetables, butter and other dairy products. As might be expected of the champion of the agricultural interests of the country, the secretary feels certain that the farmer is not getting his full share of the advance in prices. And yet he seems to be getting a pretty good share. The increase in the valuation of farm lands indicates as much. They sell for more because the crops raised on them bring more. To settle the question one should know how much of the money which a city consumer pays for a bushel of potatoes, for instance, goes to the grower, the railroad, the commission merchant and the city retailer. Then it would be possible to know whether any of the middlemen were charging too much for their indispensable services. If it were to appear that the railroad charges were excessive they could be regulated by law, but no legislature can dictate to wholesaler or retailer the price he should ask, though the latter can be forced to give the honest measure he does not always give now. It will take some time to collect the information the secretary of agriculture wants, but it would be so interesting and probably useful that he should not delay in sending out his agents to gather it in.

THE EDUCATION OF ARABELLA.

Father and Mother Nearly Came to a Real Disagreement.

Mrs. Lyon lifted the embroidery from the work table at her side and began stitching at a long, fine strip of linen with dainty fingers.

"Do you know," she said, holding it up for closer inspection, "do you know, Edwin, that Arabella looks simply lovely in white?"

Mr. Lyon was so deeply absorbed in his editorial that he merely uttered a casual, disinterested "Indeed!"

"Yes," went on Arabella's mother, her enthusiasm quite unquenched by lack of sympathy. "She looks like an angel in white, really; I can't help thinking how lovely she will be when she graduates. I'm planning her a gown that will be a dream; frills and insertion, and all done by hand. Of course it will be a pity to hide it when she wears her cap and gown, but it must show underneath a little, and—"

Mr. Lyon, now thoroughly aroused, laid aside his newspaper. "If you're talking about Arabella going to college," he said, grimly, "you might as well give it up at once. I shall never give my consent, never! I have always said that no daughter of mine should go to college, and I see no reason now why I should change my mind."

"But, Edwin," pleaded his wife, "you know how disappointed I was when I couldn't go——"

"It was your greatest charm for me," gallantly interrupted Mr. Lyon.

"And I have always tried so hard to catch up with the other girls," went on Mrs. Lyon, unheedingly. "The literary clubs I've belonged to and the lectures I've attended——"

"The one blot on your otherwise perfection," interrupted Mr. Lyon again, not so wisely this time, but his wife kept steadily to her theme.

"And I'm forever driven with the fear that I won't know things, and—and I'm not going to have Arabella like that, and she's going to college!"

"Not if I have any influence with her!" said Arabella's father, and he clutched his paper so firmly that it absolutely rattled. "Give her all the pretty, frilly frocks you want to, but don't, don't put her in competition with men. Let her have the feminine, domestic virtues——"

"Now, Edwin, that's nonsense, and you know it is!" answered Mrs. Lyon, with just as much emphasis. "Susy Lee went to college, and she married a poor man, and her housekeeping's faultless; and as for Lena Melleny, who didn't go, well, she never knew anything and she never will. Why, she doesn't even keep Arnold's socks darned! It's all the woman herself; college doesn't make a bit of difference."

"Well, all I've got to say," began Mr. Lyon, half rising in his excitement, is——" But his words of eloquent wisdom will never be known, for a sleepy "yi-yi-yiing" cry came from farther down the passage.

"There's Arabella now!" said Mrs. Lyon, getting up to leave the room. "I knew you'd wake her! You always do when you get so excited." Her voice trailed reproachfully down to the nursery, and in a moment more she came back with a blinking, rosy baby cuddled tight in her arms, for Arabella was just eight months old, and the united ages of her parents amounted, possibly, to fifty years.

Then something of the absurdity of their argument flashed across Mrs. Lyon's whimsical mind.

"And Arabella not a year old! Aren't we silllies?" she demanded. Arabella crowed loudly in answer as her mother pulled out the frills of her white little "nighty." "Never mind, that was a real college yell, wasn't it, daughter?"

Mr. Lyon laughed and returned to his paper. "Well, I'll have to agree with you in one thing, Bess," he said, as he gazed proudly at the fat bone of contention, "Arabella certainly does look corking in white!"—Youth's Companion.

Rough Passage.

"I hope and pray," remarked a gentleman as he left the steamer, "that I shall never have occasion to cross the Atlantic again.

No Ship Subsidy Scheme.

Congress should not adopt the Humphreys bill, which would oblige the national government to pay out in subsidies to the few American ships eligible the annual profits of the foreign mail service, which are between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000.

Foreign countries pay subsidies per registered ton of merchant marine as follows: France, $9.28; Japan, $7.40; Italy, $4.58; Germany, 72 cents; England, 48 cents. The nation paying the the lowest subsidy has the largest merchant navy.

France and Italy have been unable to increase their fleet by subsidies. Germany subsidizes only the North German Lloyd and the German Africa line to her colonies, the total amount being about $1,800,000 a year. England divides about $5,600,000 annually among 400 vessels.

But a large part of England's subsidy consists of the remission of the Suez canal fees to British ships, and, since the canal annually nets more than the total amount of subsidies, the British taxpayer is not out of pocket in the matter.

The United States already pays subsidies under the existing ocean mail act to steamships carrying mails. The annual amount is considerably more than $1,000,000. It has been stated, and we have not seen it denied, that last year the Ward line carried 1,900 pounds of mail from New York to Mexican and South American ports, receiving a subsidy therefor of about $250,000.

If the Taft administration wishes to make a gift of five or six millions a year to certain steamship lines, it can do so without taxing the American people, by securing adoption of the bill of Congressman Borland of Missiuri, which provides that on all goods brought into this country in American ships only 75 per cent of the import duties fixed by the Aldrich-Taft tariff shall be collected.—Chicago Journal.

Twenty-five Per Cent More Tariff.

Though the rates of duty set forth in the tariff law enacted by Congress last summer at its special session are very generally criticised as being excessively high, they are likely to be much higher in many instances as soon as the feature of the law relating to maximum and minimum rates becomes operative. That will be after March 31 next.

The existing rates are the minimum rates. They are to apply permanently to imports from countries that are held to make no discrimination against exports from the United States. Only six European countries have been found to be entitled to the minimum rates. This is shown by a recent proclamation of the President. The six are Great Britain, Russia, Italy, Spain, Switzerland and Turkey. Germany and France are conspicuously absent from the list. Hence imports from those countries and from all others not included in the President's proclamation presumably will have to pay the rates of duty specified in the tariff law with 25 per cent ad valorem added.

It will be impossible to tell the effect of this arrangement upon the people of the United States until it has been in operation for a time. However, it is certain to increase the price of some goods, and to injure this nation's export trade.

The maximum and minimum provision of the present tariff would have been a very good feature if the law had taken as the maximum the rates specified in it instead of making them the minimum. As manipulated by Aldrich, the feature in question has been utilized as a device for making tariff rates higher by indirection than Congress would have dared make them by direct action.—Chicago News.

The Real Cause of High Prices.

In almost every State in the Union there is a general movement to ascertain the cause of increased cost of living. Legislatures are passing resolutions calling for investigation. Well-meaning but short-sighted enthusiasts urge boycotts of certain articles of food to force lower prices.

All this is waste of time, and utter nonsense. The cause of high prices and the means of lowering them are no secret.

The cost of living in the United States is high because the Republican protective tariff, the tariff devised by Senator Aldrich and approved by President Taft, enables capitalists to monopolize production and fix prices at an exorbitantly high standard.

Just as long as the people tolerate a high tariff they must expect to pay the piper. The moment they insist on a low tariff the burden will be lightened.

The place to protest is at Washington, and the man to whom to protest is President Taft, who harbors the delusion that the American people are satisfied with the Aldrich-Taft tariff, and will tamely submit to continued extortion for the benefit of the big Eastern tariff barons.

A Dollar's Buying Power.

The newspapers and magazines are devoting much space to attempted explanations of prevailing prices of food products.

It is a commentary on the obtuseness of a certain class of writers that they devote much time and language to unnecessary "explanations," while overlooking the central fact that the buying power of a dollar has steadily decreased in exact proportion to the rise of monopoly and trusts.

The average American consumer is not interested in academic theories as to the rise or fall of prices and wages. The consumer simply knows that each dollar of his earnings will purchase less to-day than ten, or even five years ago.

The real economic struggle in the United States to-day is to increase the buying power of the dollar. Those who are wealthy know nothing, comparatively, of this struggle.

It is the average "middle-class" consumers—those in professional occupations, artisans, small storekeepers, office men generally—that are chiefly interested. They have no redress.

Incomes have not increased in proportion to prices. That is the kenote of the struggle for relief. The dollar is worth less than it used to be.

If you go to a country that is on a silver basis or has other depreciated currency you have to pay out for standard goods more dollars in proportion to the money debasement.

So with extreme high prices in our own country. High wages may enable the consumer to handle more money. But skyrocketing prices give him less necessaries of life in exchange.

And so the coming struggle for real tariff revision, and the election of a patriotic Congress to bring it about, is simply a nation-wide protest against decreasing the dollar's buying power.—Chicago Journal.

How the Tariff Puts Up Food Prices.

The Tribune has often asserted that excessive protection puts up all prices, even those of articles not directly affected by it. We have been hearing that the rise of farm products could not be the result of the tariff because the farmer never has had any but sham protection from the tariff.

For a fine example of this indirect but powerful influence examine the effect upon American trade with Germany of the maximum duties that must be put in effect within three months, unless the plain intent of the Cannon-Aldrich law can be defeated by some righteous juggling of schedules by the President through the treaty-making power or the tariff commission.

Germany's dutiable imports to this country are more than $100,000,000. The 25 per cent increase of the maximum schedules will be applied to these at the cost of the American people. We must pay so much more for whatever articles of consumption we import from Germany; indeed, we are probably paying now in anticipation. Here is the direct boost of prices.

Then our exports to Germany are $300,000,000, including wheat, corn, cotton, meats, dried fruits, lumber and the like. On many of these Germany will be obliged to apply her maximum duties. This will transfer our market in Germany for these things to Canada, South America, and other countries, unless farm producers adopt the manufacturers' device of selling abroad for half price and making it up with higher prices at home.—Minneapolis Tribune.

The Small Boy's Revenge.

The family whose means were limited was expecting company for dinner, and the thoughtful mother instructed her small son how to behave at the table and also told him there was one thing on the table he was not to ask for.

The appointed time came and things looked very tempting, especially to the small boy, who suddenly said, "Say, ma, I want some of that," pointing to a plate of cheese.

The mother cast reproving glances upon him, but the child continued, "You going to give me some of that?" The mother again tried to attract the boy's attention to his error by stepping upon his toes, but it was of no use, for he continued: "Give me some of that or I'll tell." Beginning to count, he said: "One, you going to give me some? Two, you going to give me some? Three, my pants are made of the old window shades."

Constantinople is the dirtiest city in the world, the only street cleaners being the starving dogs, cats and rats; but the people do use soap. Last year there were imported into that city 3,500 tons of soap selling from 20 to 60 cents a cake. Practically all the soap of Constantinople arrives from the island of Mitylene, which makes 32,000 tons a year from its olive oil. Constantinople still burns candles largely. The annual imports amount to 4,000,000 pounds.

While alighting from a tram car in Vienna some months ago, Fraulein Anette Schmidt accidentally injured a fellow-passenger's eye with one of her hat pins. The unfortunate man was taken to the hospital and eventually lost sight of the injured organ. Fraulein Schmidt, who visited him regularly, offered, says a writer, to become his wife and look after him for the rest of his life. Her offer was promptly accepted and the marriage took place lately.—Chicago News.

Off the northwest coast of Australia there is an island which till recently belonged to no one. It is not a very large island. In fact, it measures only 365 yards by 30 yards. It has, however, a good anchorage, and for that reason its possession may at some time be valuable. The British government has, therefore, annexed the island, and an official notification of the fact recently reached the commonwealth minister for external affairs. The new British possession is known as Cartier island, and is almost surrounded by coral reefs.—Westminster Gazette.

Germany pays comparatively little attention to poultry raising. For the greater part of its supply of eggs and poultry the empire is dependent upon Italy, France, Belgium and the Balkan States. The imports into Germany of eggs and poultry have increased marvelously since 1872, in which year the combined imports of these two items amounted to only $500,000. In 1880 they had increased to $5,000,000, and in 1907, $37,845,750 worth of imported eggs and $12,730,500 worth of imported poultry were consumed, with exports that same year amounting to only $313,500 for eggs and $211,250 for poultry.

Many clergy gird against copper in the collection bags, and, of course, people who can afford silver ought not to give pennies only; but there is nothing to be said against pence if there is plenty of it. In a certain parish not long ago the vicar announced that an additional clergyman or second curate was needed. He said the cost of the maintenance was to be provided by a penny fund, to which every parishioner was wanted to subscribe. The fund was started and was so successful that the income of the new curate was assured thereby. The new assistant is to this day called "the penny curate."—Church Family Newspaper.

Not every resident of Florida knows what a superior dish for the table is the stone crab. It is to southern waters what the lobster is to northern. George Lizotte, of Pass-a-Grille, fenced in a portion of Boca Ciega bay some time ago and planted his water farm with stone crabs to prevent the extinction of the species. He is studying their wants and habits and believes he can largely increase their numbers yearly. Captain Cason, of Pass-a-Grille, is preparing to fence in a second stone crab farm of large proportions. There is an enormous demand for the stone crabs from the numerous visitors to the island, and the supply, though great, is being rapidly depleted.—Florida Times-Union.

A South African correspondent tells the story of a large meteorite, weighing more than half a ton, which has been sent by Dr. Rogers, of the geological survey, from Prieska, in the Kenhardt territory of Cape Colony, to the South African museum at Cape Town. The meteorite was found at Rateldraai, and it looks like a mass of molten metal, with a number of cavities or pockets in it, and where not earth soiled is of a dark bluish leaden color. In parts it has been chipped with a chisel or pickax, and in such cuts it shows shall shiny specks. It is described as a dull, warped mass of nickeliferous iron, and Dr. Peringuey the director of the museum, ascribes its advent as due to the disintegration of some cometary body. — London Standard.

The Wand of Sleep OR The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER IV.—(Continued.)

"My mother is weak where Dido is concerned," said Isabella, shaking her head.

"And so are you, my dear," responded Maurice, kissing her. "Both of you are weak, and have yielded up your wills to that woman. But the announcement of our engagement will give me some influence in the house, and do away with all that. It will be a fight between white and black magic, and I, as a civilized wizard, intend to win."

"Why do you particularly wish to announce our engagement to-day?"

"My dear child," he said, slowly, "I kept our engagement secret on account of David. I have seen for a long time that he loves you, and, knowing his fiery temper, I did not wish to provoke a quarrel by telling him that you had promised to be my wife. But last night the truth was forced from me at dinner, and David declared that he intended to ask you to marry him."

"But I don't love him. I love you!"

"I knew that, but he didn't. He knows now that we love one another, but he is ignorant that we are engaged. When the fact is publicly announced, he may give up his idea of marrying you, and so a quarrel may be averted."

"Are you afraid of quarreling with him?"

"Yes! Not on my own account, but it distresses our good Major to see us at variance. We nearly quarreled over you last night, though, upon my word," added the young man, half to himself. "I believe Etwald promoted the row."

"Etwald!" repeated Isabella. "Dr. Etwald?"

"Yes, he is in love with you."

"I know he is," replied the girl, quietly. "But of course, I could never be his wife; the more so, as I fear him. But Dido wishes me to marry him."

"Oh, hang Dido!" cried Maurice, vigorously. "I wish she would mind her own business."

At this moment, as if summoned by his remark, Dido appeared round the bend of the path. She looked straight before her, turning neither to right nor left, and passed the pair like one in a sleeping fit. The negress seemed to be under the influence of some strange excitement, and ran stumbling down to the gate.

"Voodoo! Voodoo!" she cried, hoarsely.

"Oh," said Isabella, nervously. "Dr. Etwald must be at hand. When Dido says 'Voodoo' he comes."

CHAPTER V.

"When Dido says 'Voodoo' he comes," repeated Maurice, greatly puzzled. "Are you talking of Dr. Etwald?"

"Yes! He seems to possess some strange power over Dido, for she always knows when he is approaching. See, Maurice, Dido is waiting at the gate; in a few moments you will see Dr. Etwald enter it!"

The two young people looked steadfastly at the brilliantly-colored figure of the negress, standing in a statuesque attitude near the great iron gate. All was bright and cheerful, but in that sinister red figure, with its black face and hands, there was a suggestion of evil which seemed to dominate and poison the whole beautiful scene. Maurice felt Isabella shudder with nervous dread as she pressed closely to his side.

"Dearest, you must not be afraid!" said he, glancing down anxiously at her face. "You must throw off the terror you have of this woman. If the law——"

At this moment he broke off his speech with an ejaculation of surprise, for true to the prognostication of Isabella—in answer to the expectant attitude of the negress—Dr. Etwald turned in at the gate.

They continued to watch the pair, and saw Dido throw herself at the feet of Etwald, who raised his hand over her in a threatening manner. He pointed into the wood with an imperious gesture, and in a slinking attitude the usually stately Dido passed out of sight into the little path down which Isabella had come to meet Maurice. When the gleam of her red dress disappeared Etwald wiped his face, and walked briskly up the avenue towards the young couple.

"Shall we go on, or wait for him here?" asked Isabella, in a whisper.

"Wait!" replied Maurice, in the same tone. "I shall not let him think that either of us is afraid of his charlatan tricks."

Dr. Etwald approached, with what was meant for a smile on his usually somber face, and took off his hat to Miss Dallas. But he did not speak as he made his salutation, so the girl was forced, by reason of this uncomfortable silence, to make the first observation.

"Good morning, doctor," she said, as he replaced his hat. "I suppose you have come to see my mother."

"Partly, Miss Dallas; and partly to see you; also this gentleman."

"To see me!" said Maurice, looking at his rival. "Then why did you not go to 'Ashantee'?"

"I never give myself unnecessary trouble, and, of course, I knew that I should find you here."

"By what right do you say that?" demanded Maurice, sharply.

"By the right of our conversation last night, Mr. Aylmer. You have forestalled me, I see. No matter," added Etwald, with a sneer. "To-day to you; to-morrow to me."

All this was quite unintelligible to Isabella, who looked from one to the other of her companions, in bewilderment, not guessing, for the moment, that she was the bone of contention between them. She saw the suppressed mockery on Etwald's face, and noted also that Maurice, roused by the quiet insistence of the doctor, had much difficulty in keeping his temper. She proposed that they should go up to the house.

"What was the matter with my nurse, doctor?" she asked. "What have you been doing to her?"

"She was agitated, my dear young lady, and I have calmed that agitation."

"After having previously caused it," said Maurice, in a significant tone.

"What possible reason have you to make such an accusation?"

"I think it is my fault," said Isabella, hastily. "I remarked that Dido was always agitated when you came to this house."

"I can explain that in a measure, Miss Dallas. If you remember, I cured Dido of a bad nervous headache by hypnotic suggestion. Her mind, therefore, became habituated in responding to mind; and doubtless she feels a kind of impression which, tells her that I am near."

"In other words," said Maurice, pointedly, "you have obtained an influence over her."

"It is not improbable," rejoined Etwald, in measured tones. "I am one of those people, Mr. Aylmer, who can, by strength of will and power of character, obtain power over anyone I wish."

As he spoke, Etwald cast a sudden glance at Isabella. The girl was looking towards the house, out of which her mother had just emerged, and did not see the menace in his regard; but Maurice noted the gaze, and felt enraged at all it implied.

In plain words, Etwald intimated, in a veiled manner, that Isabella was a nervous subject, over whom he could obtain influence, if he so chose, by means of hypnotism."

"You have been in the West Indies, doctor," asked Maurice, bluntly.

"I have been all over the world, Mr. Aylmer," parried Etwald, dextetously.

"Do you know anything of Voodoo-worship?"

"I know something of most things," assented the doctor. "But I confess I take but little interest in African barbarities."

"Oh! what about Dido and her meeting you?"

"I have explained that to the best of my ability," responded Etwald, coldly, "and now, Mr. Etwald, as our hostess is approaching, you must excuse my replying to any further questions. If you want further insight into my character, call upon me at my home."

"That I shall certainly do," said Maurice, for he was resolved to learn all he could about this strange man, so that he could protect Isabella from his arts.

"Ah!" said the doctor, with irony, "we shall see if you will venture so far."

Before Maurice could take up the implied challenge, which threw doubts upon his moral courage, Mrs. Dallas advanced heavily to meet her visitors. Isabella had already flitted like a white butterfly into the drawing-room; and her mother received the two young men alone. Her reception was, as usual, ponderous and vague.

"So pleased to see you, Mr. Aylmer. Dr. Etwald, I am charmed. It is a delightful day, is it not? Reminds one of Barbadoes."

"I have never been in Barbadoes," said Maurice, towards whom her languid gaze was directed. "But Dr. Etwald may be able to answer your question, Mrs. Dallas!"

"I know the West Indian islands," observed Etwald, as they walked into the house, "and this day does remind me a little of the climate there; but it is scarcely hot enough."

"No," murmured Mrs. Dallas, sinking into a large chair. "You are right. I have been in the sun all the morning, and only now am I beginning to feel warm. I shall certainly go back to Barbadoes."

Mrs. Dallas had made this threat so many times that nobody paid any attention to it, and, not expecting an answer, she began to fan herself slowly. Through her half-closed eyes she looked anxiously at the subtle face of Etwald. With an instinct of a woman, she guessed that something important had brought the doctor to see her; he was not a man to waste his time on visits of ceremony.

Now Mrs. Dallas was secretly afraid of Etwald, as she had received hints from Dido that the doctor knew more about secret things than most people. She dreaded lest his visit should portend harm, and so, in some trepidation, waited for him to speak. But Etwald, guessing her frame of mind, took his time, and it was only when Isabella approached with some tea for her mother that he broke the silence.

"Don't go away, Miss Dallas!" he said, entreatingly; "I have something to say to your mother which concerns you."

Isabella turned pale, for she guessed what was coming. Etwald had raised his voice. Mrs. Dallas, with some curiosity, raised herself to look closer at Etwald, and he, seeing that his auditory was attentive, prepared to launch his thunderbolt.

"My dear Mrs. Dallas," said he, in a soft voice, "you must have been for a long time that my visits here have not been made without an object. To-day I come to ask you and your sweet daughter a question."

"Pray don't ask it," said Isabella, better informed by Etwald's glance as to his purpose. "It will only give you pain."

"I must risk that," said the doctor, slowly. "Mrs. Dallas, I love your daughter, and I wish to marry her; Miss Isabella, will you be my wife?"

Here Maurice set down his cup with a crash, and strode across the room where he faced Etwald in no very pleasant frame of mind.

"I shall answer that question, Dr. Etwald!" he said, loudly. "Miss Dallas shall not and cannot carry you. She has promised to become my wife?"

"Isabella!" said Mrs. Dallas, in an aggrieved tone. "Is this true?"

"Perfectly true," assented Isabella. "I love Maurice. I wish to marry him." And slipping her arm within that of her lover, she prepared to face the storm.

"You are a disobedient girl," cried Mrs. Dallas, making no attempt to control her temper. "You shall not marry without my permission. Mr. Aylmer, I am astonished at you; I am disappointed in you. It is not the act of a gentleman to steal away the affections of my daughter, without informing me of your intentions."

"I had my reasons for not doing so, Mrs. Dallas," replied Maurice, quickly. "But I was about to tell you of our engagement when Dr. Etwald forestalled me by making his unexpected offer."

"Unexpected, Mr. Aylmer!" smiled Etwald. "After my statement last night?"

"Unexpected so far as time and place are concerned," said Maurice, firmly. "But as you have asked Miss Dallas to marry you, take your refusal from her own lips."

"I love Maurice. I intend to marry him," repeated Isabella.

"In that case," said Etwald, rising, "I must take my leave, and shall be content with that answer until such time as you are free; then," he added, coolly, "I shall ask you again."

"I shall never be free!" said Isabella, proudly.

"Oh, yes, you will; when Mr. Aylmer is dead!"

"Dead!" shrieked Mrs. Dallas, all her superstition roused by the word. "Come away from that man, Isabella!"

"Maurice! dead!" repeated the girl, with a pale cheek.

The young man shrugged his shoulders.

"Pooh! pooh! some nonsense that Dr. Etwald was talking about last night," he added, contemptuously. "He says if I marry, it will be a case of life in death, whatever that means."

Etwald rose to his feet, and stretched out a menacing hand.

"I have warned you, Aylmer," he said, sternly. "Your marriage, after or before it, means life in death. Take care! Ladies," he added, with a bow, "I take my departure."

Outside, Etwald found Dido waiting for him. He looked at her significantly.

"I have failed," he said. "There is nothing left but the devil-stick."

BAKERY WIDOW LAMENTS.

She Wishes She Was Back in Germany and Gives Her Reasons.

The Macdougal alley makers of images of men and things had gone. The last of the picture gliders from the factory was finishing his coffee. Battling Bill Hurley and the Sinclair Football Club were deep in fight and football away at the back of the widow's bakery and the hustle was over. Yet the widow sat looking over the piles of dishes with sadness and despair in her face.

"Julia is sick," she explained introspectively, according to the New York Sun, "and I wish I was just now in Germany again."

"Business?"

"Aca, no; business is all right," she retorted; "it's Julia. See, if she is sick in Germany she shows her book and goes right away to a sanitarium. Here, when peoples is sick they don't go nowhere, and the landlord puts them out. Ain't that so? Sure, it is! I wish I was in Germany."

Presently she began again.

"Now, in Germany there ain't no beggars, same as here," she said; "not now no more. Everything is books. A man or woman what works every day he gets a stamp to put in his book, and the boss he puts a stamp in his book.

"So when a person is sick the police come and look at the book and see that that person is a working person, and so they send them to a free sanitarium, where they have the finest doctors, and it don't cost nothing. Or, if they are very bad, they must go to the hospital, where everything is free, too.

"If a person is old and ain't got nobody to take care of them, come now the sisters, what like you call the sisters of charity, and they make the soup for them and wash them and do things. Only if they have the book.

"In every town there is a society of rich people. One of the society she says she will make soup for the old people and another says she will make clothes, and another says she will give meat, and so like that. Then the sisters they bring these things to the old people and so. Here who cares for the old people? They must go to the police court and then to the poorhouse, ain't it?"

The Sassafras Mint.

The lady who always spends her summers in the most inaccessible and unspoiled rural nooks of which she can learn was narrating her latest experiences to a writer in the Washington Star.

"I spent August," she said, "in a village called the Head of Sassafras, down in Maryland. The postoffice there was the general store. The morning after my arrival I went to the general store for my mail.

"A little girl preceded me with an egg in her hand.

"'Gimme an egg's worth of tea, please,' I heard her say to the postmaster-storekeeper; 'and ma says ye might weigh out an egg's worth of sugar, too, for the black hen's a-clucking, and I'll be up again in a minute.'"

Turks and Animals.

In the matter of kindness to animals it is said that the Turk cannot be surpassed. Thus at Stamboul the wandering dogs are treated with great gentleness, and when puppies come into the world they are lodged with their mother at the side of the street in improvised kennels made out of old boxes lined with straw and bits of carpet. And frequently when a young Turk happens to be flush of money he goes to the nearest baker's shop and buys a quantity of bread, which he distributes among the dogs of the quarter, who testify their gratitude by jumping up at him with muddy paws and sniffling muzzles.

Fooled His Doctor.

The late Rev. H. R. Haweis, who was equally notable as preacher, journalist, lecturer and musician, suffered from a dangerous hip disease when a boy of nine. The celebrated Sir Benjamin Brodie, who was asked if a change of scene would benefit the afflicted youth, answered, "Take him anywhere—it does not matter."

Haweis lived to laugh at his doctor, and half a century later, after a life of exceptional industry, he was in vigorous health.

To prevent the alteration of checks or other valuable papers an inventive genius has brought out an electric apparatus which burns tiny holes in the paper as the inscription is written.

WOMAN'S SPHERE

Why Men Wait on Women.

Irreverent persons suggest that man's only object in life is to please woman and to serve her, says Harper's Weekly. Slightly exaggerated, this statement, perhaps; yet there must be some truth at the bottom of it. Otherwise, why should man wait on woman at all? Why take pleasure in being agreeable to her? Why go out of his way to assist her? In other words, why should he be chivalrous?

Chivalry is the expression of man's real, instinctive deference for woman. Although, like other instinctive feelings, it is being modified or rooted up by education and civilization, the chivalrous instinct nevertheless still makes itself felt in modern man. It impels him, when confronted with woman, to pass through three different stages. In the first one he strives to attract woman's attention; in the second, to please her; finally, to serve her.

The unconcerned are highly diverted by the first. There is no end to the things a man will do to attract woman's attention. Nothing is too absurd. One man found it necessary to spoil his patent leather shoes. He was being rowed across a lake when a girl passed by in her canoe. Without a moment's hesitation he plunged both feet into the rippling water, letting them dangle there stupidly.

Other men use other methods; some grow spry and climb fences, stumble over their own feet; some imagine themselves the proud possessors of a voice and exercise it; others whistle out a tune or twirl their mustaches. Still others grow disconcerted and forget where they are going, or lose the thread of their conversation.

So much for the desire of being noticed. When it comes to pleasing women men are more particular. They then strive for personal perfection. The intellectual ones go about with poetry in their breast pockets and learn it by heart, ready to repeat it at the first occasion. Or they dabble into art or literature or some "ism" in order to acquire the correct pose. The more matter of fact puzzle over material things; whether their hair is parted in the right place; whether the red or blue tie will make the better impression. For men are vain and dress to please.

The Battle of Life.

Life is a battle, and to fight that battle heroically and well is the great purpose of every man's existence who is worthy and fit to live at all, writes a grand old philosopher. To stem the strong currents of adversity, to advance in spite of all obstacles, to snatch victory from the jealous grasp of fortune, to become a chief and leader among men, to rise to rank, and by eloquence, courage, perseverence, sturdy energy, activity, discouraged by no reverses, impatient at no delays, deterred by no hazards, to win wealth, to subjugate men by our intellect, the very elements by our audacity to succeed, to prosper, to thrive; thus it is, according to the general understanding, one fights well the battle of life. Even to succeed in business by that boldness which halts at no risks, that audacity which stakes all upon hazardous chances by the shrewdness of the close dealer, the boldness of the unscrupulous operator, even by the knaveries of the stock board and the gold room; to crawl up into space by disreputable means or the votes of brutal ignorance—these also are deemed to be among the great successes of life.

But that which is the greatest battle and in which the truest honor and most success are to be won, is that which our intellect and reason and moral sense, our spiritual natures, fight against our sensual appetites and animal nature. Therein only are the true glories of heroism to be won, there only the successes that entitle us to triumphs.

In every human life that battle is fought, and those who win elsewhere often suffer discomfiture and shameful downfall in ignominious defeat and disastrous rout and encounter.

Pretty Curtains.

The prettiest curtains imaginable may be made from unbleached cotton or muslin. They may be simply feather stitched or cat stitched at the hems, or if you have time buy some plain colored gingham and cut a pretty conventional design from it and stitch it on the curtain at the bottom. A design of geraniums in bright red gingham would be effective, especially if a pretty red tablecloth is spread on the table when it is not in use.

Dainty Invalid Outfit.

This charming invalid outfit might easily be copied at less cost than the rather high price asked for this luxury in the shops. The outfit includes a light, soft lounging gown, a robe for the lap made of the same material, and a pretty little cap to cover an incomplete coiffure when the invalid receives her first visitors. Gown, robe and cap are folded into dainty envelope case of silk in matching color. The set illustrated is of fine, soft French flannel in pale pink. The gown is bordered with satin embroidered with French knots and the robe with plain satin. The cap is entirely of the satin.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Velvet flowers are proving a popular trimming with other velvets upon handsome corsages.

Liberty silks, dyed in shaded tones of red and blue, are in great favor for first season girls.

With the season's double-breasted coats the correct thing is to begin the buttons at the waist line.

Handsome plumes are now put on the fuzzy felt turbans, and sometimes they are seen with aigrettes.

Valenciennes laces, French, German and Normandy, are going to be extensively used on summer frocks.

Some of the embroidered burnous wraps, so popular this season, have handsome knotted silk fringes.

Corded ribbon is being used as a trimming on several of the daintiest of the ready-made evening gowns.

Hats are made of velvet, beaver, felt or heavy corded silk, trimmed with handsome wings or ostrich feathers.

The puff is again in evidence. It adorns the sleeve everywhere, seemingly, between the shoulder and the wrist.

A smart hat for a girl of 12 is a huge affair covered with moire silk and trimmed with a large moire ribbon bow.

An adorable little blouse to accompany a white suit is of rose-painted chiffon over white satin, with a pink satin girdle.

Black hats may be worn with everything and are always a wise choice for the women who may not invest in many chapeaux.

It is no longer necessary to have stockings match the footwear; instead they match the skirt, the headgear and even the gloves.

Delicate mosaic pendants, festooned with a fine chain of sterling silver plated with gold, form some of the imported necklaces.

One of the latest favorites is the little cashmere cape, with narrow shoulders and long stole ends, which comes in every shade.

A new French cotton crepe of pebble wale in place of the striped crinkle of the summer is among the handmade waists in the shops.

Cap shapes are popular, ruling strongly among turbans and toques and even hats. They are probably the result of the automobile bonnet.

The School Lunch and Dyspepsia.

It is very important that the meal eaten at recess be a warm one, and whenever possible it should be prepared and eaten at home. Until a child is 10 or 12 years old it must have its dinner or principal meal of the day at noon. The rest of the household may dine in the evening, but for the youngster so heavy a repast near bedtime is certain to be deleterious. A bundle of cold sandwiches will not serve as a substitute for the midday dinner, for the child needs not only the warm, home-cooked food, but also the walk home, the bit of play on the way and the hour's forgetfulness of lessons.—A Doctor in the Delineator.

Needlework Notes.

A color and color-number card is a useful accessory of the sewing basket.

Spanish embroidery is wonderfully effective on a white linen shirtwaist.

Honiton applique in a dainty bow-knot and flower design make a pretty baby's cap.

A combination of French and eyelet embroidery is extremely pretty on dainty lingerie.

Motor power for running the sewing machine is proving quite popular in the home sewing circle.

A dainty necktie end of sheerest mull had a hemstitched hem and a little flower form in shadow embroidery.

Any dainty bit of lingerie with even the tiniest spray of hand embroidery is one of the most highly prized of all gifts.

Woman and Science.

What was the beginning of science? Take medical science, for instance. Here the first in science may have been women. Man, crippled and wounded in the chase and hunt for food, crawled home to his hut, and there the wife gathered together neighboring women and kinswomen to consider and decide what was best to save and cure the injured. And so began what might be called experimental medicine. After thousands of cases some course of treatment would be selected as most successful, and this would be handed down from mother to daughter for ages, meaning the saving of the weak—a form of artificial selection—the beginning of civilization, for without these artificialities there would be only one thing—nature—to shape all men just so, so that all people would look one just like the other, even as do savages, for in a life true to nature people unless they were shaped just so, could not survive, because they could not fit nature.—New York Press.

A Light Kitchen.

The kitchen should be the lightest room in the house. Many persons clear the kitchen, draw down the blinds and darken it during the very time that light should pour into the apartment. If there is any place in the house where light should seek every corner it is in the kitchen. Unless the cupboards and refrigerators are carefully watched mold will quickly form on the food. There is nothing that cleans the sink better than soda water, and it is always needed about the refrigerator. Butter will keep sweet longer if placed in stone jars.

Hats Wedged Down.

The fashionable turban of the winter season is a lesson in wonderful construction, and bears out the principle that while headgear may be large it must be light in weight and of undoubted comfort. Whether made of beaver, fur or velvet, it is a featherweight construction, and is worn so well wedged down upon the head that a feeling of absolute security is assured.

The Bride's Pledge.

"Jack, dearest, let us promise each other that we'll never, never, never quarrel; and if we ever do, that you'll frankly admit you're wrong."—Browning's Magazine.

It pays to advertise in this paper.

TWO SMART AFTERNOON COSTUMES.

Costume No. 1, on the left, is made from a beautiful shade of wistaria satin cloth, with perfectly plain, long skirt and three-quarter length coat, suggestive of the directoire period. The latter is elaborately trimmed with black soutache braid, as indicated by sketch, and the flat collar and oddly-constructed bow at waist line are black satin, and the small buttons down each side of coat are oxidized silver.

On the right is a very smart model in smoked cloth and velvet a few shades darker—the latter forming the plain skirt. The cloth is arranged in tunic fashion, joining the bodice under a girdle of heavy braid. Velvet ribbon matching the skirt laces the front of cloth yoke and outlines same, and deep velvet cuffs are finished with braid and tassels.

Civil War Stories

A Dead Flag.

Recently I read two letters from northern soldiers. Both glorified Old Glory, a living flag, and made bitter attacks upon the Stars and Bars—the Confederate emblem—a dead flag, advising that it be burned or forever hidden from view. I am in most hearty accord with the two men in claiming that there is only one national flag for the United States, and that Old Glory. It is a good flag. It is the best ever made. It is the flag of the best country in all the world, and one of the happiest thoughts we old fellows who had a part with Uncle Sam's army in preventing that flag from trailing in the dust, is that we were born in time and were disposed to offer our services to the endangered country. It was no easy task that fell to the lot of the boys in blue. The Americans in blue met Americans in gray, who were as brave and skillful as themselves, and it is a satisfaction, in our declining years, to know that they, too, fought man fashion. They offered their lives and their services for that for which their flag stood as readily as our boys offered their lives and gave their blood for the government of the United States. Their flag went down in 1865, when the framework of their hoped-for government was eternally wrecked. When the southern Confederacy went to its grave the stars and bars were equally dead, as eternally dead. I may be wrong, but now that the trouble is over, and has been ever since 1865, I feel like wanting that brave old enemy of the sixties to enjoy life as much as possible during their remaining few years. Our flag is their flag. Our country is their country, and both are as much theirs as they are ours.

Now, you surely agree with me that the Confederacy is dead. There is no more danger of its sprouting again than there is of the sun's changing places with the moon. The stars and bars was the flag of the Confederacy that they didn't establish. There is no real life in a flag that has no country. Is it a menace? Is there any real danger in it? Isn't it a mere relic, a keepsake, a memory? Can you blame them for retaining a tender feeling for the flag under which they made such sacrifices? Can't you call to mind an old grandmother who now and then went to the bureau and took out an old, faded dress that was worn by her grandmother at her wedding, kiss it, wipe away a tear and then put it back for another year? The old dress is dead. It has served its purpose. No one wants to wear it. No one would wear it. It has had its day. So with that old, dead flag, that some of our boys seem to have such intense hatred for, and some of whom still fear, as we used to fear it when we saw it waving over the heads of charging lines. Are their fears well grounded? Surely not. You love our flag better than you would if you had not fought for it. Those old men in gray loved their flag more dearly because of the battles they had fought under it. I should deem them little less than human if tender memories did not come as they looked upon the old relic, the dead flag of a buried Confederacy; if they did not now and then bring it forth and show affection for it. Would you have them forget their dead?

There was a time when officers in high positions, and hundreds of thousands at the north, thought there was great danger that the government of the United States might lose out in the contest. Let us, for argument's sake, suppose that we had lost out, the third or fourth year of the war; lost out after we had gone through many great battles whose history will never die. Do you think that if the country of which our flag is the emblem had gone down we would have ceased to love that flag, and that it would not be a source of delight to us all our lives, even though it were a dead flag, as dead as the Stars and Bars?

It was given me to serve in the Spanish-American war and the Philippine insurrection. I saw tens of thousands of the sons and grandsons of the old Confederate soldiers wearing the uniform of the American army, serving under the one flag, glorifying the one country; men from the south marching shoulder to shoulder with tens of thousands of the sons and grandsons of Union soldiers. I saw brigades, divisions and corps under the command of men who had commanded in the Confederate army. It is possible that these later army experiences, things that I saw and heard then, may have warped by judgment and softened my heart so that I look with less fear upon the dead flag of the dead Confederacy than some do.—Lieut. Col. J. A. Watrous in Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Stonewall Jackson and the Cadets.

My introduction to him, when I was a cadet and fourth-class man, was as follows: In September Major Jackson returned from his summer leave of absence, was at his post preparing the second class for its course in applied mechanics. I was, in cadet parlance, "a plebe," had been in school about a month, and had heard from the old cadets wonderful stories of Major Jackson's strictness in adhering to discipline. One day about ten a. m., as I was going to my quarters from the class room, I was hailed by an officer, as I supposed, and called into a room on the second stoop of the barracks. There I found several cadets dressed in blue coats, with swords and sashes. The one who had hailed me said rather sharply to a secretary, who was seated by a table and busily writing, "Make out that requisition and send it by this plebe to the quartermaster, and you, fellow, take it to that office," pointing to a room. "Get the officer there to sign it; and then go up town and bring what it calls for. Be quick about it, I must have it here before dinner roll call." I touched my cap, as I had been taught when I spoke or was spoken to by an officer, and walked briskly to the door of the room that had been designated. I knocked; a cadet opened the door, and asked what I wanted. I informed him that I had a paper for the officer in there. He took in the situation, and allowed me to enter. I walked up to the officer, who was seated on a rostrum, looking at a book before him. Before he had time to raise his eyes, I had doffed my cap and was presenting my requisition in as polite a manner as I could assume. He took the paper, gave it a hasty glance, and, without changing countenance, pointed to a bench near him and ordered me to wait until he dismissed the class. The cadets who were not at the blackboards gave me significant looks, and with difficulty concealed their merriment.

I was woefully uncomfortable, but kept my seat until the recitation was concluded and class dismissed. The officer or instructor then addressed me with a kind, pleasant smile on his face, "Do you know what this paper contains?" I had risen from the seat I occupied and stood before him, cap in hand; in reply to his question, I told him how it came into my possession, and what I was ordered to do with it. That I did not know one-half the officers, and as the gentleman who gave me the order wore a blue coat, sash and sword, I supposed he had authority. He said he did not censure me at all, that the cadets were in the habit of quizzing the new-comers, and some one was playing a joke on me. The order I brought was a bogus requisition for high-heeled socks, pickled crow-bars, and a box of Spax's best cigars. I had not dared to open the order, and when advised of its absurd nature my embarrassment was painful. He observed this, and to relieve me, asked how long I had been at the Institute, from what part of the State I hailed, etc. His manner before the class was stern, he sat erect with his coat buttoned to the chin, but now he was kind and pleasant, and I shall never forget my first encounter with Stonewall Jackson.

"The Army Hike."

(With Apologies to Kipling.)

My throat is hot and dusty, like a bloomin' bale of hay,
My feet is sore and blistered, and my heels are worn away;
I am sticky, hot and dirty, with my patience worn to bits,
Yet the officers all wonder why the private up and quits.

It was "Route step, march,"
With dust upon your clothes,
Don't mind the perspiration,
That's a-drippin' from yer nose.
You're a howlin' thing of beauty,
When you hit the bloomin' pike,
And we're all of us dee-e-e-lighted,
When we go upon a hike.

My shoulder's lame and twisted from packing of my Krag,
My knees is tired and trembly, and I'm wobblin' like a jag;
My face is cracked and sunburned, and my 'thinker' even hurts,
Yet the officers all wonder why the enlisted man deserts.

It was "Full step, march,"
With yer haversack and roll,
Don't mind the heavy cartridge belt,
That's tearin' out yer soul.
You're a clinkin', clankin' jackass,
Like a pack train on a strike,
Oh, it's lovely in the army,
Since we all began to hike.

We don't mind a bit of marching when we see the reason why,
But for plain old-fashioned nonsense, this here hikin' takes the pie.
It is simply disgustin' and don't train a man a bit,
Yet the officers all wonder when a private hits the grit.

It was "Squads right march,"
Don't mind the dirt or heat,
You're a-waitin' most impatient,
Till the bugle sounds "Retreat,"
You're a rantin', ravin' idiot,
Like a derrish on a bike;
Isn't army life delightful
Now that we havy got to hike!

If you want to train a sprinter, once a week is not the way,
Start out easy, then increasin', add a little bit each day,
Then he's hard and used to goin', and 'the hikin' never hurts,
Yet the officers all wonder why the enlisted man deserts.

It was "Halt, dress up!"
I was glad, I must confess,
From my leggings to my helmet,
I was just a drippin' mess.
Just a wiggly, wobbly hombre,
Just a poor deserted tyke,
Oh, for fine and dandy trainin'
There is nothing like a hike.

—J. P. Ross in Washington Post.

THE SELF-DEPRECIATORY MAN.

Few Chances Come to One Who Distrusts Himself, Uncle Hiram Says.

"Henry," said Uncle Hiram to his hopeful young nephew, "I would not advise anybody to go around continually blowing his own horn. We tire of men who do that, and we are apt to think of them that that's all they can do, blow.

"On the other hand, Henry, never belittle yourself; never be selfdepreciatory. Don't have a poor opinion of yourself, but if you do have such an opinion don't express it. The man who blows his own horn may seldom be taken at his own valuation, but the self-depreciatory man almost invariably is.

"So never run yourself down or speak doubtfully of your own ability. If the boss is thinking of advancing you and he should say to you some day: 'Henry, we are thinking of trying you on this thing. Do you think you could handle this job?' you don't want to say: 'Well, I haven't had much experience yet in that way, and I really don't know whether I could do that or not.'

"You don't want to say anything like that, for if you do they'll be likely to think it over some more and end up by trying somebody else, taking a blower, maybe, who can't really do the work half as well as you could, but who's got self-confidence enough to say he can.

"You don't know what you can do till you try. Some men try and fail, but an astonishing number rise to occasions, develop strength or ability that others might never have thought them to possess."

Spencerville

There is a great amount of coughing going on in these parts at present.

John Means has been on the sick list the past two weeks.

The Joe B. Hailey farm was sold to a Mr. Smith, of Putman county, Ohio

The M. E. protracted meeting has closed. Over 100 were forward, and 60 some joined church which is a big improvement.

The Jacob Baker, deceased, sale will be the 25th inst. Merrit, the son, will stay on the farm. Mrs. Baker will go to Auburn.

Calvin Means is staying most of the time at Spencerville with his wife.

John Means sold Willis Dannells a bill of peach trees Saturday to go on his farm near Butler. All of them are Elbertas.

Strange some men will go over the county selling strawberries at $2 to $3 per 100. John Means is selling any kind you want for 50 cents per 100. Replaces all that die first year at 25 cents per 100. Anybody wanting plants should see him at Spencerville or Dolphus Dove at Butler. All orders given to Mr. Dove will be given prompt attention as he has authority to take orders.

Ad Kline seems to have lots of business at Fort Wayne lately. Wonder what Ad is looking after any way.

We noticed Gust Hafner of Butler in town the other day in a sleigh, but the ground was bare. Gust, you better have wheels on your sleigh.

Wonder when Lute Wasson is going to saw John Means' wood? His engine has been at the pole pile for three months and John and the boys have been cutting what wood they burn.

Lloyd Stevens has hired out to Willis Bishop again. This is the third year for Lloyd at the same place which says he must be a good hand.

We saw Will Watson at Auburn Saturday. Will can talk sheep yet just as good as ever. By the way Will has some mighty good sheep and he knows how to take care of them.

We understand the mumps are in town, as the clown said some belong to the "swell set" just now.

It Will Fall

"If the Republican party stands or falls by the Payne tariff bill, it will fall," says the Indianapolis Star (Rep.) As one faction in the Republican party stands by the Payne bill and another action refuses to stand by it, there is nothing for the party to do except to fall. And that is precisely what the country expects to happen. Not only that, but it is the very thing that should happen. Neither of the Republican factions represents the real sentiment of the people on the tariff questions Relief from trust denomination and robbery is the demand of the time, and this will not come from either the standpatters or the insurgents, both of whom avow eternal fealty to the doctrine that it is proper to enact a law whereby a few persons are enabled to tax all the rest for their own private profit.

A prohibition convention will be held at Auburn, March 4th, for the purpose of electing their county ticket Eugene Chaffin of Chicago will be the speaker for the day.

Revival meeting are in progress at the Church of God. A good interest is manifested. Service every evening during the week at 7:30. Everybody is invited. H. G. Herendeen, pastor.

M F. Creager was at Kendallville, Wednesday, on business.

Ora Knisley is no better at this writing.

Miss Ester Noragon, who has been on the sick list, is some better.

The Ladies Aid society of the M. E. church gave a missionary tea at the home of Mrs. George Vernier last Friday afternoon. A good time was enjoyed by all.

Charles Noragon has been having a hard tussle with the grippe, and while his father, Samuel Noragon, has been laid up with the rheumatism, the other member of the firm of Noragon & Sons, has been so busy at the elavater that his pet cat runs out of the back door whenever she sees him coming towards the house. We hope to see them both around soon.

The Ladies' Bible Class met Wednesday evening. Feb 23, with Mrs E C Miller. At 5:30 the ladies sat down to a three course dinner to which all did justice. On the table we found "one lone cherry tree" that had withstood the hatchet weilded by George Washington, and flags that showed victory for each one conquered. The lesson was presented by Mrs. Jones and was very instructive. Mrs. Downey, a former member of the class, was guest of honor. This was the first meeting for the new officers to fill their respective offices.

Earl Coe of Auburn, the son of the caunty superitendent Coe, was in the city, Wednesday, enroute to Grabill

Mesdames Boyle, Potter, and Long entertained forty ladies at a twelve o'clock dinner Saturday, February 19, at the home of Mrs. Boyle. A typical Martha Washington received the guests and escorted them to the dining-room where a four course dinner was served The rooms were decorated with flags and potted plants. The out-of-town guests were Mrs. McKenn of Fort Wayne, Mrs Anna Silvers and Mrs Blaine Snepp of Auburn. At a late hour the guests departed thanking the hostesses for a very pleasant time.

SPELLING CONTEST IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF COUNTY

In accordance with plans made early in the school year a spelling contest will be held in the public schools. Mr. Charles Eckhart offered to the pupil in the public schools who could prove to be the best speller a prize of $25 in gold

The plans of execution are as follows: Each school corporation will be entitled to three delegates to meet at Auburn, Saturday, March 5, to make the final contest. First, however, each school in the county will hold a spelling match or contest and determine three from that particular school and the schools will then hold a joint meeting and contest for the three delegates for the county meeting. The township, town and city contests must be held some time prior to March 5, in order that the delegates from each school corporation may be determined.

Efforts are now being made to offer in connection with the first prize offered by Mr. Eckhart, a second and perhaps a third prize.

The meeting in Auburn will be held at 1:30 p. m, the place to be determined later. It will be announced through the press and the township trustees so that teachers and persons interested may know.

Respectfully,
H. E. Coe, County Supt.

Cardui is advertised and sold by its loving friends. The lady who advised Mrs. Mirse to take Cardui, had herself been cured of serious female trouble, by Cardui, so she knew what Cardui would do.

If Cardui cured Mrs. Cain and Mrs. Mirse, it surely will cure you too. Won't you try it? Please do.

THE SKIPPER'S WHITE LIE.

What Happened at Night and What the Passenger Was Told.

It was a dirty night, to use a sailor's phrase, and the talk in one corner of the smoking room drifted to events at sea and the childlike faith that passengers repose in navigators.

Said the scientist who had been collecting specimens on a coral reef:

"I've often heard men and women say they felt so safe with Captain So-and-so, and I've wondered, too, whether their sense of security would still be retained if these favored travelers knew exactly what happened on shipboard during a voyage. For my own part, I have more confidence than ever in a captain of my acquaintance since I learned that he could tell a white lie when it was necessary to calm the fears of a nervous traveler. It so happened that one foggy night I was awakened by the sudden stoppage and reversal of the engines. I jumped out of my bunk, went on deck and was told by the second officer that we had had a narrow squeeze. It appeared that we had nearly run down a schooner as she silently crossed our bows and disappeared into the haze.

"Next morning a woman passenger who sat at the captain's table asked him whether the engines had been stopped and reversed, and he replied: 'Yes; we sometimes do this to test the engineer's watch and see if our machinery is in proper order. We do it at night so as to create no excitement.' Then he got the woman to describe what she had heard and asked her, 'Did you find much time between the stopping and reversing?'

"'No,' she replied.

"'Then,' said the skipper, 'that showed how well everything was working, did it not?'

"When I got the skipper's ear I told him confidentially that I didn't think the schooner's engines had worked as well as ours, and he remarked that it might have been worse. Whether he meant the lie or the incident I didn't inquire, but I suspect it wasn't the lie."—New York Post.

LAW OF GRAVITY VIOLATED.

Conditions Under Which Water Actually Flows Upward.

"Water seeks its level" is an expression heard so frequently as to be almost trite, and yet the law has its exceptions. There are conditions under which water actually flows upward and rises above its source. If a glass tube be dipped into water the column inside will be above the level of the surrounding surface. Moreover, if a tube of half the diameter be substituted the column doubles its height. The water creeps along the inside of the tube, owing to the adhesion, and forms a cup shaped depression at the top.

An explanation is not difficult. It can be proved mathematically that if the diameter of a circle be diminished one-half the circumference is also reduced to that extent, while the area is one-fourth of its former value. The circumference of the column of water being reduced one-half, its contact with the glass, and hence the adhesive force, is also diminished to that extent, while the cross section, and hence the weight, is decreased to a fourth of what it was before. Therefore the second column can be twice the height of the first without exceeding the lifting power.

Remarkable as the underlying principles of this phenomenon undoubtedly are, nature made use of them long before man made their discovery. Every tree and flower adds its testimony. The core of a tree or plant, instead of being a single open channel, consists of a spongelike substance containing many miniature tunnels, through which the sap and moisture collected by the roots flow upward in small rivulets, rising higher and higher in sheer defiance of the great law of gravity.—St. Louis Republic.

Sense of Danger.

Dr. Waldo of London holds that people should develop a sixth sense to inform them of the approach of danger in the streets. Lafcadio Hearn once said: "While in a crowd I seldom look at faces. My intuition is almost infallible, like that blind faculty by which in absolute darkness one becomes aware of the proximity of bulky objects without touching them. If I hesitate to obey it a collision is the inevitable consequence. What pilots one quickly and safely through a thick press is not conscious observation at all, but unreasoning intuitive perception."

A Sight Worth Paying For.

The cab, drawn by a weary looking horse, came to a standstill opposite a public house. As the driver was preparing to descend a small boy ran up with, "'Old yer 'orse, guv'nor?"

"'Old my 'orse? Look 'ere, my lad, Ah'll give yer a bob if it runs away."—Manchester Guardian.

His Contribution.

"Have you ever done anything for the good of the community?" asked the solid citizen.

"Yes," replied the weary wayfarer; "I've just done thirty days."—Philadelphia Record.

The Very Latest.

"Nice car."

"Yes."

"Is it the latest thing in cars?"

"I guess so. It has never got me anywhere on time yet."—Houston Post.

Eat What

You want of the food you need Kodol will digest it.

You need a sufficient amount of good wholesome food and more than this you need to fully digest it.

Else you can't gain strength, nor can you strengthen your stomach if it is weak.

You must eat in order to live and maintain strength.

You must not diet, because the body requires that you eat a sufficient amount of food regularly.

But this food must be digested, and it must be digested thoroughly.

When the stomach can't do it, you must take something that will help the stomach.

The proper way to do is to eat what you want, and let Kodol digest the food.

Nothing else can do this. When the stomach is weak it needs help; you must help it by giving it rest, and Kodol will do that.

Our Guarantee

Go to your druggist today, and purchase a dollar bottle, and if you can honestly say, that you did not receive any benefits from it, after using the entire bottle, the druggist will refund your money to you without question or delay.

We will pay the druggist the price of the bottle purchased by you.

This offer applies to the large bottle only and to but one in a family.

We could not afford to make such an offer, unless we positively knew what Kodol will do for you.

It would bankrupt us.

Nervous Prostration

"I suffered so with Nervous Prostration that I thought there was no use trying to get well. A friend recommended Dr. Miles' Nervine, and although skeptical at first, I soon found myself recovering, and am to-day well."

MRS. D. I. JONES,
5800 Broadway, Cleveland, O.

Much sickness is of nervous origin. It's the nerves that make the heart force the blood through the veins, the lungs take in oxygen, the stomach digest food, the liver secrete bile and the kidneys filter the blood. If any of these organs are weak, it is the fault of the nerves through which they get their strength. Dr. Miles' Nervine is a specific for the nerves. It soothes the irritation and assists in the generation of nerve force. Therefore you can hardly miss it if you take Dr. Miles' Nervine when sick. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

GUN COTTON.

A Peculiar Characteristic of This Terrible Explosive.

Many and odd are the materials entering into the manufacture of modern explosives, but perhaps the most interesting of all these elements of destruction as well as the simplest is gun cotton. The gun cotton manufacturing industry is large, as enormous quantities are used in the charging of torpedoes and for similar purposes.

The base of gun cotton is pure raw cotton or even cotton waste, such as is used to clean machinery. This is steeped in a solution of one part of nitric and three parts of sulphuric acid. It is the former ingredient that renders the mass explosive, the sulphuric acid being used merely to absorb all moisture, thus permitting the nitric acid to combine more readily with the cellulose of the cotton.

After being soaked for several hours in the solution described the cotton is passed between rollers to expel all nonabsorbed acid, a process carried to completion by washing the cotton in clear water. This washing process is a long one, requiring machinery which reduces the cotton to a mass resembling paper pulp. Should any nonabsorbed acid be allowed to remain it would decompose the cotton.

If the explosive is to be used after the manner of powder it is still further pulverized and then thoroughly dried, but if intended for torpedoes it is pressed into cakes of various shapes and sizes—disk shaped, cylindrical, flat squares and cubes. When not compressed gun cotton is very light, as light as ordinary batting.

A peculiar characteristic of this terrible explosive is that a brick of it when wet may be placed on a bed of hot coals, and as the moisture dries out the cotton will flake and burn quietly. If dry originally, however, the gun cotton will explode with terrible force at about 320 degrees of heat.

In general it is the custom to explode gun cotton by detonation or an intense shock instead of by heat. In a torpedo the explosive charge is wet, this wet cotton being exploded by means of dry cotton in a tube, this having been fired by a cap of fulminate of mercury, the cap itself having been fired by the impact of the torpedo against the target.—Harper's Weekly.

Mrs. Kiplinger Entertains

One of the most pleasant of luncheons was given by Mrs. F. L. Kiplinger on Wednesday. Thirty five guests partook of the dainty luncheon prepared by the hostess. The rooms were very prettily decorated with marguerites and other spring flowers. Mrs. E. L. Fosdick, Mrs. F. E. Eckhart of Auburn, Mrs. J. S. Patterson of Garrett, and Mrs. G. K. Sturgis of Kendallville were out of town guests. A A floral contest was given in which Mrs. Coats received the prize, a beautiful Havilan jewel case, after which they indulged in a musical contest. At late hour the guests departed thanking their hostess for a pleasant afternoon.

CUPID'S PRANKS RECORDED HERE

Derrow---Bassett

A quiet wedding occurred at the home of Rev. I. N. Shilling on the evening of Feb 28, 1910, when Charles Derrow, of Wilmington township, and Miss Cora Bassett, of Concord township, both of DeKalb county, Indiana, were joined in the holy bonds of wedlock.

The young couple will farm for Edward Kraft the coming summer. May success crown their labors. Many will be the well wishes and congratulations of associates and acquaintances.

Cupid cut up another funny prank here last week when C. Frank Abram, proprietor of the Star Theatre, and Miss Mabel Oberlin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Oberlin, took the train for Auburn unbeknowings to the bride's parents secured license and were married. The bride's mother, as soon as she learned of the intentions of the young couple, telephoned Sheriff Thomas to prevent the ceremony. It was too late however as they had been to the home of a minister and the knot had been tied. The young people came home on the evening train and the groom took charge of his show, passing out the cigars between times. While the couple are both young in years, their experience has been of the kind that fits them for battling with the adversities of the world. Mr. Abrams is a young man with lots of ability and a genuine hustler. He has been supporting himselef and mother for sometime and has done much better than many a boy who has had more opportunities. While neither of these young folks are of age, and perhaps did mislead the clerk in getting licese, they are married now just as much as though they were a couple years older, and it is the duty of their friends to encourage and help them on their way.

The engagement of Editor R B. Wood of the Cromwell News and Miss Blanche Thomas of near Wolf Lake is announced. The wedding will be solemnized during the present month.

Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., oldest son of the former president of the United States, has won the hand of Miss Eleanor Butler Alexander, daughter of Mrs. Henry Addison Alexander of 42 West Forty-seventh street, New York. Their betrothal was announced by the mother of the bride-to-be. The wedding, which is to be celebrated on an elaborate scale, will be deferred until the arrival in America of the bridegroom's father next June.

The second elopement in Ft. Wayne within as many days developed last Sunday evening when Dr. and Mrs. Morse Harrod received a telegram announcing the marriage of their daughter, Miss Camilla, to Mr. Sidney H. Karn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Karn. The telegram was from Chicago and was signed "Sidney and Camilla." The Fort Wayne Journal said that was absoletely all the information they could get. Well, yes, that's about all that would do to print. The other elopement was Arthur Schreck and Miss Clara Bash.

Philomatheans Entertain

The Philomathean Circle which is composed mostly of the young matrons of the town gave their annual guest night on Friday evening at the pleasant home of Mrs. E. B. Dunten.

The house had put on a gala appearance in honor of our country's father, Old Glory being greatly in evidence. The members and their guests made a company of obout forty. The evening's program opened with a book contest, wherein each present wore something to represent some book. Besides being a unique and interesting game it served to break up all restraint, and by the time it was finished everyone was in fine spirits, Mrs. O. H. Downey being the winner of a dainty piece of pottery for guessing the greatest number of books. Next there was a cherry tree laden with gifts for all, each lady being blindfolded and given a miniature hatchet to chop off a gift. After the tree had suffered the loss of its fruit a transposed motto concerning George Washington was given for correction, in which Mrs. Clyde Blaker drew a candalabra.

An elegant two course supper was then served, with narcissus as favors. Funny mottoes were read at the table causing much laughter. Thus closed one of the most successful and enjoyable events of the season. The Philomathean ladies understand how to combine study with pleasure and are to be congratulated on their guest night.

A GUEST.

Remember I have bought the J. H. Latson barber shop on east side of Broadway and want to see all my old customers and many new ones. M. J. Harrigan. tf

SEED TESTING FOR INDIANA FARMERS

United States Department of Agriculture Co-operates With Purdue University

The Seed Laboratory of the Bureau of Plant Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, in co-operation with the Agricultural Experiment Station of Purdue University is establishing at LaFayette, a seed testing laboratory. This laboratory will furnish an opportunity for any one, either farmers or seedsmen to submit samples of seeds of agricultural crops, including clover, alfalfa, and grasses for examination as to the presence of obnoxious or other weed seeds, chaff or dirt. Samples of all kinds of seeds furnished will also be tested for germination.

Tests will be made in the order in which the samples are submitted and reports made immediately to the sender. Farmers are urged to obtain two or more samples of the kind of seeds they intend to sow and submit them for examination. They can then base their orders on the basis of the reports which will show them the seeding value of the various lots which they are offered.

Approximately two ounces of clover or one-half teacupful alfalfa and grass seeds, should be submitted for examination. About one-fourth pound of seeds of cereals should be sent for this purpose.

Each package should be marked with the name and address of the sender, and where more than one sample of seed is sent the packages should be numbered or identified in some way so that the sender can identify the reports. All samples for tests should be addressed to the Agricultural Extension Department, Purdue Experiment Station, LaFayette, Indiana,

G. I. CHRISTIE,
Superintendent Agricultural Extension.

A NEW $20,000 MODERN HOTEL

Is Needed in Butler---Should Be Built Before Sites Are All Taken

It seems to the HERALD that one of the greatest necessities in Butler at the present time is a modern hotel building. There is probably not a better location for a modern building and business of this kind in northeastern Indiana. That the patronage of the same would fully warrant and justify the proprietor and owner is neither guess work or idle supposition. And when it is generally conceded that it would be a paying investment and that the time has come when it is an actual necessity, the only wonder to many people is that some one does not step out with the necessary funds for a new $20,000 hotel. The HERALD ventures the assertion that with a modern and up-to-date hotel Butler would be the most sought town in this part of the state. Because of the advantages of the railroads commercial men would gather here from all parts of the country to show up and sell their goods. As it is they have no chance to show their samples, and while the hotels we have give them the very best that is possible under the circumstances, yet there is a demand for a building that can furnish modern hotel service where the patrons can have hot and cold water in each room, bath rooms, sample room, etc. Besides the patronage from the traveling public there would be the tourists, who instead of plowing through the city at thirty miles per hour, would stop for a rest, repairs, etc., leaving many dollars in the hands of our business men which at the present is being spent in some of the other towns either east or west of us.

More than that, instead of a few old shacks which is left standing, would rise the large brick structure, an ornament in place of an eyesore, thus beautifying our city, accommodating the public, and best of all paying the owners a large dividend. There are two or three splendid building sites in the heart of the city and perhaps if they are not taken within six months or a year for a hotel site something else will fill these places, and then when it is finally erected it will be in a secluded or out of the way part of the city.

We have faith, however, that this will not be the case, but that before many months roll by we may be permitted to look upon a large four or five story structure, with a large banner floating from the top with these words inscribed, "Hotel DeKalb."

CEMENT MIXER COMPANY ORGANIZE

The Butler Concrete Machinery Company of this city, who were represented at the big show at Chicago recently, are well pleased with the success of their exhibit.

Wednesday the stockholders met and elected the following board of directors:

L. C. Harding, T. A. Hoffman, Fred Countryman, F. W. Swantusch and L. C. Buehrer. They have filed papers of incorporation to the amount of $5,000. Mr. J. W. Miller went Tuesday to Detroit to purchase several new machines. They expect to manufacture several sizes of mixers and no doubt will find ready sale for these goods.

Scooped Again

Last week we rather scooped our competitor in giving a picture of the proposed new county court house It is the Record that gives the reliable, up-to-date news.—Record.

The HERALD don't care to use up valuable space with fake drawings of the court house. When it has been decided when it will be built, where it will be built and how much it is to cost then there is time for a drawing. But this isn't the first time Bro. Higley has scooped us. Some years ago when we worked for him and boarded with him he got up first one morning and put on our socks and that was the last we saw of them until they were worn out. That was another scoop.

Don't Break Down

Severe strains on the vital organs, like strains on machinery, cause breakdowns You can't over-tax stomach, liver, Kidneys, bowels, or nerves without serious danger to yourself. If you are weak or run-down, or under strain of any kind, take Electric Bitters the matchless, tonic medicine. Mrs. J. E. Van de Sande, of Kirkland, Ill., writes: "That I did not break down, while enduring a most severe strain, for three months, is due wholly to Electric Bitters." Use them and enjoy health and strength. As He Found.

Tennyson had just begun to write the "Charge of the Light Brigade."

"Half a league, half a league, Half a league onward——"

Then he stopped.

"Sounds a good deal like 'Off again, on again, gone again, Finnegan!'" he said, knitting his brows.

But he went ahead with it, and the poem made a decided hit.—Chicago Tribune.

Alas, white motties are a sign that the laundresses use Red Cross Ball Blue. Insist on it.

A QUEER WEDDING RING.

An African Tribe Whose Wives Wear a Heavy Brass Ornament.

Among the Bayanzi, who live for many miles along the upper Congo, there exists a strange custom which would seem to make life miserable for the married women. Brass rods, which are the favorite currency in the country, are welded into great rings around the necks of the wives. Many of these rings worn by the women whose husbands are well-to-do weigh as much as 20 pounds, and this burden must be carried around by the poor women as long as they live.

Frequently one sees a woman whose neck is raw and sore under the heavy weight, and in places the skin is rubbed off. This is a sure sign that the ring has been recently welded around her neck, for after a time the skin becomes calloused, and then the strange ornament produces no abrasion. But the weight is an inconvenience; they never get used to it, and it is a perpetual tax upon their energies. In every group of women may be seen a number who are supporting the rings with their hands, and thus for a time relieving their weary shoulders of the heavy burdens.

It may be said that with every movement of their bodies the rings give discomfort. Once on, it is no easy matter to get them off. The natives have no such thing as a file, and though they can hammer a lot of brass rods into one, it is very difficult for them to cut the thick mass of metal in two. Women who increase largely in flesh after the rings have been fastened on their necks are in danger of strangling to death, and instances of this sort have been known to occur. Yet these women regard the cumbrous ornament with pride, imagine that it enhances their importance and beauty, and wear the burden with light hearts.

GET POWER.

The Supply Comes from Food.

If we get power from food, why not strive to get all the power we can? That is only possible by use of skillfully selected food that exactly fits the requirements of the body.

Poor fuel makes a poor fire and a poor fire is not a good steam producer.

"From not knowing how to select the right food to fit my needs, I suffered grievously for a long time from stomach troubles," writes a lady from a little town in Missouri.

"It seemed as if I would never be able to find out the sort of food that was best for me. Hardly anything that I could eat would stay on my stomach. Every attempt gave me heartburn and filled my stomach with gas. I got thinner and thinner until I literally became a living skeleton and in time was compelled to keep to my bed.

"A few months ago I was persuaded to try Grape-Nuts food, and it had such good effect from the very beginning that I have kept up its use ever since. I was surprised at the ease with which I digested it. It proved to be just what I needed.

"All my unpleasant symptoms, the heartburn, the inflated feeling which gave me so much pain disappeared. My weight gradually increased from 98 to 116 pounds, my figure rounded out, my strength came back, and I am now able to do my housework and enjoy it. Grape-Nuts did it."

A ten days' trial will show anyone some facts about food.

Look in pkgs. for the little book, "The Road to Wellville." "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

What is the matter with the churches? For several years there has been a growing belief that the Christian church is losing its power, that Christianity is on the decline, that fewer men and women are entering the church, and those that do are taking less interest in its work; that religious life and religious influence are but shadows of a former substance. Of late this belief has seemed to grow stronger, fed by magazine articles and the pessimistic if not cynical utterances of some religious leaders. Serious and intelligent people in all parts of the country are accepting the theory as a condition, and are bewailing the approaching end of Christian institutions.

What are the facts in the case? The St. Louis Globe-Democrat, believing this to be a vital question, asked Mr. E. M. Camp of New York to supply the answer. Probably no man in America is better qualified for such a task than Mr. Camp. He is manager of the Church News Association, and for many years it has been his business to find out what the churches—all the churches—are doing. His knowledge of church conditions is not confined to a single denomination; it includes every sect and creed, Catholic as well as Protestant, and it is as unbiased as it is broad. Mr. Camp was asked to present facts, not theories. He was asked to present figures showing the increase or decrease in church membership in proportion to population; the increase or decrease in the number of churches; the increase or decrease in the amount of money contributed for church support; the increase or decrease in church activities. The increase or decrease in church work by laymen. In the exhaustive article printed herewith Mr. Camp supplies this information and much more. And he shows conclusively that not only is the Christian church not retrograding, but that it is moving forward and upward faster than ever before. Mr. Camp says:

Some years before the breaking out of the War of 1812, Rev. Jay Y. Hammond, a New England evangelist, traveled through the central counties of New York until he reached the shores of Lake Erie, and then went westward nearly a hundred miles into that panhandle of Pennsylvania for which the mistakes of early surveyors are responsible. He was a great evangelist, was this same Mr. Hammond. He traveled on horseback, of course, when he did not travel on foot, and he preached in the various preaching places, many of which had been provided by these transplanted New Englanders, although they were without regular ministers to fill them.

A Positive Religion.

A year or two after Perry's victory Evangelist Hammond came through the region again. But he had somehow lost his grip. His faith had weakened in spots. He was not quite as sure as formerly about the hell fire. He did not express doubts about the efficacy of the blood of Christ to cleanse from sin, but some of his hearers thought he meant to express them, or at least that he held them.

What was the real situation? Why, nothing more than that a preacher who had for years dominated religious sentiment lost his message in part, his faith in larger part, and began to fail. People no longer listened to him. Others came in, and he did not keep up with the profession. In short, he fell behind. He reasoned, though, that everything was failing because he was. He was unable to distinguish himself from his cause. And the man, once so useful, died and was buried in the belief that he had been in at what was almost the finish of the Christian cause in America!

Rev. Dr. William S. Rainsford, an Englishman imported into this country by way of Canada, did a wonderful work in St. George's Episcopal parish, New York. From a losing proposition he built up something that came to be known from one end of the country to the other. Five thousand persons owned membership in it, and still do. But after some years the power of Dr. Rainsford began to wane. Ill health finally developed and resignation followed. There is no one to be blamed. But during the three or four years between the beginning of the end and its final consummation Dr. Rainsford wrote annually in St. George's Year Book about the failure of the Christian message. He was unable to see that it was only himself and his plans that were falling behind, or at least not keeping up with what he fondly hoped they might grow to. He imagined St. George's parish to be all America, all the world.

Every few years the cry breaks out that the churches are failing in their work. Eminent men, failing in their own work, declare everything to be on the down-grade. Others take up the cry, and the result is, in the minds of those who make the charges, at least, that the churches are at the bar. All of the victories of the Christian faith seem to go for naught. Some people who never went to church in their lives are pointed to as not going now, and the lament is heard that all, or nearly all, is lost. The past three or four years have been very prolific in these wails. The explanation for them is easy. There have been tremendous changes, especially in the East, where public opinion is made, partly from the incoming of foreigners and partly through commercial pressure, due to enormous accumulation of wealth.

Increase of Membership.

Laying arguments aside, there are certain facts in the present situation regarding Christianity in America. It is fair to both sides to state these facts. Begin with those relating to membership and to money, and let it be stated that religious statistics are far more accurately kept to-day than ever before. If statistics of twenty, fifty, 100 years ago, are to be relied upon, those made now are far more worthy of confidence. The United States Government took a hand in the making of religious statistics recently. Here is what the government finds:

"Of the total estimated population of continental United States in 1906, 39.1 per cent, or not quite two-fifths, were reported as church members. The proportion of the population included within the churches was larger by 6.4 per cent in 1906 than in 1890."

The Roman Catholic, the Methodist Episcopal, the Baptist, the Presbyterian, the Lutheran, the Disciples of Christ, the Congregational, the Protestant Episcopal and the Reformed churches are growing in membership. Of these, the Roman Catholic, the Presbyterian, the Protestant Episcopal, the Lutheran and the Disciples of Christ had phenomenal growths last year, and they have had for a number of years. All history has not presented such a growth in a century as that of the Disciples of Christ—viz., from nothing to 1,230,000 members. The Episcopal church had its largest year last year, according to figures just published. In 1890 it passed its 500,000 mark in membership. It will pass its 1,000,000 in 1912, showing as large growth in twenty-two years last past as during the nearly 300 years from 1607 down to 1890. Never mind why. These are the facts. Immigration helps the Roman Catholics and the Lutherans, it is true, but it also helps the populations and brings added burdens to the churches.

Christians Paying More.

One may say that these memberships, even if real, are sentimental. It costs $300,000,000 a year to maintain all of the Christian churches of America. And it never cost so much as it did last year. Christians are paying this money. Others are not doing so. The amount invested in churches in America in 1906 was exactly twice that of 1890. Double the value in sixteen years. In America it is the religious body that not only grows in membership, but also maintains its per capita gifts. For years Episcopalians have given on an average almost exactly $20. It is the highest average of any Christian body in the world. As has been shown, its membership almost doubled within the last fifteen years. Yet last year a division of its total gifts, all causes, but its communicants, will get $20 for quotient as heretofore. America has also the religious body giving the next highest sum per member—the Presbyterian, whose average is maintained at $16.50, and stood at that last year, in spite of the fact that its membership growth was the largest of any single year in its history.

Individual churches in the large Eastern cities have annual gifts that outstrip in amount anything else anywhere. Paris, Berlin, London, even Rome, do not for a moment compare with these gifts. For example, London has the largest single churches, in point of annual receipts, of any other city save American ones. Christian churches are meant, of course. A London church with an annual income of $15,000 is counted large. In New York there are eighteen churches that give more than $15,000 each to foreign missions alone. A score of single churches have incomes exceeding $50,000 each, and half a dozen run up to $200,000 and even more. These are not incomes from endowments, but gifts from the people who worship in their pews, gifts that are repeated year after year, and not only repeated, but increased. New York does not stand alone. The income of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and other single churches have increased phenomenally within the past decade.

Growth of Foreign Missions.

It may be argued that these gifts are for the private glory and public advantage of the people who worship in the churches named. The arguments rest on nothing, but grant them for the moment, and turn to foreign missions. Surely nobody in America can gain anything to his personal advantage by helping to spread the Gospel in India, in China, in Japan, in the islands of the seas. He cannot be charged with self-seeking in so doing. What is the record? The growth of gifts to foreign missions last year was $1,767,000, and it reached in total amount high-water mark of $24,500,000. Of this sum American and Canadian gifts are 11 per cent, or $4,256,000, the largest sum ever given in a single year by Christians of the countries named.

If anybody thinks foreign missions are supported for private advantage, let him take the situation last year regarding hospitals in New York City. Every hospital in New York, with the possible exception of the municipal institutions, owes its existence to religious, Christian or Hebrew, influence. It cost last year to maintain these hospitals $3,557,000. Nobody ever before knew such altruism. There is income from endowments amounting to $581,000, and from pay patients of $989,000. The city gives $458,000, but $1,545,000 was given by private persons. Outsiders gave some of it? If those who were ill depended upon people outside of the churches to help them they would fare badly indeed.

If hospitals, inspired and erected by religion, be religious institutions that must be supported by the projectors, and the 60 per cent of the population are relieved of obligation, what can be said in the case of a San Francisco earthquake, or a Galveston flood, or an India famine? From 70 to 90 per cent of all moneys contributed to these causes is contributed by Christian people. What obligations to a Messina earthquake sufferer rested upon an American Christian that did not rest also upon an American who does not admit Christianity?

There is now sweeping over this country the greatest missionary campaign America has ever known. It was started by business men. It is the laymen's missionary movement, and it is in aid, primarily, of work in Africa, Asia, South America, to spread the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The millions who are coming here, Jews, Turks and everybody else, to be made over into American citizens—is it not a grave problem? And then young men for the ministry. There are not enough men volunteering. What can be done? What is the matter? Short-handed, the churches cannot make the progress they ought to make. With the enormous increase in wealth, nobody pretends to think that the millions given to support churches, hospitals, schools, missions and benevolence is adequate. Why, the $300,000,000 which supports all of the Christian churches of America this year is not nearly so large as men of America spend annually for cigars. As for the whisky bill, the automobile bill and hundreds of other bills, they, singly or together, exceed the Christian bill many fold. It is a pitiable sum in comparison that America is sending to Asia and Africa, the America that is so richly blessed of God, and is so strong and powerful. We have not begun to perform our Christian duty.

Singly, the Protestant bodies are attacking the problem of the workingman. That is, they are trying to find out what the workingman wants, what are the grounds for his complaint against them, whether he was ever in the churches and has left them, or whether he is simply putting up excuses for not performing his religious duty along with other people.

A cure for the "come" church is a "go" one, viz.: One wherein the men are required to go each week and tell some other man at least one thing their preacher said on Sunday. Failing to do so, they might be put on their conscience not to come again for more wisdom from the preacher. It may even be that Christianity will wholly reverse the plan, and instead of "come" churches, will have "go" ones. Indeed, there are those, and they are not few in number, who new hold the old way to be sadly defective, and that the new and better one, viz., the "go" church, to be as much in advance over the old or present one as the new Utah Dreadnaught is over the Half Moon.

FAMOUS EIFFEL TOWER IN PARIS.

The Eiffel tower in Paris, which is said to have been in danger of collapse owing to floods, is one of the famous structures of the world. It was built for the exposition of 1889 by the engineer whose name it bears, and is the tallest structure on earth, its height being 1,092 feet. Its base covers two and one-half acres of ground. There are three platforms in the structure, with an elevator to the upper one, but with the exception of being a curio, the affair has been something of a failure. It was to have done wonders for the scientific world with its observatory, but these wonders have not materialized, for the tower rocks in a high wind, and even as a social resort (each platform, as all visitors to Paris know, caters for amusement) it has not proved a great success.

Don't point your gun toward your dog.

Don't rest the muzzle of your gun on your toes.

Don't kill game wantonly. Stop when you have all you need.

Don't get rattled. Keep cool, no matter how big the game you are after.

Don't shoot toward houses or fields with long range guns when you are anywhere near them.

Don't shoot even approximately in the direction of any one in the woods, as a glancing bullet may strike them quite a bit to one side of the object at which you aim.

Don't forget that the smaller a rifle or shotgun the more steady you must hold it when you shoot. It takes a mighty good shot to do long range shooting with a small target rifle.

Two of a Kind.

There is something about the character of mules that makes their owners at times almost equally stubborn. In the Washington Star this dialogue concerning one if not two such animals is reported:

"Why don't you get rid of that mule?"

"Well, suh," answered Erastus Pinkley, "I hates to give in. If I was to trade that mule off he'd regard it as a personal victory. He's been tryin' foh de las' six weeks to get rid o' me."

OLD WISCONSIN FARM

First Settlement in Dane County Was Made by Ebenezer Bingham in 1828.

HIS HOUSE ONCE A TAVERN.

Present Manager College Bred and Believes in the Modern Methods of Farming.

The oldest and most historic farm in Dane County is the Brigham place, a mile east of this village, says a dispatch from Blue Mound, Wis., to the New York Herald. It is a remarkable fact, too, that while the oldest farm in the county, it never has passed out of the hands of the family since first acquired.

The home is on the famous old military road laid out from Milwaukee to Prairie du Chien in pioneer days and which in the main follows the southern water shed of Wisconsin. In early days it witnessed far more travel than at present and the Brigham tavern, kept by Ebenezer Brigham, was a famous and popular hostelry.

The interest of the visitor is divided between the historic associations of the place and the progressive methods employed in its management. Here it was that the first permanent settlement within the limits of the present Dane County was made by Ebenezer Brigham in 1828. The site of the original log cabin is now marked by a comfortable frame farmhouse, the third building on the historic site.

Ebenezer Brigham was quite a character in the early day history of the state. He was born in Massachusetts April 28, 1789; came west, attracted by the lead mines at Galena. In 1827 he visited Platteville and in the spring of 1828 settled at Blue Mounds.

The Brigham cabin was isolated enough. The nearest settlement was at Dodgeville, twenty-five miles west. To the east the nearest was the cabin of Solomon Juneau, at the mouth of the Milwaukee river; to the northeast Green Bay; to the southeast the village of Chicago. Among the Indian villages mentioned at the time were one at the mouth of Texas creek and one on the hill between Lakes Morgan and Waubesa. Brigham had to haul his load to Galena, Chicago or Green Bay. A trip to Chicago then consumed fifteen days one way with a load.

Brigham and others built a fort on the prairie below the mounds, about a mile and a half from his cabin. This structure was to prove of practical value during the Black Hawk war later on. In this war there was some sharp fighting around this fort and four white men were killed.

Charles Ilsley Brigham, the present manager of the farm, is a grandnephew of the "original Ebenezer" and grew up in Milwaukee. He was graduated from the university in 1885, being a strong student and "honor man." About twenty years ago he took charge of the Blue Mounds farm. To equip himself the better for his calling he later took a course in the University Agricultural College and has been in touch with institute and allied work much since he began farming. At present he thinks dairying the most profitable line of work on his particular place and he has fifty cows, all of Jersey stock.

GIBRALTAR, MIGHTIEST OF FORTRESSES.

An enemy's fleet could be sent to the bottom before getting within five miles of Gibraltar; not even a torpedo boat could succeed in entering the bay unobserved on the blackest night. That sums up the opinions of the most eminent naval experts as to the impregnability of the world's greatest fortress, says Cassell's Saturday Journal.

Gibraltar never sleeps. By day and night two perfectly equipped signal stations, proudly flaunting Britain's flag of ownership, sweep the seas around to a distance of fifteen miles on a clear day, instantly reporting the coming and going of each vessel.

Modern "needle" guns, the finest in Europe, are installed on all the most prominent points. They are unpeachable from the sea, even as they are undiscernible, owing to the skill with which they are painted and draped to match the surrounding vegetation, while huge screens drop automatically before them as each shell is fired. They have a range of fifteen miles, and could drop shells in Ceuta, in Africa, opposite, quite comfortably. One gun weighs 110 tons and is capable of throwing a shell weighing three-quarters of a ton. In that marvel of engineering under great difficulties, the galleries are concealed guns for every day in the year.

These galleries are divided into three sections, entry to which is guarded, while one is closed even to high officers, containing preserved stores, munitions of war, rain water (for Gibraltar has no springs), and a complete condensing plant—all calculated to outlast a siege of seven years.

The firing is the most mathematically perfect imaginable. The surrounding waters are mapped out into squares, upon which certain guns are kept, ready trained, so that it is almost impossible to miss.

Faith in the American People.

Belief that there is continuous increase of this good brand of materialistic wisdom, and confidence in its certain consequences, are not idle dreams of optimistic visionaries, says E. A. Van Valkenburg in Success Magazine. They are certainties foreshadowed, not to the novices, but to the shrewdest of the scarred experts in the game of practical politics. They constitute the political creed of the most useful citizen in America to-day—the short-term pessimists who are long-distance optimists.

These are the true teachers of the time. These are the men who see the rottenness cankering the whole social and business fabric of our modern civilization, but who never for a moment are disheartened, because they know the nature of the plain, everyday, average American; and, by grace of that knowledge, the certainty has been given them of the ultimate triumph in this nation of right ideas and ideals. They propose to cleanse what foulness exists, and not to ignore nor to gild it. For they are not deluded by the ancient lie that "whatever is is right."

Yes.

"I have employed that pretty maid you had."

"Oh; I am so glad!"

"Why did she leave your employment?"

"On my husband's account."

"Didn't she like him?"

"Yes."—Houston Post.

Fitzgerald's Summary.

Edward Fitzgerald, the translator of the Persian poet, Omar Khayyam, was a more or less genial opponent of matrimony as a state.

One day he said to his friend, Miss Ellen Churchyard of Woodbridge:

"Do you know, Nell, what marriage is?"

Miss Churchyard thought not.

"Then I'll tell you," said he. "Marriage is standing at one's desk, nicely settled to work, when a great big bonnet pushes in at the door and asks you to go for a walk with it."

BURGLARS ROB A WOMAN.

Bound, gagged and threatened by the revolvers of two masked bandits, Mrs. Lena Steadman, of Chicago, was forced to witness the ransacking of her home. Mrs. Steadman was discovered by her son, George, 16 years old, half an hour after the departure of the thieves. She was nearly unconscious, and when liberated became hysterical. The burglars appeared at her door shortly after 10 o'clock and when she opened in response to their rap forced an entrance. After having bound Mrs. Steadman the robbers searched until they found $1,000 which was hidden in a bureau drawer.

For Sprains

Sloan's Liniment is the best remedy for sprains and bruises.

It quiets the pain at once, and can be applied to the tenderest part without hurting because it doesn't need to be rubbed—all you have to do is to lay it on lightly. It is a powerful preparation and penetrates instantly—relieves any inflammation and congestion, and reduces the swelling.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. L. Roland, Bishop of Scranton, Pa. says:—"On the 7th of this present month, as I was leaving the building at noon for lunch, I slipped and fell, spraining my wrist. I returned in the afternoon, and at four o'clock I could not hold a pencil in my hand. I returned home later and purchased a bottle of and used it five or six times before I went to bed, and the next day I was able to go to work and use my hand as usual."

Sloan's Liniment is an excellent antiseptic and germ killer—heals cuts, burns, wounds and contusions, and will draw the poison from sting of poisonous insects.

Poor Handwriting.

Rufus Choate is said to have been as bad a writer as Horace Greeley. A new house of Mr. Choate's being under construction, he had arranged to obtain designs for an ornamental chimney piece from a certain quarter. There was a long delay, but at last there came a letter from Choate, which was really an intimation that he had been unable so far to obtain those designs. But the workmen at once began to construct the chimney-piece. Choate's letter had been understood as a sketch of it. Parallel with this is the legend that one of Napoleon's letters home from Poland was interpreted as a sketch map of the field of the campaign.

"After you've been two weeks in the house with one of these terrible handy men that ask their wives to be sure to wipe between the tines of the forks and that know just how much raising bread ought to have and how to hang out a wash so each piece will get the best sun it's a real joy to get back to the ordinary kind of man. Yes, 'tis so!" Mrs. Gregg finished with much emphasis. "I want a man who should have sense about the things he's meant to have sense about, but when it comes to keeping house I like him real helpless, the way the Lord planned to have him!"—Youth's Companion.

Attention Sick Women

If you had positive proof that a certain remedy for female ills had made many remarkable cures, would you not feel like trying it?

If during the last thirty years we have not succeeded in convincing every fair-minded woman that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured thousands and thousands of women of the ills peculiar to their sex, then we long for an opportunity to do so by direct correspondence. Meanwhile read the following letters which we guarantee to be genuine and truthful.

Hudson, Ohio.—"I suffered for a long time from a weakness, inflammation, dreadful pains each month and suppression. I had been doctoring and receiving only temporary relief, when a friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so, and wrote to you for advice. I have faithfully followed your directions and now, after taking only five bottles of the Vegetable Compound, I have every reason to believe I am a well woman. I give you full permission to use my testimonial." —Mrs. Lena Carmocino, Hudson, Ohio. R. F. D. No. 7.

St. Regis Falls, N. Y.—"Two years ago I was so bad that I had to take to my bed every month, and it would last from two to three weeks. I wrote to you for advice and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in dry form. I am happy to say that I am cured, thanks to your medicine and good advice. You may use my letter for the good of others." —Mrs. J. H. Breyere, St. Regis Falls, N. Y.

There is absolutely no doubt about the ability of this grand old remedy, made from the roots and herbs of our fields, to cure female diseases. We possess volumes of proof of this fact, enough to convince the most skeptical.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

FASHION HINTS

Long lines and extreme simplicity make this charming gown of chifon velvet. A heavy silk mesh insertion four inches wide, is the only trimming used.

Our Lucky Age.

"Speaking of the Wright brothers, it's a good thing for people who like to travel by water that Fulton lived a good many years ago."

"Why that?"

"He would undoubtedly be trying to get an injunction on all the boats afloat."—Boston Herald.

A good honest remedy for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Sore Throat is Hamlins Wizard Oil. Nothing will so quickly drive out all pain and inflammation.

Genuine Alarm.

"Madam, your pet dog bit my little boy in the face this morning."

"Oh, you alarm me! Had your little boy's face been antiseptically washed?"

"Of course not. I——"

"Good heavsn, woman! How could you let the little darling run such a risk! James, telephone at once for the veterinarian."—Baltimore American.

An Unexpected Promotion.

Benny's intellectual achievements were far from notable, but in the eyes of his small sister he was none the less a wonderful personage. She keenly resented allusions to his lengthy stay in the last desk row at school, although Benny himself took quite a cheerful and philosophic view of the matter.

One afternoon the little girl appeared, flushed and panting, in the library doorway.

"Daddy," she exclaimed, "you promised Benny a dollar when he got moved off the bottom bench, and now he's up in the next row with me and—" Benny himself entered just then, in his usual unconcerned way.

"Why, what's this I hear, my son?" his father welcomed him. "I'm very glad you've worked your way up—" The boy started uncomprehendingly. "Elsie says you're in the second row now," his father continued, in explanation.

"Course!" returned the youngster, imperturbably. "We're all in the second row—the bottom bench's being painted."

It Worked Thus.

Mr. Bjones, of East Cleveland, explained it to us this way:

"I thought my wife might be afraid of tramps and porch-climbers and such, so I bought her a watch-dog. He was a fierce-looking bull, and I thought he'd about fill the bill.

"I got him in the morning, and I had him sent right out to the house. When I got home that night there was one of the toughest-looking hoboes you ever saw, sitting on the porch.

"'What in thunder are you doing here?' I asked.

"'Well, boss,' says he, 'I come lookin' fer a handout, and yer lady give me 50 cents to stick around and protect her from dat dog o' yours. He's li'ble to eat 'er up any minute!'"

To Make Farm Smokehouse.

What I have found to be a good smokehouse for curing 75 to 100 hams should be about 12x14 feet. Build a good, strong frame and fill the space between the siding and ceiling with soft brick; writes A. C. Wharton in American Agriculturist. This will make your house cooler in summer and will keep the temperature more even in winter. Cover with shingles.

A good solid clay floor will do very well, but a tight plank floor is better, but best of all is a good concrete floor. In the center of the floor there should be a firebox built of brick; this is about 12x18 inches inside measurement and 12 inches deep. When curing build your fire in this and cover with a piece of perforated sheet iron.

The house should be eight feet high at the corners and left open to the comb, the inside of the rafters preferably ceiled. Place 2x8 joists two feet apart on the plates, and 2½ feet above these put in another set of joists on the rafters; these can be 2x6, and in both sets of joists which will be used to hang your hams place iron meat hooks two feet apart and two inches from the lower part of the joists. These hooks can be made of one-quarter inch rod iron and should be long enough to let the meat hang clear of the joists.

A window should be made in one end of the house to give light when needed, and this fitted with a tight shutter, as we do not want much air and sunshine to strike meat before or after curing.

Culture of the Orchard.

Cultivation of the orchard is mainly for conserving soil moisture. If cultivation is begun early in the season and continued until midsummer, growth of wood will be stimulated and fruit developed. Less moisture in late summer and early fall is desired, so that wood will properly develop and harden to be able to stand the cold of the folowing winter. Arrange to cultivate the orchard early in the summer and have the soil in good fix for sowing to rye or other cover crop toward the last of summer. The cover crop will afford some good winter pasture and will keep hilly land from washing away.

Judging Worth of Farm.

The best time of the year to look over a farm for the purpose of buying is in the summer, just before the binders get to work. The good and poor places will show up then as at no other time, and, if the season prior to that time has been an average one, the crop will be a fair index of the value of the land. The common practice of going farm hunting just after the spring's work is over has little to commend it, save the inconsiderable matter of time saved. The poorest time in the whole year to pick out a farm is when it is covered with drifts of snow.

Control of San Jose Scale.

Although the San Jose scale is a thing to be avoided, it is not dreaded so much as it used to be. The lime sulphur wash will prevent the disease from spreading. It is a cheap wash for small trees, but quite expensive for large trees, but it pays. Spraying, cultivation, pruning and care of any crop, if properly done, are to a certain extent expensive and troublesome, but they pay in the end in the quantity and perfectness of the fruit.

Filling Washy Places.

If there is no other trash on the farm for filling washy places in the fields straw manure from the stables is excellent. The straw will fill the places and catch and hold all of the soil that washes into them. The manure in the straw will help to make the ground more productive when it is again cultivated. Never plow in a gully with fresh dirt without some trashy and brushy filling to hold it and catch more.

Preparing Corn Seed Bed.

It is a good rule in plowing never to leave the corn field either at noon or at night without first harrowing the ground that has been plowed. Spring plowing is often abused by turning the clods up to the sun and dry wind to bake and dry, and depending upon a shower to mellow the ground before planting. No ground is really properly prepared as a seed bed for corn without the use of the disc. A poorly prepared seed bed means a poor stand and an uneven growth. Such corn suffers from drought and insects.

Corn Cut for Silage.

Corn of any variety is at its best for feeding or silage as it comes from the field when about half of the ears are just past the age for table use—commonly called roasting ear stage—and the lower leaves on the stalk are beginning to dry out, says Hoard's Dairyman. For soiling purposes, it is impracticable to have the crop at its very best for any considerable time. Commence to cut a few days before it reaches its maximum value and continue after this stage is passed. Experiments appear to have demonstrated that for fodder the largest amount of nutriment per acre is obtained by planting in continuous rows and so thick that the tendency to form ears will be much lessened. The yield per acre depends so much upon the variety and the soil and care in planting and cultivating that no satisfactory estimate of the average can be given. There is almost no limit to the amount that may be fed, provided one commences with a limited amount and increases gradually up to the limit of each cow's appetite, but probably thirty to forty pounds a day is about as much as it would usually be profitable to feed.

Stiff Tongue for Sled.

This is a very great improvement over the old way of having the tongue mortised into a roller which would turn and when the team would try to hold back going down hill the tongue would fly up, sometimes clear over their heads, and prove to be of very little account. Many people, says a writer, do not know of any better way yet, so I will try to show you a better way, a way that takes the weight off the horses' necks and at the same time holds the tongue rigid when going down hill. First get a nice straight locust sapling for a tongue, one having a natural fork at the end for the neck yoke, as shown. Have your blacksmith make two loops from an old wagon tire as seen at A, with half inch holes and bolts to attach them to the two forward cross-pieces of sled, holes being bored in the cross-pieces to match holes in irons. The tongue is then notched a little to receive the cross-pieces.

How Often to Milk.

Most farmers and dairymen milk their cows only twice a day, and that is right. Sometimes a fresh cow needs to have an excess of milk drawn between times in order to prevent congestion and fever, but not for a long period. Some cows again have leaking teats, which waste the milk if not relieved three or four times a day, but such cows are a nuisance and should be disposed of. To milk twice a day is enough as a general rule. To milk three times a day does not seem to bring more milk, though some people have thought so and acted on that supposition.

Thin Sod in Pasture.

Never let the sod get thin on the pasture land, for this always means the decrease of the root systems of the plants and a decrease in their ability to penetrate the soil in search of plant food. When sod becomes so thin that the hoof of the animal will break through it in wet weather, it has reached a state of exhaustion that requires attention.

Keeping Cellars in Order.

Very frequently the cellar is lacking in conveniences. This should not be so; there ought to be a cement floor, bins for potatoes and a rack for milk pans and such articles. Here is a good rack. Take a post 6 inches square; on this nail cleats, 1 inch thick and 1½ inches wide, in pairs, that is, one on the north side, one on the south side exactly even, and just above these one on east and one on west, leaving 4 inches between each two pairs, and have them long enough to hold milk pans at each end. To use for plates, cans, etc., fasten some boards on for shelves.—Cor. Farm and Home.

ECONOMIZES SPACE

Pointers in Farm Management.

The wise farmer wants assurance on the soil of any land that he may contemplate buying.

Clover alone can not indefinitely maintain the land. A rotation will not enable us to maintain the fertility of the soil.

Acidity may be overcome by applying from 500 to 1,000 pounds of lime per acre, or by the use of floats or grounds shells.

There is much of value written these days about work on the farm which will never benefit some farmers, because they have the notion that they are too busy to read.

No other people set so high a value on good soil as the Hollanders, and we are learning that not many acres, but rich ones, make the profitable farm.

The roots of the cowpea penetrate rather deeply into the subsoil and enable the plant to feed upon the mineral food that is not readily extracted by other crops.

Do not sow alfalfa on a foul field; money is lost, time and patience worn out and the crop of alfalfa will be disappointing. Alfalfa should be sown on land thoroughly prepared for it and in a clean seed bed.

It is the wise farmer who feeds all he raises and then buys some from his neighbors to feed. The farmer who carries such an amount of live stock will be constantly improving his land and making it more productive.

Lemon Custard Pie.

Two eggs, one cup of granulated sugar, one cup of water, one tablespoonful of butter, one tablespoonful of cornstarch dissolved in water, one lemon. Grate the rind, then peel off the thick, white skin and grate the rest of the lemon, being careful to remove the seeds. Save out one of the whites and beat to a stiff froth with a tablespoonful of sugar; put this on the top after it is baked and return to the oven until it is a delicate brown.

Cranberry Sherbet.

Wash a quart of cranberries and put them, still wet, into a double boiler. Add no water, but cover closely and steam until tender and broken to pieces. Take from the fire and press out all the juice by putting the berries into a vegetable press. Add to the juice an equal amount of cold water and stir in enough sugar to make as sweet as desired. Flavor with the juice of a lemon, pour through a sieve and freeze.

Layer Fruit Cake.

One cup sugar, half cup butter creamed, yoke of two eggs, two cups prepared flour, one and one-half cups milk, flavor with orange extract and bake in three layers; make a fruit filling of the whites of two eggs, one cup of chopped and seeded raisins, two chopped figs, half a cup of walnut meats, six chopped dates and one cup confectioners' sugar, mix and spread between the plain layers.

French Rolls.

Sift one pound of flower and salt into it two ounces of butter. Beat three eggs very light; add a tablespoonful of strong yeast and an even teaspoonful of salt. Cover the dough and set it near the fire to rise. It should be light in an hour. Put it on a pastebboard and divide into small rolls of round cakes. Lay them in a baking pan and bake in a quick oven.

Oyster Fritters.

To make oyster fritters, beat two eggs very light and stir into them a cupful of milk, two cupfuls of flour and salt to taste. When the mixture is perfectly smooth, add two dozen oysters and half a teaspoonful of baking powder. Drop the batter by the tablespoonful into hot fat in a frying pan, turn when browned on one side and brown on the other. Serve very hot.

Bacon with Scrambled Rice.

Fry as much bacon as needed, so it will be crisp and attractive; be careful not to scorch it. Arrange the slices around the edge of a platter. Leave half of the fat in the frying pan and add two cupfuls of cold boiled rice into which three eggs have been stirred. Stir the rice until it becomes hot, then heap it in the center of the platter.

Spiced Crabapple Jelly.

With crabapples still on hand a nice spiced jelly can be made to serve with meats. Cook the apples without peeling until tender. Strain through a jelly bag, add vinegar to taste with cloves and cinnamon. Cook twenty minutes, add an equal quantity of sugar that has been heated in the oven, boil five minutes, skim and turn in glasses.

Sour Milk Biscuit.

Sift a quart of flour with a teaspoonful of salt and a teaspoonful of baking soda. Chop into this dry mixture a piece of butter or lard the size of a walnut, add enough sour or buttermilk to make a dough of the consistency of pastry. Do not handle, but roll out quickly and lightly; cut into rounds and bake in a quick oven.

Macaroni and Mushrooms.

Break the contents of a small box of macaroni into pieces and boil until soft. Have ready a cup of stewed mushrooms and a cup of grated cheese. Put macaroni, cheese and mushrooms in layers in a buttered baking dish and bake until brown.

Cream of Tomato Soup.

Stew gently for about five minutes the contents of one can of tomatoes. Press through a fine sieve and add one quart of hot milk flavored with a few whole cloves. Season with salt and pepper and serve hot with cubes of toasted bread.

Hints About the House.

Honey should be kept in the dark or it will granulate.

If feather pillows have a disagreeable odor dry them thoroughly before a clear fire.

Cream cheese mixed with canned currants or jellied cranberries makes a good sandwich filling.

Japanned trays should be cleaned with a little sweet oil and then polished with a soft cloth.

Thin brown bread and butter sandwiches are the most appetizing accompaniment for fish salad of any sort.

A spoonful of oxgall to a gallon of water will set the colors of almost any goods soaked in it previous to washing.

To clean old glass pour strong ammonia on it, scrub well with a brush and rinse in clean water. Dry and polish and it will then appear as new.

Small cold cream jars and the like, if scalded, make excellent containers for jelly which at some time or other you will desire to place in a lunch basket.

If you are beginning to have trouble with your feet, bathe them often, powder them freely, rub alcohol on them occasionally—give them careful attention until you discover the sort of treatment they respond to.

Ink stains may be soaked out in some milk. If any trace of the stain should still be left, rinse the garments in a weak solution of chloride of lime, always supposing that the garment is white, for the lime is a bleaching agent.

Raw Eczema on Hands.

"I had eczema on my hands for ten years. I had three good doctors but none of them did any good. I then used one box of Cuticura Ointment and three bottles of Cuticura Resolvent and was completely cured. My hands were raw all over, inside and out, and the eczema was spreading all over my body and limbs. Before I had used one bottle, together with the Cuticura Ointment, my sores were nearly healed over, and by the time I had used the third bottle, I was entirely well. To any one who has any skin or blood disease I would honestly advise them to fool with nothing else, but to get Cuticura and get well. My hands have never given me the least bit of trouble up to now.

"My daughter's hands this summer became perfectly raw with eczema. She could get nothing that would do them any good until she tried Cuticura. She used Cuticura Resolvent and Cuticura Ointment and in two weeks they were entirely cured. I have used Cuticura for other members of my family and it always proved successful. Mrs. M. E. Falin, Speers Ferry, Va., Oct. 19, 1909."

Slightly Acquainted.

As an instance of the "marrying in haste" principle that obtains in some American cities an English lady who visited Chicago relates how her maid, who accompanied her, quickly became imbued with the desire to become Mrs. Somebody.

One morning she appeared before her mistress and, with glowing eyes, announced that she had named the day and would become a wife at the end of the week.

"Are you going back home, then?" the lady asked.

"Oh, no, ma'am; it's an American gentleman," replied the maid.

"But," remonstrated her mistress, "we've only been here a fortnight."

"That's no matter. He wants the wedding to be on Saturday."

"Well, can't you get him to postpone the marriage just a little till I can get another maid?"

"Well, ma'am, I'd like to oblige you; but, you see, I don't feel well enough acquainted to ask him to do that."—London Answers.

An Anecdote of Genius.

The following anecdote of Leigh Hunt was once related by "Orion" Horne. Horne, on a bitterly cold day in winter went to see Hunt and found him in a large room with a wide, old-fashioned fireplace. He had dragged his piano on to the hearth, close to a large fire, leaving only room for himself and his chair, and was playing with the greatest enjoyment.

"My dear fellow," cried Horne, "are you aware that you are ruining your piano forever and ever in that heat?"

"I know, I know," murmured Hunt, "but it is delicious."

"Yes," replied the Judge, very confidentially, "but don't tell any one. You and I are the only ones who know it."—Success Magazine.

Midnight Regrets.

I stood by the pole at midnight,
For to it I'd hitched my string,
But, oh, my grief for the unbelief,
When I claimed I had found the thing!

How often, oh, how often,
Since I gave the world my story,
Have I wished that I had just passed on by,
And claimed no share of the glory!

THE KENTUCKIAN WAS PLEASED.

He Secured a Good Half-Section in Central Canada.

It is not only from Kentucky, but from thirty-five to forty different states that there comes the expression of satisfaction from those who have taken up lands in Central Canada as a free homestead or have purchased lands.

Mr. E. K. Bell, of Frankfort, Kentucky, writes to a Canadian government official, and says: "I have just returned from Alberta, overjoyed with my trip. Your literature was very flattering, but not half what I found it. I bought a half section between Calgary and Edmonton, one mile from railroad, near a good town. This is the best country I ever saw or ever expect to see. I will go in the spring and get to work on my place. I think it is the coming country of the world." Some of the papers describe the settling of the Canadian West as "becoming a fever with a great many people. The lure of its golden promises is creeping into their hearts and many are they who are answering the call of that unsettled territory." This paper editorially cautions its readers to exercise care and thought before moving to a distant country. This would be a wise precaution, and is exactly what the Canadian officials ask.

The success of the settler who has made Canada his home for years is the best evidence that can be offered. And of the large number of Americans who have made their homes in Canada, very few have returned. All are satisfied.

Lived Too Fast.

"Poor fellow! He is quite broken down, and the doctor says that his condition is due to fast living."

"Fast living?"

"Yes; you see, he is a traveling man, and he was obliged to eat so many dining-car meals and lose so much sleep in sleepers that his constitution gave way."—Brooklyn Citizen.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets, small, sugar-coated, easy to take as candy, regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Do not gripe.

Ready for Market.

Two Canadians were boasting.

"Where I come from," said the first, "we have a salmon river that rises in some boiling springs. As the salmon climb up the river they gradually get acclimated to the heat of the water and don't mind it. In fact, when we fish in the highest reaches of the stream we catch our salmon ready boiled."

"I don't doubt that," said the second Canadian calmly. "Down my way there's a curious salmon river, too. It rises in some tin mines. As the fish work up they meet the suspended ore in gradually increasing quantities. They get quite mineralized if they keep on upstream, so that if we fish at the head of the river we catch our salmon ready tinned, and all we have to do is to pack and ship them to market."

WESTERN CANADA

What Governor Deneen, of Illinois, Says About It:

Governor Deneen, of Illinois, owns a section of land in Saskatchewan, Canada. He has said in an interview:

"As an American I am delighted to see the remarkable progress of Western Canada. Our people are flocking across the boundary in thousands, and I have not yet met one who admitted he had made a mistake. They are all doing well. There is scarcely a community in the Middle or Western States that has not a representative in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta."

The Tenderfoot Farmer

It was one of these experimental farmers, who put green spectacles on his cow and fed her shavings. His theory was that it didn't matter what the cow ate so long as she was fed. The questions of digestion and nourishment had not entered into his calculations.

It's only a "tenderfoot" farmer that would try such an experiment with a cow. But many a farmer feeds himself regardless of digestion and nutrition. He might almost as well eat shavings for all the good he gets out of his food. The result is that the stomach grows "weak" the action of the organs of digestion and nutrition are impaired and the man suffers the miseries of dyspepsia and the agonies of nervousness.

To strengthen the stomach, restore the activity of the organs of digestion and nutrition and brace up the nerves, use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is an unfailing remedy, and has the confidence of physicians as well as the praise of thousands healed by its use.

In the strictest sense "Golden Medical Discovery" is a temperance medicine. It contains neither intoxicants nor narcotics, and is as free from alcohol as from opium, cocaine and other dangerous drugs. All ingredients printed on its outside wrapper.

Don't let a dealer delude you for his own profit. There is no medicine for stomach, liver and blood "just as good" as "Golden Medical Discovery."

Tickling in the Throat

"Just a little tickling in the throat!" Is that what troubles you? But it hangs on! Can't get rid of it! Home remedies don't take hold. You need something stronger—a regular medicine, a doctor's medicine. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral contains healing, quieting, and soothing properties of the highest order. Ask your doctor about this. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Constipation positively prevents good health. Then why allow it to continue? An active liver is a great preventive of disease. Ayer's Pills are liver pills. What does your doctor say?

Editorial Notes

Why not have the Hon. Albert Jerome Beveridge and the Hon. James Eli Watson arrange a series of joint debates on the Aldrich-Taft tariff law?

Every time Mr. Taft attempts to harmonize the fighting factions of his party he starts a new conflagration. But then it is pretty hard for a member of one crowd to convince the other crowd that he has no sinister purpose.

Chief of Police William F. Bargman, of Fort Wayne, has handed in his resignation. It is understood by the friends of Mr. Bargman that he is not suited with the Grice program. The Grice administration thus far has been very unpopular; while he has extra police detailed to watch the "flats" business houses are broken open and robbed in broad daylight.

It is said that at a recent meeting of leading republicans the Hon. Charles S. Hernly, former state chairman, told his brethren that they could solve the problem of indorsing both Taft and Beveridge in their state platform by praising Taft at one end of the document for approving the tariff bill and by praising Beveridge at the other end for voting against it. Mr. Hernly has a keen humor and thoroughly understands the difficulties that beset his party in Indiana.

The Providence (R. I.) Journal, an independent paper, which has heretofore supported republican candidates, has got its eyes open at last. It says that "when the American has to pay more than the Englishman for American products it is clear to the dullest intelligence that he is paying a disproportionate share of the profit, and that it is the monopoly of the American market which permits such shameless extortion." This is precisely what everybody is thinking nowadays. And it should be remembered that this "monopoly of the American market" has been brought about by republican tariff legislation.

"I cannot understand upon what grounds the newspapers of Waterloo and Garrett can brazenly charge graft between our firm and the DeKalb county board of commissioners," asserted Marshall S. Mahurin, of the firm of Mahurin & Mahurin, architects, while talking over the somewhat muddled DeKalb court house situation. While Mr. Mahurin did not say so in as many words, he gave an intimation that the publications in question might be called upon to show proof of their charges. "When we were given a verbal contract for supplying the plans and specifications for the proposed new court house at Auburn," said Mr. Mahurin, "I was told by County Auditor Shook that in obtaining the work we were indebted to no one and that no county official could ever say that we had landed the work through his influence. Our success, Mr. Shook assured us, came entirely upon the merits of the plans and drawings we submitted. Aside from the cost of preparing the preliminary set of plans to be submitted to the commissioners and the expense of going to Auburn to appear before the commissioners, we have not spent a single penny to obtain the work. If those two newspapers mean that we bribed any of the officials to favor our plans, they have either been grievously misinformed or are perverting facts to cause a delay and give Garrett or Waterloo more time in their scheme to take the court house from Auburn. In the first place, since we have no written contract with the commissioners authorizing us to prepare the plans and since the appropriation for the court house will not be made until the county council meets in its regular session next September we would be very foolish indeed to make an outlay of money, for bribery or any other purpose, on a job that we cannot be sure of until after the fund is set aside by the council and we have a binding contract with the commissioners. We are not worrying at all because of the charges, as we know that anyone acquainted with the facts can readily see that our skirts are clean.—Journal-Gazette.

The republican party in New York is confronted with a very nasty mess of graft exposures right on the eve of a campaign. So serious is the situation and so impossible is it of concealment that the leaders have choosen a complete uncovering as the lesser course of political evil. The condition of the party is most unpromising and it was that fact as much as anything else that caused the president to go into council with the state leaders in New York city last Saturday. Moreover, there is Governor Hughes, an implacable foe of graft, who has no mind to cover up the sins of his party before he became its leader. So the exposure will go forward and, to state a paradox, backward, for it is purposed to burrow into the relations of the republican campaign organization with certain favored corporate interests as long ago as the campaign of 1902 and perhaps earlier. The party in New York is in a demoralized condition and there appear to be an undercurrent of expectation that the state will be lost this year. That event would make the empire state a perfectly delightful battle ground in the national struggle two years hence and republicans and democrats are figuring on that with an equal interest though with contrasting emotions.

Why Salves Fail to Cure Eczema

Scientists are now agreed that the eczema germs are lodged not in the outer skin or epidermis, but in the inner skin. Hence, a penetrating liquid is required, not an outward salve that clogs the pores.

We recommend to all eczema patients the standard prescription Oil of Wintergreen as compounded in liquid form known as D. D. D. Prescription. A trial bottle of this D. D. D. Prescription, at only 25 cents, will instantly relieve the itch. We have sold and recommended this remedy for years, and know of wonderful cures from its use. We recommend it to our patrons. Stone's Drug Store, Butler, Ind.

THIS IS CERTAIN

The Proof That Butler Readers Cannot Deny

What could furnish stronger evidence of the efficiency of any remedy than the test of time. Thousands of people testify that Doan's Kidney Pills cure permanently.

Grateful endorsements should prove undoubtedly the merits of this remedy. Years ago people right in this locality testified to the relief they had derived from the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. They now confirm their testimonials. They say that time has completed the test.

John Otto, 735 N. Main St., Auburn, Ind., says: "While in the army, I lifted heavily and strained my back and after that I had a great deal of trouble from this source. There were severe pains in my loins and kidneys and when I caught cold, the complaint was aggravated to such an extent that I was unable to stoop or lift. The kidney secretions were also highly colored and passed too frequently. I tried many prescriptions and remedies, but found no relief until I commenced using Doan's Kidney Pills. I have often recommended this excellent preparation."

The above statement was given in April, 1906, and was confirmed by Mr. Otto on February 3, 1909. He said: "I give you permission to continue the publication of my former statement, regarding Doan's Kidney Pills. I have had no occasion to use this remedy during the past three years."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Real Estate

Following you will find a partial list of houses for sale by Wallace C. Webster, and if there are none in this list to suit you will be shown others. To some of these prices the sewer assessments will have to be added and assumed by purchasers.

Don't believe for one minute that it is a bad showing for the city because there are quite a number who wish to sell, for the American people are never satisfied and always want to make changes.

We have no larger list for sale than is usual for a town of this size. I hope the people understand that the prospects for Butler never have been so bright as at the present time, and that now is the time to invest, as there is no doubt but prices will be much higher very soon.

Millions of Lives Lost

An Awful Toll Collected By Consumption---Many Unnecessary Deaths From This Disease

If people could only understand that systemic catarrh is an internal disease that external applications cannot cure, they would not need to be warned so often about this malady, which, when neglected, paves the way oftentimes for consumption, at the cost of millions of lives every year. Yet catarrh may be cured, if the right treatment is employed.

Catarrh is caused by a general diseased state of the system which leads commonly to annoying and perhaps serious local conditions, which may prove a fertile breeding ground for germs of consumption. External remedies give but temporary ease.

The only way to successfully treat catarrh is by employing a medicine which is absorbed and carried by the blood to all parts of the system, so that the mucous membrane or internal lining of the body is toned up and made capable of resisting the infection of consumption and other diseases.

We have a remedy prepared from the prescription of a physician who for thirty years studied and made catarrh a specialty, and whose record was a patient restored to health in every case where his treatment was followed as prescribed. That remedy is Rexall Mucu Tone. We are so positive that it will completely overcome catarrh in all its various forms, whether acute or chronic, that we promise to return every penny paid us for the medicine in every case where it fails or for any reason does not satisfy the user.

We want you to try Rexall Mucu-Tone on our recommendation and guarantee. We are right here where you live, and you do not contract any obligation or risk when you try Rexall Mucu Tone on our guarantee. We have Rexall Mucu Tone in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Very often the taking of one 50 cent bottle is sufficient to make a marked impression upon the case. Of course in chronic cases a longer treatment is necessary. The average in such instances is three $1.00 bottles. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Butler only at our store—The Rexall Store. Geo. W. Geddes. 1t

Something Different

It has been the motto of Lowery & Morton's Mighty Minstrels to be somewhat different than all others. First of all they are carrying the best singers, dancers, musicians, fun makers, and novelty acts obtainable, and are giving a grand free street parade daily, and a 45 minute free band concert in front of the theater at 7:30 p. m., under the personal direction of Prof. P. G. Lowery, who has for the past ten years challenged the world, and is undisputed as its best cornetist. This popular comedy and musical entertainment will be at the Thompson opera house on Wednesday evening, March 9.

Things Not Taught

When the crass folly of a thing taught is forced home on an educator he invariably takes refuge behind the argument that the subject "develops" or "valuable mental culture".

We used to spend lots of time in learning the capitals of the states and nation, and the rivers on which certain cities are situated.

Why?

A knowledge of the railroad connections of the cities would have been valuable. Also instruction in the railroad system of a country would be valuable; where the river rise, flow and empty is secondary.

Practical geographical knowledge is a scarce artical. The schools devote much time to instruction in geographical generations. They do not teach pupils how to trace a train through a time-table.

We have often referred to the fact that the average product of the schools ss utterly unreliable as a penman, pronouncer, and speller. Temperament has something to do with the pupil's failure in these rudiments. A neat, bright, prideful pupil will usually be precise in speech, spoken or written, as in dress. The slovenly pupil will be slovenly in his attempted accomplishments. Unfortunately the schools do not check slovenly superficial studying, writes Roscoe Carle in the Fostoria Ohio, Times.

In arithmeut, many varieties of rules and problems are studied. In my day there was nothing in our text-books pertaining to simple accounting. There was mensuration to burn and page galore about gills, pennyweights, and drachms. I have never met gills, pennyweights or drachms since leaving school.

Why does not some board of education, (if one does it they all will,) instruct the teachers to give a line of suggestions, say once a week, on letter-writing, and the proper addressing and stamping of envelopes? There is lots in it, when you come to compare a perfectly prepared letter with the usual ones sent out by otherwise intelligent persons.

Another untaught subject is manners or deportment. In my school days we were graded on deportment. Yet the teachers never instruct us in it. We were held responsible most unfairly Unless a boy have a good mother, it is not probable that they will even uncover when meeting the school teacher (lady) or touch their hat when saluting the suprintendent or male teachers. In the country schools in generation before my time, the pupil was compelled to make his best bow on entering the school room. Suppose you observe the best bow of any occasion, even those which demand the highest gracefulness. How a man enters a strange person's presence and how he departs is a more important affair than most educators of youth realize. There is much moralizing, much maudlin talk in season and unseasonable on "character" I should judge that there is no instruction, verbal, much less practical, in manners.

There ought to be a course in our "enriched" high school curriculum, (a sort of foil to the "fuss and frills" additions added every other year,) that teaches common sense. As in the case of Manners, Articulation, Neatness, Modality, and other really valuable and practical accomplishments of the graduates, common sense is looked for in home instruction or vaguely regarded as a hereditary or adventious equipment quite outside of educational endeavor.

I claim it can be taught.

It would be a great favor to us business, men if the board of education would make a stab at the subject. An effort on their part to introduce it into the schools would of itself be a shining illustration of the subject.

Another thing: outside organization are so intent on having the budding minds study the physiological effects of alcohol to the praiseworthy end of educating drunkenness out of existence that it would be well to follow up with some instruction in the way of occasional instruction, say by local physicians (to the sexes separately) on matters of practical morality with special regard to health and marriage.

President Harrington, Peoria

The word of a prominent and respected business man should be listened to. Mr. F. M. Harrington, president of the Harrington Manufacturing Co., Peoria, Ill, writes that he was for years a constant sufferer from indigestion and constipation, which nothing seemed to relieve, and he had almost given up hope when he began to take Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and it made a new man of him. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed and if you want to try it before buying send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co, 119 Caldwell Bldg, Monticello, Ill. FREE TO YOU—MY SISTER

Free to You and Every Sister Suffering From Woman's Ailments.

I am a woman.
I know woman's sufferings.
I have found the cure.

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from women's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weakness peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days' treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial; and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER"—with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young. To Mothers of Daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhoea, Green Sickness and Painful or Irregular Menstruation in Young Ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live I can refer you to ladies of your own locality who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases, and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days' treatment is yours, also the book. Write today, as you may not see this offer again. Address

William Elden and Will Mack are the first Butler employes in the Trebert Gas Engine Works. Mr. Wagner is working hard to make the business a success, and no doubt he will as he has long since stricken the word "can't" from his vocabulary. It has been a hard pull, but things look a little brighter each day for the new industry.

Geddes' Drug store was broken open last Sunday between twelve and two o'clock in the morning and between $200 and $300 in jewelry and rings stolen. The thieves entered the store from the rear by prying open two iron doors, breaking a glass out of the inner doors and reaching the key which was left in the lock. This is the second time within a year that this store has been broken open and robbed. So far no clew has been reached. About 24 watches were taken and two diamond rings, while a tray of other valuable rings were left undisturbed.

It is hard for an editor to hold his tongue when a man who spends from one to two hundred dollars a year with fast women comes in and stops his paper, because he says he can't afford to take it. Perhaps his wife might get a little enjoyment out of it some night while he is out with his little fairy. We care not for the little "one fifty," but its the principal of the man that we look at.

Albert Beard, uhcle of C. W. Beard of this place, was badly injured in an accident at Hamilton last week. He was driving down one of the main streets with a load of household goods. The road had been graded up in the center and had become covered with a coat of ice, the sled slid to one side and upset down the bank. The sled had a high rack on with two cattle and other things in it. Mr. Beard was thrown upon his head and when found was in a semi conscious condition.

The HERALD is in receipt of a quantity of government seeds for free distribution. They came through the direction of Congressman Cline who asks that we give them out to those who may have been missed in the list to whom the congressman has sent direct by mail. And that these will go direct into the hands of families who want them, we ask that grown people come and get them and not send children without a written order, as they sometimes come in crowds and get seeds that their parents do not want. So if you haven't had any free seeds this year, come and get some at this office.

The home of Adrian Miller, of Wilmington Center, was the scene of a pleasant surprise on last Tuesday evening when a merry crowd of neighbors and friends gathered for an evening of enjoyment. Samuel Miller, Joe Miller and Mr. Steekley, with their families of Stafford township, braved the cold and came to spend the evening with their Wilmington neighbors. Music, songs and recitations were some of the features of the occasion. About 11 o'clock the guests were invited to the dining room where a bountiful supper was served. At a late hour the guests numbering about fifty, departed wishing Mr. and Mrs. Miller many more such happy events.

A compilation of statistics shows that seventy counties in Indiana are now dry. In 1905 just two could be so numbered. In 1908, there were only twenty-four such. The dry townships in the state now number 922, dry cities 66 and towns 330. In 1905, 547 townships, no cities and 125 incorporated towns were in the dry column. In 1908, 831 townships, 18 cities and 255 towns were without saloons. The population of dry territory is 1,875,000. In 1905, the narrow confines of the anti-saloon territory affected only 810,000 people. It is reported that 989 saloons have been closed as a result of the local option law, 1,619 by the Moore amendment to the Nicholson law and 67 under city council ordinances. Altogether 2 675 saloons have been closed since anti-saloon forces began operations.

Schoolboy football has fallen under serious suspicion. In the public schools of New York City it has been wholly prohibited, after careful study and sharp debate; and school committees in other cities have the matter under advisement. Of the serious accidents to football players during 1909, the largest number happened to members of school teams. The youth of the players is greatly against them.

Germany has recently allowed France to erect a monument at Wissembourg, Alsace, in honor of the French soldiers, who fell there in 1870, but it carefully censored the inscription and refused permission for the emblems which were to be placed on the pedestal. The unveiling of the monument was the occasion of a great demonstration of Alsatian loyalty to France, and emphasized anew the tragedy of the lost provinces which France mourns with unceasing bitterness.

It is illustrative of a new view of "history," and perhaps a new view of teaching also, when the University of Wisconsin sends a professor in the history department across the water to watch the budget campaign in England. The quick appreciation of the immense importance of that momentous election, and the determination that the instruction given to their students shall be as vital and full of human interest as possible, are creditable alike to the intelligence and the scholarship of the university authorities.

Another attempt is being made to have Christopher Columbus enrolled among the saints. The Congregation of Sacred Rites of the Roman curia has jurisdiction over such matters, and the formalities of procedure, as now used in the process of canonization and beatification, were established by Pope Sixtus V. in 1587. The proceedings often cover many years, as in the case of Joan of Arc, whose name was added last year to the list of saints. In 1892-93, when the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America was being celebrated, petitions signed by millions of people, representing all the civilized nations, were sent to Pope Leo XIII. for the canonization of Columbus. The congregation of cardinals took the matter in consideration, but made no recommendation to the Pope. It is said that their unfavorable attitude was due to revelations regarding the not altogether blameless private life of Columbus; but his admirers are not discouraged, and will try again.

Are there, after all, any permanent artistic standards, any fixed principles of esthetics? Most persons will answer yes at once, and proceed to dignify their own tastes and likings by these lofty phrases. But those more deliberate souls who have attended somewhat to the history of art will not be so certain. Fifty years ago the women of Lyons presented to the city of New York a copy of the familiar Stuart portrait of Washington, woven dexterously on a loom of their famous silk-mills. It was an ingenious product, quite a triumph of mechanical performance; and a generation which was sincere in its admiration of the marvels of machinery hung the picture conspicuously in the governor's room of the city hall. From that place it has now been removed by the Municipal Art Commission on the ground that it is not a work of art. No doubt the commission is right, but not many of our grandfathers would have thought so. They had not much use for the charmingly realistic paintings of the Dutch school, over which modern connoisseurs rave, and they had the authority of so famous a critic as Ruskin for their opinion. It was little else than blasphemy in those days to speak of Rembrandt in the same breath with Raphael. They had got over thinking Beethoven the rank anarchist in music their own fathers had believed him, but they would have stopped their ears in horror at the sounds which kindle the emotions of advanced musical critics to-day. If, in addition to these perfectly defensible artistic views, they chose to think that things like the silken portrait of the immortal George or the homely Rogers groups were art, and their own somber and ponderously carved furniture more beautiful than the graceful designs of Chippendale and Heppelwhite, is it quite sure that they were wholly astray? "It's clever, but is it art?" queries Mr. Kipling in one of his ballads. The world is always asking that disturbing question, and it seldom gives the same answer for two generations in succession.

LONDON'S ONE-ROOM FLATS.

Erection of Buildings Containing Tiny Apartments Approved.

By virtue of the official action of the London county council the "one-room flat" is to become an actual reality, a London dispatch says. Heretofore the average human being, even the expert who has attained proficiency in folding his physical body so as to accommodate himself to the compactness of a Harlem flat, has held the opinion that the term could not be made to apply to any residential base smaller than two rooms. But the London county council has demonstrated the fallacy of such belief.

The latter body has just declared for the erection of fourteen of these one-room flats in the development of the municipal housing scheme which has to do with the council's estate at Old Oak Lane, Acton. These single-room flats by formal proclamation are to be devoted chiefly to the use of single persons, but the council's members also have promulgated the following:

"That a young married couple with no children, or with one infant, shall be eligible as tenants for a one-room tenement on condition that they shall find other accommodations when the infant reaches the age of 3 years."

The estate at Acton is a large one and the total cost of its development has been estimated at no less than $1,700,000, with the work covering a period of ten years. The present development scheme entered upon contemplates the erection of 338 shops, cottages and flats, the cottages to have not more than five or less than two rooms. It is the intention to make this particular estate suitable for workmen earning from $6 to $7.50 a week, and the rents in consequence will range from 87 cents to $2.50 a week.

Tommy to the Rescue.

Remedies are unfortunately sometimes worse than the disease which they are made to cure. Tommy's mother, says a writer in Lippincott's Magazine, had made him a present of a toy shovel, and sent him out in the sand-lot to play with his baby brother. "Take care of baby, now," said his mother, "and don't let anything hurt him."

Presently screams of anguish from baby sent the distracted parent flying to the sand-lot.

"For goodness sake, Tommy, what has happened to the baby?" said she, trying to soothe the wailing infant.

"There was a naughty fly biting him on the top of his head, and I killed it with the shovel," was the proud reply.

A Plausible Deduction.

A Baltimore school teacher had encountered such a degree of ignorance on the part of one of her boys, in relation to the recorded acts of the Father of his Country, that she grew sarcastic, with a result which Shipping Illustrated records.

"I wonder," she began, "if you could tell me whether George Washington was a sailor or a soldier?"

The boy grinned. "He was a soldier, all right," he said.

"How do you know?" the teacher challenged.

"Because I saw a picture of him crossing the Delaware. Any sailor would know enough not to stand up in the boat."

Inherited.

"Where did Phlyem get his propensity for ballooning?"

"I don't know, but his grandfather died in the air."

"Above the trees?"

"No; under one."—New York Journal.

THE EVENING STAR.

Just above yon sandy bar,
As the day grows fainter and dimmer,
Lonely, and lovely, a single star
Lights the air with a dusky glimmer.

Into the ocean faint and far
Falls the trail of its golden splendor,
And the gleam of that single star
Is ever refulgent, soft, and tender.

Chrysaor rising out of the sea,
Showed thus glorious and thus emulous,
Leaving the arms of Callirrhoe,
Forever tender, soft and tremulous.

Thus o'er the ocean faint and far
Trained the gleam of his falchion brightly;
Is it a God, or is it a star
That entrancer, I gaze on nightly!
—Longfellow.

Rejected, Without Thanks

The editor of the Whirligig Magazine sat in his shirt sleeves smoking a short pipe. He heard a sound in the street below. The sound stopped in front of the office building, and the editor craned his neck out of the window to see where the sound came from.

It came from a motor car. In the car was a large, handsome hat, apparently covering a medium-sized, handsome woman, who looked familiar.

Could it be possible, he thought, that she was coming here?

Binks, his assistant, was in the outer office. The editor hurried out.

"Binks, you know Van Olsen, the millionaire, who is negotiating for an interest in the Whirligig?"

"Sure. He was in here the other day."

"You saw his daughter sitting in the car outside, didn't you?"

"Yes. I knew her by her pictures in the society papers."

"Well, she is here again. She is coming up. She'll be in the office in a minute. What do you suppose she wants?"

"Maybe," replied Binks, "that she wants to buy a postage stamp; but I'll bet a red apple she's got manuscript to unload on you."

Belton, the editor, turned pale.

"That's the way I sized it up, Binks," he said hurriedly. "She has literary aspirations—as they say. I happen to know that, and I suspect that she is going to use us as a medium to vent her thoughts."

Binks reflected. Belton was hurriedly putting on his outer clothes.

"Well, let's wait and see. Maybe it's something we can use. She's pretty well known to the public. That might carry her stuff—unless it was too rotten," he added.

The front door opened. Belton hastily retired. The office boy came forward.

The lady advanced. She was a stunning creature.

"Is Mr. Belton in?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Can I see him, please? Say it is Miss Van Olsen."

The boy returned in a moment.

"Won't you step in?"

Belton rose as she entered his sanctum. He couldn't very well refuse to see the daughter of one of their largest prospective stockholders.

"Mr. Belton." She held out a friendly hand. "I am delighted to meet you. I hope I am not intruding?"

"Not at all."

"You know I sometimes write? I love it. I always wait for the mood. I get so much pleasure out of it—more than I can say. Could you look this over?" She drew forth a rather formidable looking envelope.

"It is a story. I have had it typewritten, as you will see; I should like to have you use it in the Whirligig."

"Could you leave it?" he asked.

"Oh——! Would it be too much trouble for you to glance it over now? I am dying to know what you think of it. It will not take long."

"Why, surely I can," he replied with a smile. "We don't usually do it, you know, but I shall be only too glad in this instance. Only"—he paused, while a deprecatory smile came to his face—"would it matter if I read the story alone? You see, to read it in your presence——"

"I understand perfectly." She smiled back. "I will sit down quietly outside."

* * * * * * *

He picked up the manuscript. He scanned the first two or three pages like lightning. Then he reached for the telephone. In a moment he was talking with the proprietor of the paper.

"Miss Van Olsen is here with a story that she wants me to publish. Thought I'd better let you know it."

"Is it good?" asked the proprietor.

"Rotten."

"Can't you fix it up?"

"No, sir. It's one of those non-fixable kind of stories."

"But it won't do to turn it back on her hands. She'll tell her father and he may back out."

"I don't see how we can use it."

"What difference does it make?"

The idea that every one would realize why the story was published didn't please him at all.

"They will think we are owned body and soul," he called back. "No, sir! It can't be done. If we do it once we'll have to do it again. It's a poor story, and I wouldn't use it under any circumstances."

The proprietor was equally insistent.

"You must do it, old man; it's at a critical stage. Van Olsen is coming around this afternoon to close up. This will be the deciding touch. I insist upon your taking it."

"Then I'll resign," said Belton.

* * * * * * *

"Awfully good of you to take this trouble, Mr. Belton." She looked at him nervously. "How was it?"

Belton held the story in his hand as a sort of emphasis to his remarks.

"Do you want to know the truth, or do you want me to tell you what your friends have been telling you?" he asked.

"Oh, the truth, of course."

"Your story will not do."

"Oh! I am so sorry. What is the matter with it?"

"Everything."

"Everything?"

"Yes. It is amateurish, it is badly constructed; it has no climax; it is hopelessly dull and uninteresting. You evidently have an idea in your head that you can write. Take it from me, Miss Van Olsen, that you can't. It isn't in you."

Belton smiled reassuringly as he saw the girl's face.

"But don't mind," he added cheerily. "It really doesn't matter, you know. If you had that sort of a—literary—temperament, the chances are that you would be impossible in other ways. I wouldn't care."

She got up. Her face was lighted with anger.

"Don't add insult to injury," she said quietly. "I have never had anyone talk to me this way before."

"Of course you haven't," replied Belton. "Nobody has dared to tell you the truth. You are angry now, but you'll get over it."

* * * * * * *

A couple of hours later Belton, getting back from his luncheon, saw a message on his desk asking him to step immediately into the office of the proprietor. The Van Olsen car was in front and he knew that the magnate was in the building.

He knocked at the proprietor's door.

"Come in."

Singerly, the proprietor, looked up.

"Hello, Belton. This is Mr. Van Olsen. Mr. Belton is our editor."

Van Olsen looked at Belton curiously. He lighted a large cigar.

"My daughter was in to see you."

"Yes, sir."

Van Olsen turned to Singerly.

"She brought in a story to this young man to-day and he turned her down," he said.

Singerly leaned toward Belton.

"You turned it down?" he said. "What did you do that for? Didn't I tell you to hold it?"

"Yes, sir."

"I don't care what you do with this magazine," he said. "You can fill it up with anything you like. But as long as I am editing it, you can't publish a story like that just because you want to please somebody. You can get somebody else to do it. Good day, sir," he added to Van Olsen.

"Wait a moment." It was Van Olsen who spoke.

He put his hand on Belton's shoulder.

"Young man," he said, "I have been thinking about putting $50,000 into this concern. But before making an investment of this sort I always try to find out how the business is run. Your profits depend upon the way your magazine is edited. So I sent my daughter around here with one of her stories. And I am going to put my money in, on the strength of your rejection. My little girl thinks she can write, and you not only have done her a great service in setting her right about it, but you have convinced me that you can't be bought."

He turned to Singerly.

"Have those papers made out, sir, and I'll hand you a check—with the understanding that this young man is to keep right on his job."

Then to Belton:

"Young man, won't you give me the pleasure of dining with us to-night at my house? My daughter wants to get even with you."—Life.

INVENTOR EDISON IN A TROLLEYLESS CAR.

Thomas A Edison and his Storage Battery Car

The overhead electric wire, with its attendant trolley pole, and the underground slot system of supplying current to electric cars, has been doomed by Thomas A. Edison, according to traction experts who witnessed a demonstration of his new storage battery car at Orange, N. J. The aged inventor, who rode on the test car during a portion of the trip, was absolutely certain of it. The car, which was specially constructed for the new batteries, is twenty-four feet long and carries thirty passengers. One-half the weight of an ordinary car the same size, it rides on a single truck and is propelled by a straight drive. It is equipped with 210 cells arranged under the seats. Of these cells 200 are for propulsion and ten for lighting, with a total force of fifty horse power. Edison estimates the cost of driving the new car at 1 cent a mile.

NOT TO BE MENDED.

Charles Dickens once wrote to a friend, "I have distinguished myself in two respects lately. I took a young lady, unknown, down to dinner, and talked to her about the Bishop of Durham's nepotism in the matter of Mr. Cheese. I found she was Mrs. Cheese. And expatiated to the member for Marylebone, thinking him to be an Irish member, on the contemptible character of the Marylebone constitution, and the Marylebone representative."

Two such mishaps in one evening were enough to reduce the most brilliant talker to the condition of the three inside passengers of a London-bound coach, who beguiled the tedium of the journey from Southampton by discussing the demerits of William Cobbett, until one of the party went so far as to assert that the object of their denunciation was a domestic tyrant, given to beating his wife.

Much to his dismay, the solitary woman passenger, who had hitherto sat a silent listener, remarked:

"Pardon me, sir, a kinder husband and father never breathed; and I ought to know, for I am William Cobbett's wife."

Mr. Giles of Virginia and Judge Duval of Maryland, members of Congress during Washington's administration, boarded at the house of a Mrs. Gibbon, whose daughters were well on in years, and remarkable for talkativeness.

When Jefferson became President, Duval was Comptroller of the Treasury, and Giles a Senator. Meeting one day in Washington, they fell to chatting over old times, and the Senator asked the Comptroller if he knew what had become of "that cackling old maid, Jenny Gibbon."

"She is Mrs. Duval, sir," was the unexpected reply.

Giles did not attempt to mend matters, as a certain Mr. Tuberville unwisely did. Happening to observe to a fellow guest that the lady who had sat at his right hand at dinner was the ugliest woman he had ever beheld, the person addressed expressed his regret that he should think his wife so ill-looking.

"I have made a mistake," said the horrified Tuberville. "I meant the lady who sat on my left."

"Well, sir, she is my sister."

This brought the frank avowal: "It can't be helped, sir; for if what you say be true, I confess I never saw such an ugly family in the course of my life."

Tongue Caught Ermine.

"This stole is of tongue caught ermine, hence its high price," the salesman said.

"Tongue caught ermine, eh?"

"Yes, madam. You see, the ermine's coat is extremely delicate. A trap tears it horribly. So the trapper catches it by the tongue.

"The ermine is fond of ice. The trapper smears heavy knives with grease and lays them here and there on the snow. The snow white ermine, lithe and quick, rushes up in the zero weather, licks what he takes for a sliver of ice, and, lo, is doomed, for the steel of the heavy knife has frozen fast to his tongue."

POLITICS OF THE DAY

Eleven Months of Taft.

The people of the United States recognize the fact that this is a transition period in American history. We have been engaged in exploiting the immense resources of a virgin continent; we have sacrificed all other things in our progress to the single consideration of speed, and wallowed in material prosperity.

We are now confronted with two questions of the first magnitude: How to conserve that which remains of the national heritage we have been wasting in riotous living, and how to keep the corporations which we ourselves have made from devouring us. In our struggle with these problems vision, conscience and courage in the Federal Executive are of priceless value to the country. The hope of the future turns upon the execution of law to-day. How stands President Taft in the judgment of the country, after eleven months of administration?

This question is the more important because all the strength there is in the Executive Department, so far as revealed, is in the Presidential chair. Perhaps no other President of the United States ever served through a year so heavily fraught with events of moment to government and people with so little help from his Cabinet.

Two roads lie open before President Taft—the service of the "interests" and the service of the people. A break has occurred within his own party; there is an irrepressible conflict between the men of the "Roosevelt policies" and the men of the machine. Few executives ever faced so clean-cut an alternative. It is not a question of revolutionizing or deserting his own party, but of choosing between two factions, one numerically larger, the other active and growing, with the logic both of conscience and political history in its favor.

Thus far President Taft's course has been what mathematicians call an "irregular curve," that may be described, but cannot be plotted mathematically. He has zigzagged back and forth between radicals and reactionaries. He stands committed to an excellent programme of legislation upon conservation and kindred issues; he demands radical measures for the control of corporate abuses; he is the champion of certain judicial reforms which will give to the poor man a speedier and less expensive justice. But he has publicly commended a tariff act whose principles he had publicly disapproved; he has defied the very men whose enthusiasm and moral weight he so sadly needs to carry out reforms dear to his heart; he has accepted and approved as his instruments machine politicians of low type. His treatment of the insurgents shows no continuity of purpose; he has challenged, placated, threatened, withdrawn his threats. He has handled the Ballinger-Pinchot issue in such a good-Lord-good-devil way that a man who, in spite of certain superficial defects, has been the nation's self-forgetful and efficient servant in a work of great moment, chose that defiance of the administration which led inevitably to dismissal as the best course open to him.

One hundred years from now the historian may reconstruct two Tafts from the records which the last year has written: One, the uncompromising standpatter and chilled-steel regular, the upholder of the status quo and threatener of the insurgents; the other the continuator of the Roosevelt policies and tribune of the people.

Now the acute question is, Which Taft is to be the Taft of the future? Mr. Taft is no politician, or he would perceive as a matter of instinct, without stopping to reason or reflect, that the fissure in the Republican party is irreparable. Republicanism must for the future mean either Aldrich and Cannon or Murdock and Dolliver. It cannot mean both. Mr. Taft is wasting his time in trying to reconcile irreconcilables. He may go down in history as archpriest of the regulars, as leader of the radicals, or as one who stumbled back and forth between two hosts whose line of march separated them ever more widely, in a vain attempt to find a common way for men get on reaching different destinations.—St. Louis Republican.

Election of Senators by the People.

This is a time for election of Senators by the people, so far as that is possible under our system. Ordinarily the Senate, in its constitutional function of a check upon the hasty impulses of the House of Representatives, serves the useful purpose of imposing reflection and deliberation in the processes of legislation.

But we now confront well-considered popular demand for legislation that has been hung up for from five to ten years by the combined forces of House organization and Senate conservatism. These strengthen and support each other. The House organization could have been overthrown sooner but for its refuge in the citadel of the Senate. Now it is pretty certain to be broken down one way or another in the next elections.

How will that help thorough legislation for land law reform, conservation of natural wealth, railroad and corporation, unless the Senate can be brought into line also by a similar change? That is no more possible now than it has been in the past, if Senators are to continue to be chosen by the old method of machine intrigue in the legislatures, financed by interests opposed to the legislation in question.

Though direct election of Senators by the people is impossible without constitutional change blocked by the Senate and the state legislatures, many states have found ways to accomplish it indirectly. In some of them, the primary nomination of Senators is provided for by law and the legislatures obey the people's mandate, though it has no legal force. In others the party in power has been forced by public opinion to hold a voluntary primary election by which the legislature is guided.

It will be found that most of the newer Senators by whom the old organization is attacked and the progressive legislation of this administration and the last supported, got their seats in this way. States that have to choose Senators in the legislative sessions of 1911, if they have not already provided for some indirect popular choice, should lose no time in doing so. That might be the solution of a rather unpromising contest in this state.—Minneapolis Tribune.

What About the Sugar Trust?

With conflicting feelings the public will learn from Washington dispatches that President Taft has evidence against every illegal trust in the United States, that President Taft will force Congress to provide postal savings banks, that President Taft will curb financial evils, regulate trusts and stock manipulation, and secure immediate legislation on several other national matters of importance.

Naturally, the people wonder why a President who undertakes such varied and important legislation with confidence of carrying his plans to completion could not secure the tariff reduction which he promised the people of the West.

And the public may be pardoned for surprise that such vast government activity in so many directions should suddenly be displayed while the sugar trust prosecution rests with but one minor sugar trust official and a few weighers held to answer for the most enormous swindle in the history of America.

The avalanche of allegations against trusts in general and the packers in particular must not be permitted to swallow up the sugar case or prevent the strict punishment of men higher up, both in the sugar trust and in the customs service, without whose guilty knowledge no one imagines such wholesale thefts were possible.—Chicago Journal.

Don't Let Them Delude You.

All kinds of excuses will be put forward in response to inquiry into the high cost of living. Most of them will be labored attempts to direct attention away from the real cause of high prices and fix it upon plausible distortions of fact.

The increased cost of living is due directly to the high tariff on imports, and to nothing else. Nobody should be deluded by any other pretense.

In 1890, the first year under the McKinley act, the average expenditure of each American family for food was $318.29.

In 1896, even with the very few reductions of the tariff under the Wilson act, the average food expenditure was only $296.76.

In 1897 the Republican majority in Congress passed the Dingley bill. After ten years under the Dingley tariff the average family expense for food had risen in 1907 to $347.75.

To-day, under the Aldrich-Taft tariff, the cost of living is at least 10 per cent higher than two years ago.

The man who voted for a Congressman who aided Senator Aldrich and his crew of pirates in tightening the tariff strangle-hold on the neck of the American workingman voted to increase the cost of living.

The man who votes for a Republican Congressman next fall will vote to still further increase his own living expenses.

A Tariff on Christianity.

No one who realizes the deep care with which tariff schedules are framed to trick the public will be surprised to learn that the Aldrich-Taft law contains a provision for increased taxes on imported Bibles.

The Dingley law imposed a duty of 25 per cent on all Bibles of which the chief cost was the paper. The Aldrich-Taft law added a little joker which fixes a 40 per cent rate on Bibles of which the chief cost is leather.

This means an extra tax on all the better editions, which are of English publication almost entirely. American Bible production being mostly in cheap bindings. Bible importers have notified retailers that prices are going up. Thus the tariff begins to get in its work on Christianity.

Self Restraint.

Ellen stopped scrubbing the veranda steps long enough to cast an admiring eye on her employer's garden. "Sure they are fine posies ye have, doctor," she said. "I've a neat little house I bought with the money I'd put by, and an elegant garden it had last year, too, but now there's neither stick nor stalk in it."

"What was it, hens or dogs?" asked the doctor, sympathetically mentioning his own aversions.

"Sure, me neighbor—bad luck to her—had a ditch dug in her land, and the water ran down into me garden and washed all me seeds away."

"And what did you do about it?"

"What could a poor lone body like me do?"

"Well, didn't you at least say something to the woman, complain or tell her that you wouldn't stand it?"

"Now, doctor, dear, hard words just leads to bad feelings among neighbors, and that ye know as well as I do, and it's not me that would be using them. So I only said to her, 'I hope I'll live to see the floods flowing over your grave as your ditch waters have flowed over me garden,' and I let it go at that."—Youth's Companion.

A Peculiarity of Dreams.

As to dreams, there was a discussion at the club lunch, and one man remarked that no man dreamed of himself as braver than he is. When the dream came the dreamer was always the under dog. He was in horrible danger and never did anything picturesque to face it. There may be men who are brave in their sleep, but it would be interesting to find one man outside of the dozen sleeping cowards who is a hero in a dream.—London Chronicle.

The Wand of Sleep
OR

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER VI.

Maurice returned home after a somewhat stormy interview with Mrs. Dallas. For once the mother of Isabella was roused out of her habitual indifference, and she refused absolutely to accept Aylmer as her son-in-law.

"It is because that black woman distrusts me that you object," he said. "I wonder that an educated person should be dominated by that uncivilized creature."

"Dido has nothing to do with my refusal!" said the widow, coldly; "and although I take her advice in some things, I do not in this. I don't wish Isabella to marry you, and I request you to leave my house."

"As a gentleman I must accept your dismissal, but I decline to give up Isabella."

"And I," cried the girl, "swear to remain true to Maurice!"

"You'll do nothing of the sort," said her mother, violently. "I forbid you even to think of that young man. You shall marry whom I choose!"

"Dr. Etwald, I suppose?"

"No! Mr. Sarby."

"David!" ejaculated Maurice, in astonished tone. "You wish Isabella to marry him!"

"Yes! He loves Isabella much more than you do, and he asked permission—which you didn't—to pay his addresses to her. I consented, and so," Mrs. Dallas raised her voice, "he shall marry her."

"I refuse to marry Mr. Sarby," said Isabella, vehemently. "I hate him!"

"That is no matter!" replied her mother, coldly. "You must marry him!"

"Must!" repeated Maurice, with great indignation.

"Yes, Mr. Aylmer! Must! Must! Must! If you want an explanation of that you can ask Major Jen!"

"The Major! My guardian!" cried Aylmer, quite thunderstruck. "Is he against me?"

"Ask him! I want no further speeches from you. Go to your room, Isabella."

Resigning himself to the inevitable, Maurice gave one glance at Isabella, and went outside with a heavy heart. Dido was standing upon the veranda, with her eyes glowing like two coals. Yet there was an ill-concealed expression of triumph in her gaze which Maurice, in his then disturbed and angered state of mind, could ill brook. He paused abruptly as he passed by her, and asked a direct question:

"Why do you hate me, Dido?"

"Voodoo!" said she in a harsh voice.

"Bah! you black parrot!" muttered Maurice, scornfully, and turned upon his heel. As he vanished down the walk Dido clapped her hands together with great satisfaction, and began to sing in low tones. Her song was barbaric in words, and strange beyond all telling in the music. It rose and fell, and moaned and drawled in a curiously painful manner. In the drawing-room Mrs. Dallas had risen to her feet at the first deep contralto note, and now stood rocking herself to and fro with an expression of alarm on her face. Isabella was terrified in her turn. She shrieked and ran out of the room. Then Dido, still singing, appeared at the window, and looked at Mrs. Dallas with an expression of triumph.

"Why do you sing the death song?" asked Mrs. Dallas, opening her eyes.

"Because de master hab doomed dat paller-h'ar!" said Dido, and continued her song.

In the meantime, Maurice walked slowly homeward, puzzling out his own mind, as to what could be the meaning of these strange things. He could not understand why Mrs. Dallas objected to him as a son-in-law; nor could he surmise the meaning of the mysterious word "Voodoo," pronounced so significantly by Dido. However, he saw plainly that the negress was the disturbing element in the Dallas household, and by a half-hypnotic control over the weak will of her mistress, she could act as she pleased.

Maurice, simple and upright in conduct and character, was no match for the unscrupulous machinations of Dido. She hated the young man, and was determined that he should not marry her nursling. But whether she had, like Mrs. Dallas, a preference for David over Dr. Etwald, Maurice could not determine. The more he thought over affairs, the more incoherent and complicated did they become; so Aylmer gave up the task in despair. Then it occured to him that Mrs. Dallas had referred him to Major Jen; so to his guardian Maurice went the moment he arrived at the big house.

"Major gone out, sir," explained Jaggard, to whom Maurice applied for information. "He got a message from Dr. Etwald, and went to see him. Be back to dinner, sir, I b'lieve."

"Where is Mr. Sarby?"

"Gone over to Branch Hall, sir."

"Ho, ho!" thought Maurice, as he turned away. "So David had gone to see Meg. Now if he is in love with Isabella, and Mrs. Dallas favors his suit, I wonder why he acts in that way."

The question he could not answer, so dismissing it from his memory, he retired to the smoking-room with a novel. When Jen and David returned he intended to question both, and, is possible, get to the bottom of these sickening mysteries.

"Hang it!" soliloquized Maurice over his book; "since yesterday everything seems to have gone wrong. That negress and Dr. Etwald are at the bottom of affairs. But I can't see their reasons for mixing up things so."

Then he laid aside his book to think, and stared idly at the opposite wall. It chanced to be that upon which the barbaric weapons before alluded to were arranged, and conspicuous among them the golden handle of the devil-stick. Recalling the mention of Voodoo, and Etwald's reference to African witchcraft, Maurice connected in his own mind the devil-stick with those barbarisms, and on the impulse of the moment he rose to examine the magic wand. Handling it carefully—for he dreaded the poison, although it was said to be dried up—he wondered if Dido could make use of it were it in her possession.

"I heard Mrs. Dallas say that Dido's people came from Ashantee," soliloquized Maurice, "so I have no doubt she can work the infernal thing. Perhaps she knows enough to fill the bag with fresh poison. If she did so, I wouldn't trust myself near her. She would be sure to experiment on me."

At this moment Major Jen, looking slightly worried, entered the room, and seeing the devil-stick in the hand of Maurice, he stopped short with an ejaculation of surprise.

"You are looking at that thing, Maurice?" said he, wonderingly. "Now that is strange. I have just been talking about it with Dr. Etwald."

"Oh!" said Maurice, his thoughts flying back to the mysterious influence which he had seen Etwald exercise over Dido. "And what was the doctor saying?"

"A great deal. He saw the devil-stick the other night, and to-day he sent a note, asking if I would ride over and see him this afternoon. I did so, then he explained that he wished to buy that thing!"

"The devil-stick? Why?"

"I can't say. He explained that he had been in the Barbadoes; and that he took a great interest in the subject of African fetish-worship. He had heard of these 'wands of sleep,' as they are called, and greatly wished to obtain one, but he was unable to do so. Since seeing mine he has been seized with a desire to possess it."

"Why?" said Maurice, again.

"As a curiosity, I suppose. I've told you all he told me. But I refused to sell it to him, and he seemed greatly vexed, a display of irritation which in its turn vexed me. I was quite annoyed when I left him."

"Why don't you wish to sell it, Uncle Jen?"

"Because it is a dangerous thing to handle. Although the poison is dried up, yet there may be enough in it to kill a man. If I parted with it and anyone was injured by it, I should never forgive myself. Pray put it up, Maurice; I dislike to see you touch it. To-night, after dinner, I shall lock it up in a safe place. David is right; it should not be on the wall there."

"David has gone over to see Meg."

"Yes. I don't think he will be back until after dinner," said Jen, rising. "So you and I had better sit down as soon as we are dressed. I am very hungry."

"Uncle Jen, I want to ask you something. Do you wish David to marry Isabella Dallas?"

"I really can't say. That is a matter which lies in the hands of the girl herself. If she likes you better than David——"

"She does!"

"What! Have you spoken to her?"

"I have, and to Mrs. Dallas, who declines to sanction our engagement. She wants Isabella to marry David, and said——"

"I can guess what she said," interrupted Jen, hastily. "No more of this till after dinner, my dear lad. Then I'll explain all!"

"Explain what?"

"Why Mrs. Dallas wants Isabella to marry David." Not another word would the Major say on the subject at that moment, so Maurice was forced to seek his room in a very unsatisfied frame of mind. However, as he thought, here was one mystery about to be explained, and that was a comfort. As Jen prophesied, David did not return to dinner, and Maurice had a tete-a-tete with his guardian. But they talked of indifferent things, and it was not until they were once more in the smoking-room that the Major consented to speak on the subject of Mrs. Dallas' strange conduct.

"Now, my boy, I'm ready to tell——" Here Jen stopped and looked blankly at the wall.

"The stick!" gasped Jen, pointing a shaking hand at the wall. "The death-wand!"

Maurice looked—the devil-stick was gone!

CHAPTER VII.

For some moments the two men looked at one another; and then Major Jen, seeing the necessity for prompt action, rang the bell. Jaggard entered with military swiftness, and stared blankly at his master, who was pointing at the wall.

"Where is the devil-stick?" demanded Jen, wrathfully.

Jaggard advanced to the trophy of weapons, and examined them with some deliberation, after which he turned to face the irate Major.

"It's' gone, sure enough, sir, but I don't know where."

"Find out if any of the servants have taken it."

Jaggard saluted and vanished, while his master walked up and down the room, fuming at the loss of the curiosity. In a few minutes Jaggard returned with the news that none of the servants had been in the smoking-room that evening.

"Who lighted the lamp?" demanded Jen, sharply.

"We found the window open when we came in," said Maurice. "Did you open it?"

"Yes, sir. The Major told me to always air the room during dinner."

"Do you think that someone has stolen the stick, Maurice?" said the Major. "Someone from outside, I mean."

"I am sure of it," replied Aylmer, with decision. "Jaggard, did you notice that negress of Mrs. Dallas' about the grounds, since 5 o'clock?"

"Why, no, Mr. Maurice, I can't say as I did."

"The tramp, then; Battersea!"

"No, sir. Haven't set eyes on him for a week."

"Very good, Jaggard," broke in the Major, "you can go. Maurice!" he turned to the young man when Jaggard had left the room, "what do you mean by all these questions and examinations? Do you suspect anyone?"

"Yes," replied Maurice, deliberately. "I suspect Dido, the negress."

"Why?" asked Jen, with military brevity.

"It's a long story," returned Maurice. "Look here, Uncle Jen, I went to dress at half-past six; you did also. When we left the stick was in the room on the wall. Now we are here again at half-past eight; it is gone. In these two hours Dido has had time to cross the lawn yonder and steal it."

"But why do you suspect Dido? She was never in this room."

"No, but Dr. Etwald was."

"Dr. Etwald! Do you think he has anything to do with it?" queried Jen, perplexed, and a trifle startled.

"I am certain of it," replied Maurice. "He employed Dido to steal it from you, as you refused to sell it. Listen, uncle, and I'll give you my reasons for this belief," and then Maurice told succinctly all that had taken place at "The Wigwam" during the afternoon.

Major Jen listened quietly, and waited until Maurice ended his story before he spoke. The information about Mrs. Dallas and her reference to himself did not surprise him so much as Aylmer expected it would do. In fact, he only made one brief remark upon this point.

"I am sorry Mrs. Dallas said that," he remarked, when Maurice paused in his narrative.

"But what does she mean by it, Uncle Jen? Didn't you wish me to marry Isabella?"

"I am neither for nor against," replied Jen, enigmatically. "As I said before, let the girl marry whom she loves best."

"She loves me best!"

Major Jen wriggled uneasily in his seat. He disliked telling what appeared to him to be a silly story, but as such story bore strongly upon the present position of things, and as Maurice was impatiently waiting to be enlightened, Jen was forced to put his scruples on one side and speak out.

"If what I relate appears impossible, don't blame me," he said abruptly, "and I feel certain that you will laugh when I tell you about Voodoo!"

"That word again!" cried Maurice, in a puzzled voice. "Dido used it when we met Etwald; she repeated it to me before I left. Voodoo! Voodoo! What does it mean, Uncle Jen?"

"African witchcraft! Obi! Fetish-worship! The adoration of the bad spirit who catches mortals by the hair. Any one of these things explains the meaning of the term."

"H'm!" said Maurice. "It is a devil-worship pure and simple."

"Yes, and Mrs. Dallas knows more about it than is good for her. My boy," Jen laid his hand upon the arm of the young man, "when you reach my age you will find that there is no limit to the credulity and folly of human beings. When I was stationed in the Barbadoes many years ago I met Mrs. Dallas."

"Oh! so she is an old friend of yours!"

"Yes. I knew her in the West Indies shortly before Isabella was born. It was through knowing me," explained the Major, "that she came to this neighborhood and rented The Wigwam. You see, Maurice, I was one of the few people she knew here, and she remained near me for company's sake, and because she was afraid of her—!"

"I don't quite understand."

TRIP ON THE GREAT EASTERN.

Famous Steamship a Comfortable Boat So Long as She Kept Going.

"You can say what you please about the old Great Eastern," said an American who had crossed the ocean twice or more every year for almost half a century, "but she was a grand idea. The trouble was that the idea was almost fifty years ahead of its time. It has taken the world all that time to grow up to a Great Eastern, as exemplified by the Lusitania and the Mauretania.

"I made my first voyage to Europe in the Great Eastern. That was in 1862. It was the first time the vessel sailed into Liverpool. She had accommodations for 10,000 passengers, but there were only 100 in her on that trip.

"You know she had both a propeller and paddlewheels. As long as she kept going it was all right, for she moved along steadily and majestically, but one day we were hailed by a small French steamer that had mail to send to Europe and we stopped short in midocean while a boat put out from the other vessel.

"Well, how it happened I don't know, but the huge mountain of a vessel seemed to lose her balance. She wabbled about there in a dreadful fashion. Passengers and stewards were hurled about in every direction, and as for crockery, I don't believe a whole plate or cup and saucer was saved from the wreckage.

"On the vessel was every sort of general cargo, including live stock, and as for provisions, why, we had better food and fresher than you can get on a liner to-day. We had absolutely fresh meat, fresh milk and freshly killed chickens.

"Even in speed the Great Eastern was in advance of her time, for it took us only eight days to get to Liverpool."—New York Sun.

A Star Right Away.

"I'd like to become an actor."

"I suppose you have something to fit you for a career?"

"Oh, yes. I've got two boxes of grease paint, a wig and a false nose."

"Good. Buy yourself a couple of slapsticks and we'll star you in musical comedy."—St. Louis Star.

Its Weakness.

"Now, the house of lords has come to a bridge it must cross."

"I am afraid it is not a very strong bridge."

"Why not?"

"On account of the weakness of its peers."—Baltimore American.

Spellbound.

"Why don't you go on writing my speech?" said the orator.

"I'm spellbound," replied the typist.

"Has my eloquence such an effect?"

"Yes, sir. I never worked for a man who used so many words I can't spell."—Washington Star.

There, Little Lamb.

There, little lambs, don't cry!
We have sheared your wool, we know;
But we've let you go,
And the fleece will grow,
And you will come again by and by.
—New York World.

Modest Ambition.

Kicker—Wouldn't you like to be so famous that people would restore your birthplace?

Bocker—I'd be content if I could make the landlord repair my present flat.—The Sun.

A DEPARTMENT for WOMEN

Incivility of Women.

We hear and read much concerning woman's rudeness to man and man's ungentlemanly attitude toward womankind—but what about woman's incivility to woman? Is there anything to equal it? There are, says an observing writer, would-be ladies, there are so-called ladies and there are ladies. The first may get into the second class, but neither of the two is likely to rise to the third. Whether through fault or misfortune an unfinished lady seldom achieves the finished state.

The lack of consideration for the rights of others shown in public by women who pass by courtesy for ladies is of a kind peculiar to itself and members of their own sex are usually the victims. Women who travel in public conveyances with their children are sometimes almost brutally callous. Who has not seen a mother sitting angle-wise, with a child for whom she has paid no fare occupying another full seat, while tired and package-laden women are "strap-hanging" in visible discomfort directly in front of her? Conductors, however efficient, must not criticise the manners of their passengers too strenuously and few men venture to complain to or of a woman, therefore the remedy would seem to depend on the victims themselves, if the evil is to be remedied at all.

One of the guiding rules of would-be ladies who never will be ladies appears to be that of "last come first served." You will best observe this womanish trait at a ticket window, a bargain counter, or any similar place where individuals are being waited on one at a time, and the order of precedence is not enforced. Go, for example, into any large department store which maintains a "trading stamp" booth. Meek and patient women who have been waiting five or ten minutes for a turn, see some well-dressed imitation of a lady sail airily up, elbow herself to the front, claim her stamps and go blithely on her way, quite with the air of having done nothing that could call for unfavorable criticism. However other women may feel about it, to a man it is both amusing and exasperating to note the serene impudence with which some of these dear angels of the fair sex rush in where poor fools of men fear to tread.

Velvet and Fur Suit.

The velvet street suit trimmed with fur is the fad. These little suits are jaunty and graceful and are cut in short walking length, a band of fur trimming the bottom, as well as bordering the coat and the draped velvet turban. This suit is of royal blue velvet and the border fur is sealskin, the blue velvet turban having a sealskin border and an ornament of dull silver and blue.

Some Don'ts for Wives.

Don't begrudge your husband a few hours spent with his men friends. You meet friends. Be considerate and give him the same privilege.

Don't bother him with troublesome trifles that happen during the day.

Don't whine and complain over household difficulties.

Don't overwork and be tired and cross when he comes home. Your husband will see you tired and irritable where he will not be conscious of a few grains of dust which you may have dissipated at the expense of your strength.

Don't let yourself get old and ugly. Take time to keep yourself young and to cultivate good looks. If you can't be beautiful, try to be interesting.

Don't forget to cultivate your mind. Read about what is going on in the great world, so that if he makes a remark on current events you will be able to answer him intelligently instead of giving him a blank stare.

Don't inquire how his business is unless you are sure from his face that he has something pleasant to tell you.

Mustard Plaster.

Trim the crust from a thin slice of light bread, then sprinkle it thickly with ground mustard. Spread a thin cloth over the mustard and dampen with vinegar or water. Your plaster is all ready, with nothing to clean up after making it, and much better than the old sticky batter plaster. A piece of bread well dampened is better as a poultice than either flax seed or slippery elm, and will neither dry out nor sour so quickly.

Lure of the Club.

It is not at all true, as some people aver, that the lure of the club is the spirituous refreshment to be found there or its aloofness from the restraining eye of critical womankind. But it is true that it represents the highest development along lines of physical comfort as this is known and sought for by the animal man, and if the ladies, on the few days of the year when they are admitted within the doors of these sanctuaries of masculine luxury, would study what they see there they would speedily be made aware, by the objects visible before them, of the sort of indoor environment that most appeals to the soul of the average man.—John Kendrick Bangs in Suburban Life.

Health and Beauty Hints.

Change of employment gives rest, but not sufficient for the needs of the body. The absolute idleness, if it may be so called, of sleep is essential to health.

Nervousness due to hurry and high pressure is one of the most active promoters of indigestion. A few minutes' relaxation before eating will help to cure this difficulty.

The wise use of ten minutes every day in active rigorous exercise aimed at enlivening the vital organs rather than at mere muscular development will go far to induce a healthy body.

Spotted veils are hurtful. That is true of all striped visible clothing, blinds, wall papers, etc. All rapid alternations of light and shade are bad, as when walking by a line of tall railings through whose spaces a brilliant sun is shining.

Freedom of bodily activity insures health, since it helps to clear away the waste and debris of the physiological processes. The kidneys can do their work well if plenty of water is taken. Most people drink too little water. A daily average of six glasses is not too much in most cases.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

The silk cashmere comes in nearly every color imaginable.

A new veiling has a colored Russian center with a black chantilly border.

Golden-brown velvet, made in Russian blouse style, is an attractive model for the school girl.

Soft satins are more used for petticoats than taffeta, the latter's tendency to "whisper" being against it.

Madras in figured materials made into pretty blouses can be worn with moire skirts. The colors should be alike.

The button counters now have gilt ornaments in the way of slides and tassel tops for the finish of the narrow velvet scarfs.

Pointed fox, rich and lovely, seems to have captured a large share of feminine attention. The huge muffs and scarfs to match are especially popular.

One-sided frills on sheer blouses are the popular fad of the hour. Knife-plaited and scalloped edged, or simply ruffled and lace trimmed, they are French and dainty-looking.

Carnation is the latest scent upon which the seal of Parisian approval has been set. The dainty Parisienne wears a sachet of it in her gowns and wraps, uses a heavy extract and wears the genuine blossom.

Useful and Happy.

Try to be useful just where you are. Many of us are fond of imagining how much we should do if our circumstances were other than they are. But that is waste of time. The thing to do is to do as much as you can for others here and now, and so make the most of your opportunities.

Don't be so busy preparing for some vague future time when you will be happy that you have no time to be happy to-day. The future will soon be the present, and the chances are that, when it does come, we shall still be so busy planning that we shall miss our chance of happiness altogether.

Snap Shots at Women

Women have succeeded in Greece in having prisons established especially for women.

Miss Nellie Horton, of Fort Worth, has been elected treasurer and secretary of the Farmers' Union in Texas. She has just passed her 25th birthday.

Mrs. Danforth Williard Blanchard, one of the oldest woman suffragists in the world, is 99 years of age and lives with her niece, Mrs. J. B. Booth, in Detroit.

The Rev. Sarah A. Dixon, for several years associate pastor of the First Unitarian Church of Lowell, Mass., is now pastor of the Congregational Church at Tewksbury, Mass.

Miss Mary Nye of Columbus, Miss Bertha Salzgaber of Bellaire, and Mrs. Irvine C. Miller of Springfield, O., have been appointed deputy inspectors of workshops and factories.

The Wesleyan Conference of England recently passed by a large majority a motion to admit women as lay delegates. This resolution has to be approved by the synod before it can become a rule of the denomination.

Mrs C. C. Kenelly has been appointed probation officer of the New Orleans Juvenile Court by Judge Wilson. She has taught school for several years and has also had experience in handling children and young women as the agent of the Travelers' Aid Society of New Orleans.

Mrs. Isaac L. Rice of New York was chosen at the conference in London of the International Society for the Suppression of Street Noises to have charge of the second congress of the society, which is to be held in New York in 1912. The first congress is to meet in Berlin in June, 1910.

The Chamois Skin.

That useful friend of the housekeeper, the chamois, has an amazing habit of stiffening after a bath unless it is given with great care. Wash a chamois in soft water to which have been added a little borax and enough soap to form a lather. Shake up and down in the water and rub very gently. Rinse in cold water, shake in the air to get out as much of it as possible, pull it out well and lay it flat until partly dry. Now pull it through the hands several times, and there will be little danger of a chamois ruined by drying hard and stiff.

Women's Hats.

Women started on merry widows, but they've gone on to peach baskets, wash bowls inverted, and then to flower pots, but now they've gone on to wash baskets, and I wonder where they'll stop.—Gen. Ballington Booth.

One or the Other.

Triumph, or else yield to clamor;
Be the anvil or the hammer.
—From the German.

FOR AFTERNOON AFFAIRS.

A gown such as this would be ideal for afternoon teas, receptions, restaurant dinners, etc. It is made from Chinese blue moire velour, with inset pieces of darker velvet on either side at waist line, cut in points as shown in the sketch. The beauty of the gown is further enriched by bands of sable over shoulder and around bottom of skirt. Note the clever and artistic cut of tunic, the points of which are finished with rosettes of velvet. The yoke and stock are white lace and the band across bust line is heavy with gold embroidery.

Memories of the War

"Boat Infantry" at Charleston.

"It was there the war began;" and, before stating one of the most interesting incidents of personal bravery and excellent service of volunteers under extraordinary circumstances, I should like to refer more particularly to that remarkable situation where the war was kept up from the first shot with a tenacity and perseverance on both sides that were never excelled anywhere, and where the result was finally determined by the flanking movement of Sherman's army, which caused the withdrawal of the Confederate forces from Charleston and all its defenses. Probably nowhere else was the blockade maintained at so much cost and trouble, and in no other entrepot along the two thousand miles of blockaded coast were so many contraband cargoes successfully run in under the guns of the Union fleet. The harbor was early obstructed by the sinking of stone-laden vessels, and the channel leading to the city was obscure and dangerous; it was commanded by guns from half a dozen islands and shores, and the approaches to the cradle of the rebellion were so lined with defense that it became no empty boast that Charleston could never be taken by direct attack. It was not taken in that way, as I have stated. Almost the whole monitor fleet of turreted ironclads was assembled in the harbor! tons of solid shot and shell were poured upon Fort Sumpter, making of it nothing but a heap of broken stone and brick. Still it resisted every form of attack, and assaulting parties sent to occupy it were beaten off or captured. The assault on Fort Wagner, on one of the outlying islands, was gallant, costly, and ineffectual, and the siege went on by slow approaches. Union batteries were erected in swamps, where it seemed impossible to gain or keep a footing. It was done by the most patient and wonderful labor in making a foundation on which to place heavy guns (in spite of Colonel Serrell's protest that he could not do it without a detail of soldiers each twelve feet long). But when this "Swamp-Angel" battery was planted securely, and its heavy guns began to demolish exposed positions of Charleston, at a distance of four miles, with 200-pound shells, a most astonishing feat was performed, the like of which had never before been known in war. And still the city would not surrender! It seems to me that every survivor of the great conflict—North, South, East and West—ought to be able to read the story of that long and obstinate warfare about Charleston with a feeling that the heroism of the American soldier was illustrated both by the attack and the defense.

I wonder how many of the readers of these sketches have ever heard of the "boat infantry" that was so important a part of the Union efforts to capture Charleston?

It is my belief that nowhere was better scouting done, or better results obtained by it, than that of Colonel Lewis S. Payne in Charleston harbor, with details of his regiment, the One Hundredth Regiment New York Volunteers.

I knew Colonel Payne almost since my boyhood. He was very free to talk of the stirring days, and nights of 1863, when he penetrated the works and inlets of the harbor with his boats and brought back information of the utmost value, which could not be in any other way obtained. I have heard him tell how he learned in this way that a large detachment of Confederates had been withdrawn from Secessionville, one of the suburbs of Charleston, and the difficulty he had in convincing General Vodges of the fact, although those very troops fought at Chancellorville. He has told me how he came on board Admiral Dahlgren's flagship with important information; he, wet, muddy and tired as he was, being most politely welcomed to the Admiral's cozy cabin, where that officer was cutting a big watermelon, quite at ease. His most difficult and dangerous duty, however, and that in which he was finally taken prisoner, was to go out at night, locate the positions of the enemy and the routes of their vessels in supplying their garrisons with provisions and ammunition, and then to send up a rocket to guide the fire of the Union mortars. He made himself so troublesome to the Confederates in this way that shrewd plans were laid for his capture, which at last succeeded.

From a history of the One Hundredth Regiment, New York Volunteers, written by Major George H. Stowits, of that regiment, I am permitted to make the following interesting extracts upon this subject:

"Previous to the disposition of the necessary forces for an assault on Morris Island, Colonel Payne had given his opinion as to the number of rebel troops upon the island. Generals Gillmore, Strong and Seymour could not credit his statement. As proof, he visited the island and counted the tents, giving his estimate to General Gillmore. On the faith of this report, 1,000 men were added to the assaulting force. Colonel Payne's statements thereafter were taken as facts, as nearly as facts could be ascertained. General Gillmore over his own signature gave Colonel Payne power to call for all the men he needed, and turned over to him the whole picket-line of ten miles, extending the length of Morris and Folly islands. Officers outranking him were chagrined to learn that their reports must be made to him, and not to Gillmore's headquarters. Captain Payne (as was then his rank) and Company D, 100th Regiment, were the advanced guard, living in boats in the marshes between the opposing armies, and styled the 'Boat Infantry.' On the night of August 3, 1863, while engaged in intercepting communications of the enemy with Fort Sumpter and other points through his signals to our batteries, he was attacked by a superior force, and after a desperate engagement he was wounded and taken prisoner with his men, many of whom were also wounded. He was confined in Queen Street Hospital, Charleston, until his health permitted his removal to Columbia, where he was kept in close confinement until February 14, 1865, when he was exchanged. He was the vest scout in the Department of the South. He was, in fact, the eye of the army in its operations before Charleston."

Here is a simple account of an officer who had the capacity to discharge most unusual and dangerous duty, and who did it thoroughly and well. Thousands and thousands of subordinate officers and enlisted men there were who were of priceless value to the Union cause in their several ways; but we never hear of them.

The Stolen Pig.

A light battery was quartered at Point of Rocks, on the Appomattox, in 1862. The fat pigs of the farmers ran at liberty about the camp, and orders had been given that they were not to be disturbed by anyone. One morning a planter rode to the Captain's tent and complained of the loss of one of his pigs. Captain R., who was a whole-souled kind of a fellow, told him that he was very sorry for it, and further, that his camp should be searched, and the offender made to suffer if he could be found. Diligent search failed to get any clew to the pig, or the men who killed it, and there the matter dropped. The Captain declared, if he could find out who killed the pig, or any one who ate any part of it, that he should pay for it.

The next day some of the non-commissioned officers invited the captain and his lieutenants to dine with them, as they had just received several boxes from their homes. The invitation was accepted and the next day the feast was spread in grand style. In seating the officers at the table, the captain was given the most prominent seat, before which had been placed a fine cut of shote. This the officer was asked to cut. Soon all were seated and having a good time, when a burst of merriment told the story. Captain R. had carved the pig as requested, during which act he had placed a piece in his mouth; this was a part of the planter's lost pig, and so, in accordance with his own orders, he had to pay for it.

"Swamp Angel" Incident.

Colonel Serrel, of the New York Engineers, had the charge of the construction of the "Swamp Angel," at Morris Island, S. C., and being of an energetic constitution himself, and not afraid to enter swamps, his surprise can be imagined when one of his lieutenants, whom he had ordered to take twenty men and enter that swamp, said that "he could not do it—the mud was so deep."

Colonel Serrel ordered him to try. He did so, and returning with his men covered with mud, said:

"Colonel, the mud is over my men's heads; I can't do it."

The colonel insisted that it must be done, and told the lieutenant to make a requisition for anything that was necessary for the safe passage of the swamp.

The lieutenant did make his requisition in writing, and on the spot. It read as follows:

"I want twenty men eighteen feet long, to cross a swamp fifteen feet deep."

The joke was a good one. It seemed, however, not to add a cubit to the stature of the lieutenant or his twenty men, but rather his arrest for disrespect to his superiors.

The battery, nevertheless, was built with the aid of wheelbarrows and sand. Like Jonah's gourd, it sprang up in a night.

TRAPPISTS FOND OF THE FARM.

Scattered About Canada, Farming and Priesthood Go Together.

Scattered throughout Canada are many curious religious communes, especially in the province of Quebec, but there is none more curious or interesting than the settlements of the Trappist Monks.

This brotherhood has three settlements in the dominion—in Nova Scotia at Tracadie, in the wilds of northern Quebec, near the Lake St. George district, and on the banks of the Ottawa river, not far from Montreal. One of the most interesting of the monasteries is that near the village of Oka, on the Ottawa river.

The Trappist is a farmer as well as a priest, and the Oka farm of 800 acres is one of the best tilled in that part of Canada. All kinds of grain are grown, an excellent vegetable garden is maintained, and a large orchard and vineyard add picturesqueness to the rural scene. But the Trappist is a stock grower as well as an agriculturist, says the Busy Man's Magazine. There are few finer thoroughbred stocks than the Percheron stallions and huge bulls kept there. The order owns several hundred cows, 300 sheep and thirty-five horses.

Adjoining the barn is the dairy, where a fancy cheese is produced that has a high reputation in the Montreal market, as have the claret and wines produced from the vineyards.

How to Know the Twins.

The Beverly twins, Fred and Frank, were such exact counterparts of each other that none of the neighbors could tell them apart, and even their mother sometimes had her doubts. The resemblance is accentuated by the fact that they are dressed exactly alike.

"How in the world can you yourself tell which is which, Mrs. Beverly?" asked a caller one day.

"To tell the truth," she answered, "I can't always. But if I hear a noise in the pantry and I call out, 'Fred, is that you?' and he says, 'Yes, mamma,' I know it's Frank and that he's in some kind of mischief."

He that is envious or angry that a virtue is not his own, at the perfection or excellence of his neighbor, is not covetous of the virtue, but of the reward and reputation.—Jeremy Taylor.

A number of the neighbors of Ward Baughman and wife spent last Friday evening with them. They moved to their new home near Auburn last Tuesday.

M. R. Wilson and family moved from Auburn to their farm last week. We are glad to welcome them to our neighborhood.

Some of the friends and neighbors of Will Barnhart and family gathered at their home Saturday night for a farewell party. Mr. Barnhart will move this week to the Grube farm south of Auburn.

John Souders and family will move this week to John Wimer's farm, south east of Auburn.

Albert Bainbridge is getting the material on the ground to build an addition to his house this spring.

The L. A. S. will meet Thursday afternoon at the home of their president, Mrs. Sherwood, who will give a church coffee at that time. This is also the day for the election of officers for the coming year.

Wallace Wilson and family visited last Sunday with Mr. Reed and wife, south west of Auburn. The ladies are sisters.

The new court house for this county seems to be one of the main subjects talked about lately. The taxpayers outside of Auburn seem to think that the building as planned will be too expensive. They would rather have a less expensive building than be burdened with so much taxation. Until recently the buildings were unsafe and nearly worthless, according to Auburnites, but now they are worth over $20,000. It seems that some people can change their minds to suit circumstances.

Spencerville

R. R. Wyatt and wife are the proud parents of a fine baby girl. It is one week old.

Rosa High spent the latter part of last week with her parents at Auburn.

An assault and battery case is on deck Friday, at 12 o'clock, before John Means, J. P., also a civil suit at 10 o'clock, same day. Better move the court house to Concord or Spencerville, neither one is as dead as Waterloo.

Gerry Wasson has rented Frank Boger's farm. He will move this month.

Emmet Armstrong and Will Farner are hauling their wood up and cording the same.

Miss Lydia Watson fell the other day and injured one of her limbs quite badly. It might have been worse.

Calvin Means and wife are the proud parents of a nice baby girl. They call it Flossie Lucile. Grandpa Stevens is walking around as proud as a pig in a rye patch.

John Means has more business than a married man. Monday he took four seed orders, three fruit orders, started two lawsuits, had one man arrested, besides doing the work on the farm, such as building hog pens, cutting wood and doing chores. Pretty good for a man 60 years old, and yet he was sick.

We see people are trimming their orchards this spring more than usual. Let the good work go on.

"I Am Glad"

writes Mrs. Ethel Newlin, of Liberty Center, Ind., "that I began to take Cardui, for it has cured me, and I will never forget it. "I cannot praise Cardui too highly for what it did for me. The Woman's Tonic

Beware of strong, noxious, mineral drugs, that sink into your system, like lead to the bottom of a basin of water.

Cardui is purely vegetable and contains no poisonous minerals, or dangerous drugs.

It is perfectly safe and harmless, for use by old and young, and may be taken, as a tonic, for months, without any possible harmful effect. Try it.

The Law in Regard ng the County Ca

That whenever forty per cent of the whole number of legal voters of any county in this state, to be determined by the whole number of votes cast for Secretary of State, at the ing general election, in such County, at a regular session thereof, for the relocation of the County Seat of such County, stating in such petition, with certainty the site where such relocation is desired and that such petitioners have procured the conveyance to such board by deed, conveying a perfect and unincumbered title in fee simple of not less than 2 acres of ground for the site for the new County buildings, and shall accompany such petition with such deed and legal evidence of the validity of the title to the real estate thereby conveyed, and shall file an affidavit of one or more of such petitioners that all of said petitioners were, at the time of signing said petition, legal voters, and that the signatures are genuine and shall present proof of notice of the pendency of such petition as herein after provided and shall deposit with such board the sum of $2,000.00 to pay an architect for plans and specifications for new buildings and a bond, to the approval of the board of commissioners, in such amount as may be deemed proper by the board, and may be made payable to the State of Indiana, conditioned for the payment of the expense of the election hereinafter provided, it shall be the duty of such board of commissioners to order an election to determine the question of such location: Provided, that no county seat shall be relocated under the provisions of this act until the same shall have remained in its location twenty five years: Provided, That no election shall be ordered under the provisions of this act when the appraised value of the county buildings exceed twenty thousand dollars, to be determined by the appraisers. To ascertain and fix the amount and value of the real property and building of any county or county seat it shall be the duty of the county board before whom a petition is filed, as above provided in this section, to direct the auditor of said county to notify the governor of the state of the filing of the same, who shall, upon the reception of said notice, appoint three disinterested persons, non-residents of said county, as commissioners to examine said real estate belonging to such county, and assess the value thereof, including the buildings and improvements thereon situate. And to enable them to do so they shall meet at said county seat on a day whereof public notice shall be given, and they may examine competent witnesses as to such value; and after they, or a majority of them, shall have agreed, they shall make out duplicate statements of such action and conclusion, and file one copy to the governor of state: Provided, That no county seat shall be removed under the provisions of this act a less distance than one mile, nor a greater distance than fourteen miles, from the location of the court house before such removal

Things That Happen at the Bottom of the Sea.

Naturalists dispute as to the quantity of light at the bottom of the sea. Animals from below 700 fathoms either have no eyes or faint indications of them, or else their eyes are very large and protruding.

Another strange thing is that if the creatures in the lower depths have any color it is orange or red or reddish orange. Sea anemones, corals, shrimps and crabs have this brilliant color. Sometimes it is pure red or scarlet, and in many specimens it inclines toward purple. Not a green or blue fish is found.

The orange red is the fish's protection, for the bluish green light in the bottom of the ocean makes the orange or the red fish appear of a neutral tint and hides it from its enemies. Many animals are black, others neutral in color. Some fish are provided with boring tails, so that they can burrow in the mud.

The surface of the submarine mountain is covered with shells, like an ordinary seabeach, showing that it is the feasting place of vast shoals of carnivorous animals.

A codfish takes a whole oyster into its mouth, cracks the shell, digests the meat and ejects the shell. Crabs crack the shells and suck out the meat. This accounts for whole mounds of shells that are often found.

Not a fishbone is ever found that is not honeycombed by the boring shellfish and falls to pieces at the touch of the hand. This shows what destruction is constantly going on in these depths.

If a ship sinks at sea with all on board it will be eaten by fish, with the exception of the metal, and that will corrode and disappear. Not a bone of a human body will remain after a few days.—Philadelphia North American.

Had to Do It.

Champ Clark was showing a constituent about the capitol one day when he invited attention to a solemn faced individual just entering a committee room.

"See that chap?" asked Clark. "He reads every one of the speeches delivered in the house."

"What!" gasped the constituent.

"Fact," said Clark. "Reads every word of 'em too!"

"Who is he?" queried the visitor, regarding the phenomenon closely.

"A proofreader at the government printing office," explained Champ.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Miss Leta Geddes was very much surprised on Tuesday evening, when on entering her home, from work, she was greeted by fourteen of her girl friends, it being the anniversary of her birth. The main feature of the evening was music in which each girl was compelled to show her talent, there being one a graduate from Chicago, who rendered some beautiful music. Later in the evening a dainty luncheon was served, after which the guests departed for their homes. Miss Leta was the recipient of many useful presents.

A BLOW IN JAMAICA

Things That Happen When a Big Storm Breaks Loose There.

A WEST INDIAN HURRICANE.

It Will Leap Out of a Clear Sky and Level Almost Everything In Its Path—Then Comes a Torrential Downpour That Ends In a Flood.

"Have you ever been through a West Indian hurricane?" said a man who has lived in the tropics on and off for a number of years. "Do you want to know what the experience is like?

"A hurricane will leap out of a clear sky, swoop down on a city, blow everything in its path flat and pass on. Then follows the tail of the hurricane, a steady breeze blowing in the same direction, but at a much lower velocity. This is likely to continue for many hours, sometimes for many ddys, and is always accompanied by a torrential downpour of rain.

"I was in Kingston, Jamaica, at the time of the hurricane of 1903. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon I was in my office on the top floor of a rickety wooden building. As suddenly as a clap of thunder the room went dark.

"I had a pretty good idea of what was about to happen and, going to the window, looked out across the roofs. A black cloud had whirled up out of the southwest, obscuring the sun, but the mountains back of the city were still golden with light.

"In less than a quarter of an hour the wind reached us. The first structure that went was a wooden watchtower about 200 feet high that had been used in the old days to locate ships approaching the harbor. It had weathered all previous hurricanes, but this time it went down like a house of cards. Spars of lumber from that tower were carried as far as twenty blocks before they came to the ground.

"Then the spire of the church went, the roofs of a good many residences were torn off, and some fine palm trees in the public gardens snapped off about halfway from the ground. Buildings in Kingston, however, are calculated to stand a pretty severe blow. They are built only a few stories high, and the roofs present a broad and comparatively flat surface to the wind. Considering the velocity at which that hurricane was traveling, the damage was not great. Even my crazy office building withstood it. But the tail of the thing followed, with a heavier rain than I have ever seen before or since. To say that it came down in bucketfuls would be mild. It was as if the clerk of the weather had taken the plug out of some huge vat suspended above our heads and allowed the water to plump straight down on us.

"In three hours the macadam on the streets had been washed into the harbor. The street outside my window was a rushing river as much as four feet deep in places. I saw a cart try to cross it, but with the water above the axle of the wheel and the horse's legs being washed away from under it it was an impossible task, and the driver turned back. Big casks and packing cases were dancing on the surface like corks.

"As you can imagine, I did not get home to supper that evening. It was 8 o'clock before the rain stopped and the water in the streets had drained into the harbor. Even then traffic had not begun to reorganize itself.

"The trolley car tracks had been washed out, and no cars were running. Cabs, however, were doing a roaring business, and eventually I got a cabman to drive me home for three times his customary charge.

"The damage to property in Kingston mounted up to hundreds of thousands of dollars, but the real destruction was wrought in the country districts. Floods wiped out many a negro village and sent the flimsy houses floating down the rivers. The railroads were tied up for nearly a week. Every banana tree in the path of the hurricane was uprooted. Oh, yes, a West Indian hurricane can do a lot of damage when it gets busy.

"Loss of life, did you say? Of course there was. Nearly 200 people were killed throughout the island on that occasion, but we grow accustomed to that in the West Indies. We expect a hurricane every once in awhile, and we know that it will take its toll of human life when it comes. If you had been telling the story you would probably have mentioned that first of all, but sudden death is so common below the tropic of Cancer that we get callous, I suppose."—New York Sun.

Albion and Columbia.

"Albion, the Gem of the Ocean," was written and composed by Jesse Hammond, an English government dock official, about 1820 and was heard above all others in the theaters, music halls and on London streets. It is apparent that "gem of the ocean" fits an island more aptly than our large tract of continent, and "borne by the red and the blue" (the red of the British army and blue of the navy) is more logical than the meaningless line "borne by the red, white and blue." The lines of the English songs are almost word for word identical with our version, "The Red, White and Blue."—Exchange.

Eat What

You want of the food you need Kodol will digest it.

You need a sufficient amount of good wholesome food and more than this you need to fully digest it.

Else you can't gain strength, nor can you strengthen your stomach if it is weak.

You must eat in order to live and maintain strength.

You must not diet, because the body requires that you eat a sufficient amount of food regularly.

But this food must be digested, and it must be digested thoroughly.

When the stomach can't do it, you must take something that will help the stomach.

The proper way to do is to eat what you want, and let Kodol digest the food.

Nothing else can do this. When the stomach is weak it needs help; you must help it by giving it rest, and Kodol will do that.

Our Guarantee

Go to your druggist today, and purchase a dollar bottle, and if you can honestly say, that you did not receive any benefits from it, after using the entire bottle, the druggist will refund your money to you without question or delay.

We will pay the druggist the price of the bottle purchased by you.

This offer applies to the large bottle only and to but one in a family.

Nervous Prostration

Much sickness is of nervous origin. It's the nerves that make the heart force the blood through the veins, the lungs take in oxygen, the stomach digest food, the liver secrete bile and the kidneys filter the blood. If any of these organs are weak, it is the fault of the nerves through which they get their strength. Dr. Miles' Nervine is a specific for the nerves. It soothes the irritation and assists in the generation of nerve force. Therefore you can hardly miss it if you take Dr. Miles' Nervine when sick. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

GUN COTTON.

A Peculiar Characteristic of This Terrible Explosive.

Many and odd are the materials entering into the manufacture of modern explosives, but perhaps the most interesting of all these elements of destruction as well as the simplest is gun cotton. The gun cotton manufacturing industry is large, as enormous quantities are used in the charging of torpedoes and for similar purposes.

The base of gun cotton is pure raw cotton or even cotton waste, such as is used to clean machinery. This is steeped in a solution of one part of nitric and three parts of sulphuric acid. It is the former ingredient that renders the mass explosive, the sulphuric acid being used merely to absorb all moisture, thus permitting the nitric acid to combine more readily with the cellulose of the cotton.

After being soaked for several hours in the solution described the cotton is passed between rollers to expel all nonabsorbed acid, a process carried to completion by washing the cotton in clear water. This washing process is a long one, requiring machinery which reduces the cotton to a mass resembling paper pulp. Should any nonabsorbed acid be allowed to remain it would decompose the cotton.

If the explosive is to be used after the manner of powder it is still further pulverized and then thoroughly dried, but if intended for torpedoes it is pressed into cakes of various shapes and sizes—disk shaped, cylindrical, flat squares and cubes. When not compressed gun cotton is very light, as light as ordinary batting.

A peculiar characteristic of this terrible explosive is that a brick of it when wet may be placed on a bed of hot coals, and as the moisture dries out the cotton will flake and burn quietly. If dry originally, however, the gun cotton will explode with terrible force at about 320 degrees of heat.

In general it is the custom to explode gun cotton by detonation or an intense shock instead of by heat. In a torpedo the explosive charge is wet, this wet cotton being exploded by means of dry cotton in a tube, this having been fired by a cap of fulminate of mercury, the cap itself having been fired by the impact of the torpedo against the target.—Harper's Weekly.

Plenty Doin' in Court

Judge Bratton and Court Stenographer Van Auken have assumed their duties incident to the March term of the DeKalb circuit court and from present indications they will have plenty to do.

The first week of the March term was appropriated for the making of issues and other preliminaries and the cases set down for trial subsequently are as follows: March 14, state vs. Moughler; March 15, state vs Thomas Shull, Walter Kinsey, Fred Fouch; March 16, state vs. W. H. Ware; March 21, state vs Frank Gelhouser, state vs Grover Sapp; March 22, state vs James Stoehr, Wayne and Adrian Stroh; March 24, state vs Hal Burton.

The above mentioned cases will all be tried by juries and will probably consume more time than the calendar indicates. What will probably prove the most interesting from a public standpoint will be the Ware case, which has been so much talked of during the past several weeks

Letters By Telegraph

Announcement is made by the Western Union Telegraph Company that it will shortly be prepared to handle long night messages at the rates customarily charged for ten-word day messages

It appears that the Western Union has a large unemployed milage of wire at night which is not earning anything. These wires must be maintained in any event to take care of the regular day business, and it is apparently the idea of the new interests in the telegraph company to let the public have the benefit of them. The announcement states that "a special Night Letter service will be established as soon as practicable. The charge for this service will be the standard day rate for ten words, for the transmission of fifty words or less, and one-fifth of such standard day rate will be charged for each additional ten words or less."

To be taken at those rates "Night Letters" must be written in plain English language, that is to say, code words or communications written in foreign languages will not be accepted. The messages will be taken at any hour up to midnight and transmitted at the company's convenience during the night for delivery the following morning. For the present the new service will be confined to the Western Union offices in the United States.

INDIAN MONUMENT FOR NEW YORK HARBOR

Perpetuate the Memory of First American---To Be Erected By Popular Subscription

A bill introduced in both houses of congress providing for a colossal statute of the North American Indian to be placed in New York harbor was reported in the house on March 1. This measure was introduced by Representative Joseph A. Goulden and Senator Chauncey M. Depew, of New York, and provides that there shall be erected without expense to the United States government, by Rodman Wanamaker, of New York City, and others, on a United States reservation in the harbor of New York, a memorial to the memory of the North American Indian. It is further provided that a commission consisting of the chairman of the committee on library, of the senate, the chairman of the committee on library, of the house, and the secretaries of state, war, navy and interior, the attorney general and Robert C. Ogden, of New York, shall be created with full authority to select the site in the harbor of New York and a suitable design, and to contract for and superintend the construction of the memorial.

This bill is the result of a suggestion made by Mr. Rodman Wanamaker, at a celebrated dinner given last May at Sherry's New York, in honor of Col. Cody, the famous Indian scout. The idea of erecting a statute of an Indian, with arms outstretched in welcome at the gateway of the New World met with such instant enthusiasm that there is little doubt, but that the measure will meet with unanimous support.

While the ways and means of providing money to finance the enterprise have not yet been decided upon, it is expected that the statute will be a national monument to perpetuate the memory of the first American, and an opportunity will be given to every one who desires to contribute; it is estimated that one penny from every man, woman and child in the United States will furnish ample means for its erection.

Already various tribes of the Order of Red Men throughout the United States have taken steps to contribute their share to the general fund It is planned that each of the five hundred thousand members of the Order of Red Men represented in the four thousand tribes in the United States shall contribute two cents each, which would amount to $10,000 A pile of copper cents amounting to $10,000 is far more imposing than a single check for that amount donated by some one individual to whom it would mean so little.

The idea of this statute originated with Mr. Rodman Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, during an expedition made by him in 1908, for the purpose of studying the Indian on his own ground. His first impulse was to present the statute to the country, but the concensus of opinion is that it should be a national gift, and that every child in the country should be allowed to contribute one penny in memory of a race that is fast becoming extinct.

The bill is backed by the entire New York delegation, both in the house and in the senate, and is receiving the support of the president, the vice-president, and many prominent men in political and financial circles. Very valuable aid is being given to secure the passage of the bill by Senators Owen, of Oklahoma, and Curtis, of Kansas, and by Representative Carter, of Oklahoma, all of whom trace their ancestry back to the noble Red Man of the forest.

A. V. Sinclair Passed Away

The death of Mr. A. V. Sinclair occurred at his home in Waterloo, Sunday morning. While not unexpected, it cast a gloom over the community, and was a sad shock to the family.

Mr. Sinclair was a lieutenant in the Uniform Rank K of P. and the regiment composed of Sir Knights from Kendallville, Auburn, Butler, Waterloo and other points under command of Capt. F. E. Johnson of Kendallville attended the obsequies in uniform.

The funeral was largely attended in the M. E church at 2:00 p m Wednesday, Rev. E. E Bergman delivering the funeral oration.

The revival meeting is still in progress at the Church of God. A good spirit prevails Services every night during the week, also Sunday morning as usual. Every one invited to attend these meetings. H. S. Herendeen, pastor.

THREE BOYS ARE ARRESTED

Sheriff Takes Them Into Custody For Ashley Robbery

Early Sunday morning Sheriff Thomas went to Ashley and placed Ivan and Harry North, brothers, and Frank VanLear, aged sixteen, eighteen and nineteen, respectively, under arrest for the robbery of the James Smith hardware store last Friday night. Their arrest followed the discovery of the stolen revolvers, razors and cartridges in their possession, and the North boys admitted having done the work, while the VanLear youth denies having had anything to do with it, insisting that the stuff found in his possession was given to him by the North boys. They were all lodged in the county jail, and will be arraigned early in the week.

Ivan and Harry North joined their father in the county jail, making their incarcaration something like a family reunion. The elder North is from Butler, and has served fifty days of a ninety day sentence for intoxication.

All three of the boys have been wayward and their last and worst deed does not surprise the people of Ashley. A reform school term for one and the penitentiary for the other two will be the outcome.—Garrett Press.

When Furniture Buying Time Comes

There are two words of advice that all should remember--GO SLOW.

You may safely hurry when purchasing a new pair of gloves or shoes, or any article that you will be done with in a short time.

But with furniture go slow, you are buying for life. We invite you to be deliberate--ask questions, so that you may know exactly wdat you are doing.

There's our experience to help the inexperienced, and there's a well chosen stock to do your chooing from.

Nobody who bgys furniture hgre ever regrets it. Like wine, our furniture improves with age.

There's a reason.

CHICAGO'S MOST INTERESTING POLITICAL CONVENTION

THE WIGWAM — SCENE OF THE GREAT CONVENTION

GEORGE ANTHON, PRESIDENT OF THE CONVENTION.

"A cavalry charge and an American national political convention are the two most exciting things I know," remarked a distinguished foreigner from his seat in the diplomatic section at the 1908 Republican convention in the Chicago Coliseum, during the progress of the forty-nine-minute Roosevelt demonstration. The same distinguished foreigner was at the Democratic convention the following month in the Denver Auditorium and, again from the diplomatic section, he witnessed the eighty-eight-minute Bryan demonstration. "I want to amend my Chicago declaration," said he to one of his friends after adjournment, "and go on record that a Republican national convention and a Democratic national convention are the two most exciting things I know."

Prior to 1860 the conventions had been comparatively tame, says a writer in the Chicago Record-Herald. They had been in the nature of semi-private assemblages, the general public not being admitted in large numbers. The convention of 1860 was the first to have a special building erected for it. At that convention telegraph wires and instruments were for the first time brought into a convention building. For the first time large numbers of spectators were admitted and for the first time there was organized cheering and planned demonstrations.

The convention which nominated Lincoln perhaps had a wider, deeper, more enduring effect on the history of the country than any other convention of a political party in American annals. Nominations began almost at once after the convention was called to order. William M. Evarts presented Seward's name. New York immediately got into action with that species of carefully planned demonstration and scientific cheering which have become the most spectacular and thrilling parts of a modern convention. So startling was the effect of the well arranged Seward cheering that members of the Lincoln forces felt somewhat "appalled," as one of the Illinois delegates expressed it. When the name of Seward was presented "the shouting was absolutely frantic, shrill and wild. Comanches or panthers never struck a higher note nor gave screams with more infernal intensity.

The Illinois, Indiana and other Lincoln delegates at once proceeded to avail themselves of New York's lesson in the art of demonstration. They marshaled their forces into yelling battalions and arranged that there should be one great demonstration of lung power when Lincoln was nominated and a second, a still greater demonstration, when the nomination was seconded. The organized Lincoln cheering duly began when the future President was put in nomination by N. B. Judd, chairman of the Illinois delegation. It was a good beginning, but not quite equal to the Seward nomination shouting. The Seward cohorts had another chance to show their powers as noise-makers when the Seward nomination was seconded.

But then Caleb B. Smith of Indiana took the floor to second the nomination of Lincoln and then was afforded the opportunity for which Illinois had particularly planned. Women had been requested to wave their handkerchiefs during the demonstration following the seconding speech, while hundreds of flags were distributed to be waved as well. Signals were agreed upon to regulate the cheering. "No mortal before saw such a scene," wrote Leonard Swett in describing what happened after Mr. Smith had spoken. "The idea of us hoosiers and suckers being outscreamed would have been almost as bad as the loss of our man. Five thousand people at once leaped to their seats, women not wanting in the number, and the wild yells made soft vesper breathings of all that had preceded. No language can describe it. A thousand steam whistles, ten acres of hotel gongs, a tribe of Comanches, headed by a choice vanguard of pandemonium, might have mingled in the scene unnoticed." As the roar died out a voice cried: "Abe Lincoln has it, by the sound now. Let us ballot."

Balloting followed without delay. There were three ballots. On the first Seward received 173 votes, while Lincoln had but 102. Delegates to the number of 183 divided their votes among Simon Cameron of Pennsylvania, Salmon P. Chase of Ohio, Edward Bates of Missouri, William L. Dayton of New Jersey, John McLean of Ohio and Jacob Collamar of Vermont. These delegates held the balance of power. On the second ballot the break to Lincoln began. Pennsylvania cast her fifty-two votes for the Illinoisan after going into conference. This was regarded as a certain index of what happened on the third ballot. Lincoln on the second ballot got 181 votes, while Seward had 184. On the last ballot the break gathered full headway. As the ballot progressed it became plain that Lincoln was running in advance of Seward. Suddenly the word went around the hall: "Two hundred and thirty-one and one-half for Lincoln. Two and one-half more will give him the nomination."

An instant of silence followed, according to the chroniclers of the episode. The convention was grappling with the idea. Then the chairman of the Ohio delegation sprang upon his chair and cried: "Mr. President, I rise to change our vote from Mr. Chase to Mr. Lincoln." Lincoln was the nominee.

WAGE-EARNER'S BURDEN GROWS

Arthur Selwyn-Brown, M. A., Ph. D., in a special market letter, says that wages have increased approximately 24.2 per cent since 1896, while the average price of common commodities has gone up 44 per cent. The workingman may be stronger, but see how much larger his burden has grown!

YELLOW DOG IN A PULPIT.

A yellow dog in the pulpit created an unexpected diversion in the Congregational Church at Florence, Mass. The mongrel yelped until the strains of the Doxology were too faint to be heard. When Deacons Smith and Graves held out their hands and said coaxingly, "Nice doggie," the animal snapped at them and the deacons beat a precipitate retreat. The dog was finally chased out of the church by a 7-year-old boy.

GOES BACK 250 YEARS

World's Richest Woman Can Trace Her American Ancestry to the Pilgrims.

MARRIAGE WAS A LOVE MATCH

Blessed with Wealth, Mrs. Harriman Materially Assisted Husband in Early Struggles.

Mrs. Edward H. Harriman, who, by the terms of her husband's will, becomes the world's richest woman, can trace her American ancestry back to 1650. For two centuries, says the New York World, her forbears have lived in the northern section of this State—men of solid respectability and women of assured social position. She was Mary Williamson Averell, and her birthplace was the thriving little city of Ogdensburg, in St. Lawrence County.

Further back than goes the memory of any living man the Averells have been a power in the business and social life of Ogdensburg. Her father, William Averell, was the head of a banking house and president of the old Ogdensburg & Lake Champlain Railroad Company, which is now the Rutland. Her grandfather was Judge Averell, one of the most distinguished jurists in the history of St. Lawrence County.

The judge's wife, Mrs. William Averell, was rated a beauty in her day, and throughout her long life in Ogdensburg her social supremacy was never disputed. She lived to be 96 years old and almost every member of her family was long-lived and remarkably vigorous to the end.

It was from this stock that Mary Williamson Averell sprang, dowered from the start of life with good health, social position and considerable wealth. She had hardly made her social debut, when Edward H. Harriman came into her life. He had already made a name for himself in Wall street and big financiers were talking of him as a "coming man."

Almost before Ogdensburg society realized that young Mary Averell had laid aside her school books, her engagement to Mr. Harriman was announced.

It had been a love match in the truest and best sense of the term and the years brought no wavering of mutual devotion. Six children were born to the Harrimans and all survive save the eldest, Edward H. Harriman, Jr., who died in infancy.

The other children are Carnelia, the wife of Robert Livingston Gerry; May, who was recently reported engaged to Robert W. Goelet; Carol, who has only entered society; W. Averell, the eldest son, who is learning railroading, and Roland, a boy in his 'teens, studying under a private tutor.

Mrs. Harriman has been a prominent figure at many of the social functions which live in history. She was a guest at the wedding of Janet Reid, daughter of Whitelaw Reid, in London, and her gorgeous diamond necklace made up of huge and perfectly matched stones worn on that occasion drew out press comments throughout Europe.

Mrs. Harriman was also a guest at James Hazen Hyde's Louis Quinze ball, at which Mme. Rejane, the noted French actress, figured.

In January of last year at her dinner dance which introduced her youngest daughter to society Mrs. Harriman entertained Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Iselin, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Burden, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Gladys Roosevelt, Mrs. Henry Rogers Winthrop, Ruth Twombly, Dorothy Whitney and a host of others numbered in the elite.

Of Mrs. Harriman's social future there is no feeling of doubt. With practically limitless wealth at her command, society confidently expects that she will ultimately exert a powerful influence in its affairs.

The future of the great house on Tower hill, with its 200 rooms and more is an interesting topic of speculation.

DIES IN BURNING HAY.

Near Laurel, Del., William G. Rawlens, 19 years old, perished on a load of burning hay. Rawlens went to a tenant farm for the hay, which was loaded on a rick wagon holding several tons. When about a mile from home neighbors noticed his two horses running wildly in front of a sheet of flame. The horses made for home and before they reached Rawlens' house the young man had been burned to death.

What Came Up.

A young man wishing to have a bit of fun at a farmer's expense passed a few remarks about his cattle and his garden, and then said he had set some lettuce and cabbages had grown up.

The farmer said:

"Oh, that's nothing. I set some carrot seeds and what do you think came up?"

"Don't know," replied the young man.

Farmer—Why, old Brown's donkey, and ate the lot.—Tit-Bits.

WILL NOT DOWN.

Hosts of Islam Yet Firm Before Christian Advances.

It is a serious mistake, says Dr. G. K. Simon, to regard Islam as a dead and merely formalistic religion. Those who have had opportunity to study it at close range have been amazed at the elasticity with which it is able to adapt itself to various political and social changes. Indeed, such great colonizing powers as England and Holland have at all times been forced to yield in important matters to the prejudices of their Moslem subjects. No religion that is on its death bed can compel such respect and consideration from its political superiors.

In Persia there is an English law that every Englishman who offends the feelings of a Moslem can be banished—a law which indeed has been applied so far only "in terrorem." And long before there was a tolerant duma in Russia, it was legally permissible for a Russian subject to become a Mohammedan, but a convert to Protestantism was sent to Siberia. In order to flatter the emirs of West Africa, England even caused its heathen soldiers to be circumcised. Under British government the courts of Egypt are not in session on Friday, but are at work on Sunday.

In Egypt English soldiers salute the kiswa, the sacred carpet, which the Sultan every year dedicates and sends to the sanctuary at Mecca, the Kaaba. Even under the rule of the Dutch, who in recent decades have been thoroughly cured of their former dream of winning Islam by conforming to its codes, it is not lawful that any "priajo," or official, in Java, should be a Christian. It would seem that the pan-Islamic idea and propaganda have in recent years made the government of the colonies more difficult than ever, and that the very contrast between the Christianity of the rulers and the Islam of the ruled has increased the determination of the latter.

QUAINT MANX CUSTOM.

Precautions Taken in Isle of Man Against Many Disasters.

The hunting of the wren by boys on St. Stephen's day at Douglas is a custom of almost immemorable antiquity, says the Dundee Advertiser. A wren caught before sunrise was formerly believed to insure a good herring fishing, and it is from the prominence of this belief in the Isle of Man that the practice originally rose. Miss Agnes Herbert in a book on the Isle of Man has the following interesting account of the ceremony:

"At every house visited a feather would be left for luck in return, of course, for largesse; and this feather was considered an effective security. Shipwreck, witchcraft, evil eye and the like had no terrors for the carrier of the wren's feather. In the dim twilight hours it was the old custom to bury the piteous little plucked body of the tiny bird in a corner of consecrated ground, amid a screen of solemn lamentation, which was immediately followed by an orgy of games and general rejoicing.

"For many years now the whole performance has been enacted in wrenless fashion—'Hamlet,' without the Prince of Denmark. I have only once ever seen a wren suspended from the gay, sad pole, and that twenty years ago. The play acting 'hunt the wren' parties still go about the villages of the Island, but in ever lessening numbers, haphazard, like the May queen nuisances in some parts of England and signs are not wanting that the whole ancient practice is falling into desuetude."

SKATER SAVED BY A DOG.

While a party of boys were skating on a pond at Powder Valley, Pa., one of the number named Merkle broke through. A newfoundland dog belonging to one of the boys jumped in and grabbed the sinking boy by the slack of the coat and held him above water until the rest of the boys had succeeded in getting hold of a plank. One of the boys then laid himself flat on the plank and was pushed over the ice until he reached the edge, where the dog was still holding up the boy. Thus the rescuer succeded in dragging both lad and dog on the ice, and from there to the shore.

Highest Viaduct in World.

The highest viaduct in the world was opened to traffic recently by the French Minister of Labor. It is situated at Fades on the Orleans railway system in the Puy-de-dome department, between the stations of Lapeyrouse and Volvic. The viaduct is 144¾ yards above the river Sioule. It has taken eight years to build and has cost about $800,000. Previously the highest bridge over which a railroad passed was the Chokteik viaduct in Birmania, 139¾ yards high.

WHAT IT MEANS TO BE A "MILITANT" SUFFRAGETTE—IN ENGLAND

How do you think you'd like to masquerade as a pretty colleen, a Scotch lassie or a Lancashire lass and parade the streets of London? How do you think you'd like to kneel on the pavements of that same historic city and write "Votes for Women"—as Arsene Lupin wrote his name on the walls of his victim's home—in colored chalk? How do you think you'd like to dog the footsteps of a great English statesman and interrupt his speeches on the budget and tariff reform with the hackneyed phrase of "What about votes for women?" How do you think you'd enjoy riding through the streets of London town, first in a mock "Black Maria," or prison van, and then in a real one? And, finally, how do you think real prison fare would taste to you for three months in the year? You don't fancy it at all? Then, dear enthusiast for equal suffrage, don't go to England and join the noble army of suffragettes, for all these things they do—and more!

When Mrs Emmeline Pankhurst, the famous English suffrage leader, appeared at the reception given in her honor at the Women's University Club in Madison Square, New York City, she made a most significant remark. She had been discussing the artificial feeding of women prisoners in the English jails, when a local equal suffragist remarked with a smile: "Well, I believe in suffrage, but I would not go on a hunger strike for the cause." The English worker threw the New York woman a glance of withering contempt and replied sternly: "Then your belief in suffrage cannot be very deep. There is one thing I cannot brook in a worker—and that is indifference." No, you cannot merely believe in the Cause in England; you must fight for it—and several American women who have identified themselves with the movement across the Atlantic have found this out to their sorrow or their exaltation, as their natures were swayed by emotion.

In creating sympathy for "the cause" the suffragette may work singly or in company with a large party. Perhaps she is assigned to address factory workers. Then all unescorted she hies herself to the nearest factory during the noon hour and pleads for "the cause." Sometimes she addresses the hardest lot of British workmen you can imagine, but she always commands their attention and respect. If she cannot reach the outer fringe of listeners with her voice, which is often hoarse from much speaking, she uses a megaphone.

If she writes a good hand you will find her in company with half a dozen fellow workers busily engaged in writing "Votes for Women" all over the pavements of London or some other large English city. If some of her more daring sisters have recently been jailed by the heartless authorities you will find her arrayed in prison garb riding through town in a mock "Black Maria" or police van, attended by an imitation policeman, generally some suffragette sympathizer of the opposite sex.

Up one street and down another the little group parade, the loungers murmuring as they pass: "They're a brave lot, them suffragettes. They'll even go to jail for the ballot."

Or perhaps it is a holiday, and all London forgets its woes and goes a merrymaking. Then you will find the suffragettes fitting their labors into the holiday mood. No prison garb now, but fancy costumes such as you would see at a masquerade—the Irish colleen in her green cloth and velvet dress, the Scotch lassie with her gay plaid, the English peasant with her white blouse and pleated skirt. They mingle with the holiday throng distributing suffragette literature and interspersing cries of "Votes for Women!" with the quaint folk songs of the part of Great Britain they represent.

Perhaps Madame Suffragette is rich and owns her motor car or carriage. Then behold her on her drag, handling the reins as if to the manner born, and, behind her, fellow workers spreading huge banners that read "Votes for Women." "Come to the mass meeting at ——— and teach the Government that women should have the ballot."

These are simple tasks. Storming that historic building, the Houses of Parliament, is a far more serious undertaking, but the London suffragettes rallied to the task last June, and three thousand London bobbies could not hold them back. They were led by the redoubtable Mrs. Pankhurst, and their orders were to do or die, no matter what the cost. The ostensible object was to reach Premier Asquith with a petition for equal suffrage. The real reason was to show their superb organization and strength. Flying wedges were formed, bobbies' faces were tidily slapped, clothing was disarranged, windows in the huge building were broken by stones, and one hundred and twelve valiant suffragettes were led in joyous triumph to the nearest police station, chanting "Votes for Women" as they went.

English suffragettes must do picket duty in all sorts of weather. For days and nights they surrounded the home of Premier Asquith, and when he was finally obliged to leave home and face them on his steps he was immediately rushed by the pickets, shouting "Petition! Petition! Will you grant us a hearing?"

"I will take your petition," replied the Premier, reaching out his hand.

And the four women who landed in jail for obstructing traffic and defying the police were the happiest women in all England.

The English women gave $250,000 to "the cause" last year. They held 20,000 meetings to advance "the cause." And if you will go to one of their "At Homes" in the London headquarters any Monday you will find from 1,000 to 1,500 sympathizers and active workers in attendance.

But do you think you'd like to take orders from this noble band of modern suffrage workers? Do you think you'd be willing to give up all—home, friends, society, funds and individual freedom—to enlist under the banner of "the cause?"

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

De Forest, Wis.—"After an operation four years ago I had pains downward in both sides, backache, and a weakness. The doctor wanted me to have another operation. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I am entirely cured of my troubles."—MRS. AUGUSTE VESPERMANN, De Forest, Wisconsin.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—MRS. LILY PEYBOUX, 1111 Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

Thirty years of unparalleled success confirms the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to cure female diseases. The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

If you want special advice about your case write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free and always helpful.

WESTERN CANADA

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel (360 miles north of the International boundary). Your vacant land will be taken as a gift beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land." Ready

Knee to Ankle a Mass of Humor.

"About seven years ago a small abrasion appeared on my right leg just above my ankle. It irritated me so that I began to scratch it and it began to spread until my leg from my ankle to the knee was one solid scale like a scab. The irritation was always worse at night and would not allow me to sleep, or my wife either, and it was completely undermining our health. I lost fifty pounds in weight and was almost out of my mind with pain and chagrin as no matter where the irritation came, at work, on the street or in the presence of company, I would have to scratch it until I had the blood running down into my shoe. I simply cannot describe my suffering during those seven years. The pain, mortification, loss of sleep, both to myself and wife is simply indescribable on paper and one has to experience it to know what it is.

"I tried all kinds of doctors and remedies but I might as well have thrown my money down a sewer. They would dry up for a little while and fill me with hope only to break out again just as bad if not worse. I had given up hope of ever being cured when I was induced by my wife to give the Cuticura Remedies a trial. After taking the Cuticura Remedies for a little while I began to see a change, and after taking a dozen bottles of Cuticura Resolvent, in conjunction with the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, the trouble had entirely disappeared and my leg was as fine as the day I was born. Now after a lapse of six months with no signs of a recurrence I feel perfectly safe in extending to you my heartfelt thanks for the good the Cuticura Remedies have done for me. I shall always recommend them to my friends. W. H. White, 312 E. Cabot St., Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 4 and Apr. 13, 1909."

Too Risky.

In boring for oil when the drill reaches the depth where it allows gas to escape every precaution is taken against igniting it, lest there should be a destructive explosion. This necessary precaution gives point to the following story, told by a writer in the Pittsburg News.

"I can deal with men," growled a grizzled oil driller, "but a woman can outdo the best of us.

"I brought in a well in Virginny right close to the kitchen door of a little farmhouse. Just as we were getting to the ticklish point, where smoking wasn't allowed within forty rods, out comes the farmer's wife and goes to building a big fire in a Dutch oven.

"Mebbe I didn't kick, but she just showed me a batch of dough an' said if she didn't bake it 'twould spoil. It I wanted the fire out I had got to pay for the dough—ten dollars, too. She just dared me to touch that Dutch oven, an' I didn't touch it, either. I just gave her the ten.

"Mebby we didn't get that fire out quick. If the well had broken loose it would have blown me an' the whole farmhouse out of sight.

"No, sir; I don't want any more dealings with women. They're too risky."

Uncle Allen.

CLEAR-HEADED.

Head Bookkeeper Must Be Reliable.

The chief bookkeeper in a large business house in one of our great Western cities speaks of the harm coffee did for him:

"My wife and I drank our first cup of Postum a little over two years ago, and we have used it ever since, to the entire exclusion of tea and coffee. It happened in this way:

"About three and a half years ago I had an attack of pneumonia, which left a memento in the shape of dyspepsia, or rather, to speak more correctly, neuralgia of the stomach. My 'cup of cheer' had always been coffee or tea, but I became convinced, after a time, that they aggravated my stomach trouble. I happened to mention the matter to my grocer one day and he suggested that I give Postum a trial.

"Next day it came, but the cook made the mistake of not boiling it sufficiently, and we did not like it much. This was, however, soon remedied, and now we like it so much that we will never change back. Postum, being a food beverage instead of a drug, has been the means of curing my stomach trouble, I verily believe, for I am a well man to-day and have used no other remedy.

"My work as chief bookkeeper in r Co.'s branch house here is of a very confining nature. During my coffee-drinking days I was subject to nervousness and 'the blues' in addition to my sick spells. These have left me since I began using Postum and I can conscientiously recommend it to those whose work confines them to long hours of severe mental exertion."

FARM AND GARDEN

Education and Farming.

Under the heading, "Plain Talk by a Plain Farmer," a writer in the Agricultural Epitomist says:

"It seems to me that we are fast coming to that place where it is going to mean something to own a farm and mean much more to know how to handle it. We are beginning to look upon the farm as something that requires the brightest mind to manage. In my travels about the country I have found places where at one side of the road we saw fine land and fine stock, everything looking prosperous, and on the other side exactly the reverse, everything going to pieces, poor crops and poor stock, and the owner head over heels in debt. I am sorry for the man who is unfortunate, who has sickness or anything of that kind to contend with, but what is the reason in the same neighborhood for so great a difference? It is not always an accident or sickness, but because one man is the farmer and the other is not a farmer. I think we can do no better work than help speed the day when we may educate our farmers in our public schools so that they can read the agricultural papers and bulletins intelligently. The trouble is not that farmers do not read the agricultural books, papers and bulletins, but that their early education has been neglected and they are unfamiliar with the terms that we are compelled to use in writing upon agricultural topics. There is no greater need in our education to-day than something that will assist in connecting our experiment station workers, our agricultural press and our agricultural writers with their readers."

Slopping Large Herd of Hogs.

I have been using a device with which to slop pigs for a number of years and find that I can slop 150 pigs with it easier than any way I know of, writes an Iowa farmer. The illustration explains itself, but I will add a few pointers. Each of the four troughs is 16 feet apart. A 22-foot trough is attached to the fence a couple of feet above the floor of these troughs, and slop poured into this trough runs into each one of the four troughs by pipes.

By this plan all troughs are filled with equal rapidity, and if the outlet of each pipe is bent it will shoot the slop half the length of the trough before the pigs stop it. The trough is set on a cement floor, which keeps mud holes from forming and makes it a very nice place to feed the pigs at all times.

FOR SLOPPING HOGS.

Covering Cement Floors in Winter.

An excellent suggestion is made by a practical swine breeder to those having cement floors in their pens.

He advises a movable wooden floor for the winter. He makes his own floors of one inch boards, and lays them flat on the cement, in section small enough to be easily removed at any time. In this way he combines the advantages of both the cement and the wood. He can remove the board floor, scrub out the pen and also thoroughly clean and disinfect the false floor outside. Cement is the cheapest material in the end for the floor of the hog pen. The floor of the outer apartment should be a few inches lower than the house floor, so as to insure drainage and dry sleeping quarters.

The Largest Incubator.

There are a great many things that we can claim to lead the world in, but Australia has the largest incubator in the world. It has a capacity of 11,440 duck's eggs or 14,080 hen's eggs. This monster hatching machine consists of an ordinary shed, with a corrugated iron roof; the egg trays hold 130 duck's eggs or 160 hen's eggs. There are four of these trays end to end, one above the other, on each side of the room, making eight in all. Heat comes from steam pipes supplied from a large boiler and moisture from pans under the lower tier of trays. The incubator is claimed to be working very well and to be quite a success.

Investigating Poor Egg Yield.

There may be several causes why your hens are not laying. Maybe they are infested with lice. This is a very frequent cause of non-laying. Maybe they don't get sufficient green food or animal food; either cause may prevent them from laying. Maybe they don't get enough exercise. Keep investigating until you find out the cause of the non-supply of eggs, and if you find that and apply the remedy your trouble will be over.

Ventilating Stables.

Horses and cows are in the stable at night for rest. When the weather is warm the atmosphere in close confinement becomes very warm and oppressive, so much so that the animals become very uncomfortable and hence fail to get proper rest. The horse that does not get proper rest is not in a good condition for heavy work the following day, and the cow that does not sleep in a cool, restful place in hot weather will not give a full flow of milk. The temperature of the working or producing animal must be kept normal to give the best results. If there are no windows in your stables cut out a number now and let light and fresh air come for the health and comfort of the animals.

Suggestion for Rotation.

Try this rotation for lands that are falling down in their grain yields: Corn or potatoes, manured; wheat; clover; wheat or flax. Oats or barley may substitute for the wheat. This gives a five-year rotation, three crops of which have a cash value to the grower. The tillage of the corn has a better effect than summer fallow, the manuring of the land returns to the soil much of the fertility and gives to the land a friable texture that retains water well, while the clover crop aids in the same manner and at the same time restores to the soil the nitrogen of which the crops rapidly deplete it.

It is estimated by Dean Shepperd, of the North Dakota Experimental Station, that this rotation, followed consistently, will in a period of years return to the owner of the land a larger cash value, year by year, than will continuous cropping to small grains.

Grubbing Implement.

It is, of course, generally known that the lever principle gives the greatest power for the smallest physical exertion. It is not so generally known that the work of grubbing is a veritable labor of Hercules and that the uprooting of a few sturdy bushes and young trees is all the exercise some men want. A Virginia man, however, was cognizant of both these truths and he set about inventing an implement on the lever principle to be used in grubbing. The result was the article shown in the cut, which is guaranteed to uproot anything but the village chestnut tree and the Constitution. First there is a base with an arm rigidly attached. There is a jaw at the end of the arm, and a brace to which a lever is pivoted. On the end of the lever is another jaw, co-operating with the first-mentioned. The implement is thrust close to the root of a bush, the stem of which is seized between the two jaws and a pull on the lever tears the bush up.

GRUBBING DEVICE.

A Few Horse Don'ts.

Don't ask me to "back" with blinds on; I'm afraid to.

Don't let some blockhead drive me that has less sense than I have.

Don't run me down a steep hill, for if anything should give way I might break your neck.

Don't whip me when I get frightened, or I will expect it next time and may make you trouble.

Don't trot me up hill, for I have you, the buggy and myself to carry. Try running uphill with a load yourself.

Don't drive me with an "overcheck" on; the sun hurts my eyes and I can't see where to step. It's inhuman and cruel.

Teach me to stop when you say "whoa," and this you can do without jerking my head off or tearing my mouth. It may check me if the lines should drop or break and save a runaway and smash-up.—California Voice.

Developing Strong Constitutions.

Part of the stamina, durability and spirit of the horse is inherited, and part is produced through proper feeding. The growing colt should have a variety of nourishing feeds that contain a fair proportion of mineral matter for the building of a strong frame. It should be allowed the freedom of pasture for almost all of the year, and a hilly pasture is preferable for developing strong muscular, lung and heart power.

Feed for the Lambs.

Accustom the lambs gradually to full feed. Corn and early cut clover are the best combination for finishing lambs. It is a balanced ration and is grown on almost every farm. Succulent food, as roots or silage, should be available, and should be fed once a day. Food like this keeps the skin in good condition and gives the wool a better luster.

Pea Growing for Soil Improvement.

Pea growing for soil improvement is quite profitable on sandy lands that are especially lacking humus. Pears are a good crop to sow on clover or timothy sods the first year after breaking, as they greatly aid in subduing the soil. The peas should then be followed by a crop of grain and the land seeded down to clover.

Healthy Rations for Colt.

When the colt begins to eat, give it a variety of feeds for the building of the various tissues of its body. Clover hay and wheat bran contain necessary mineral matter for the building of bone. Flax seed meal in small quantities is good for keeping the colt's bowels in good condition and for making its coat sleek.

Stability of Rock Phosphate.

Rock phosphate does not leach out of the soil; it might wash off from a hillside. As to the quantity, it is best to keep applying rock phosphate until the soil content of phosphorus has been brought up to 1,500 or 1,800 pounds per acre in the surface seven inches.

The Dual Purpose Cow.

The dual purpose cow may be all right for some farmers, but she does not give as much milk as the dairy cow and eats considerably more, nor does she produce as much beef as the beef cow, and eats just about as much.

Hay Farming with Chemicals.

Hay farming with chemicals as commonly practiced no doubt removes more fertility than it restores, but the process is very slow and no doubt highly profitable under conditions.

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

Chopping Knife.

No this is not a bird cage in the illustration. It is a chopping knife designed by a Colorado man and a strong and effective implement it is. The blades, as will be observed, are circular and are attached to the handle by heavy curved arms. When this tool is brought down on a piece of meat or a head of cabbage it speedily converts the objects into shreds. In most cases chopping knives are made with single, or at best, double blades. It will be readily seen that a circular blade will do much more work than one or two straight ones. Another use for this cutter is in cutting the dough for doughnuts, cookies or other circular cakes, though in ordinary round cakes the inside ring will form the cake while the hoop of dough that is left can either be baked into a hoop of cake or the leftover dough can be rolled again and the cutting continued till all is used up, as is usually done.

CHOPPING KNIFE.

Fruit Salad.

Peel two large oranges and cut each lobe into three pieces. Remove the seeds from a cup of Malaga grapes; shell and break into bits a dozen English walnut meats. Mix these ingredients and set on the ice until very cold. Line a chilled bowl with crisp lettuce leaves, put the fruit in the center of the bowl and cover well with mayonnaise or French dressing.

Plain Fruit Cake.

Two cups dark-brown sugar, one cup sour milk, teaspoon of baking soda in milk, scant cup of melted shortening, teaspoon of ginger, teaspoon of cloves, teaspoon of cinnamon; mix smoothly. Add three cups sifted flour, two teaspoons (level) baking powder, cup raisins, cup currants. Mix again and bake in a loaf for one hour in moderate oven.

Southern Batter Bread.

One quart of white cornmeal, half teaspoonful of soda, enough buttermilk or clabber milk to make a pliable batter, one-half teaspoonful of salt and two tablespoonfuls of flour. Stir well and bake thoroughly in gem pan or heavy iron or pour thin layer in iron skillet. Serve pippin apple sauce and Kentucky bacon with this for breakfast.

Deviled Beef.

Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan or chafing dish; add two tablespoonfuls of green pepper and one tablespoonful of onion, both finely minced; one teaspoonful each of salt and lemon juice, one tablespoonful of flour. All one-half cup of tomato sauce. Heat beef in this until smoking hot, and serve at once on hot plates.

Corn Bread.

Beat together one-quarter cup of white sugar and a piece of butter the size of an egg, and stir in two beaten eggs. Add one-half pint of sweet milk, two cups of white flour, one-half cup of yellow cornmeal, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a little salt. Beat hard and bake in a long, narrow bread tin in a moderate oven.

Apple-Sauce Cake.

One and one-half cups apple sauce, warm and sweetened; one cup sugar, one-half cup butter, cream together; add one cup raisins, two teaspoons cinnamon, one-half teaspoon cloves, two cups of flour or a bit more, one teaspoon baking soda, stirred into apple sauce; bake in loaf forty minutes.

Gingerbread (Fine).

Two cups molasses, cup shortening, cup buttermilk, teaspoon cloves, teaspoonful ginger, half cup raisins, flour for soft dough; drop with teaspoon on greased tins or bake in shallow pans.

Frosting for Sauce.

Three tablespoons boiling water, one teaspoon vanilla; mix nice and smoothly with powered sugar and spread on cake while a bit warm. Add cocoanut if you like.

Hints About the House.

Enameled ware which has become discolored can be cleaned with a paste made of coarse salt and vinegar.

Discolored cups and dishes used for baking can be made as new by rubbing the brown stains with a flannel dipped into whiting.

Many families will really suffer from a squeaking hinge for weeks, when one application of machine oil or a little heated lard will result in perfect silence.

Valuable lace should be kept wrapped in blue paper. White paper is often bleached with chloride of lime, which injuriously affects any delicate fabric that lies against it any length of time.

To clean stained flower vases put a little vinegar in a glass and then some soap powder. Shake the glass till the stains are removed, then wash in warm water. The vinegar and soap powder can be used for several glasses.

To make bread crumbs quickly cut the soft part from a stale loaf, put it into a clean muslin bag, tie the bag at the top and gently rub it with the hands for a few minutes. The crumbs will then be fine enough for anything.

Porcelain-lined bathtubs and wash towels are quickly and effectually cleaned with a soft cloth dipped in gasoline. Have a bottle tightly corked in the bathroom closet, where it is always at hand, but avoid accidents by keeping this dangerous fluid away from lights and fire.

THE WONDERBERRY OR SUNBERRY

Has Proved a Great Success—Thousands Say It's the Best Thing They Ever Grew.

The Wonderberry or Sunberry, the marvelous garden fruit originated by Luther Burbank, and introduced by John Lewis Childs, the well-known seedsman of Floral Park, N. Y., has proved a great success all over the country. Thousands of people say it is the best thing they ever grew.

Mr. John Burroughs, the well-known author, Naturalist and bosom-friend of Theodore Roosevelt, says it is the most delicious pie berry he ever tasted, and a marvelous cropper.

A Director of the New York Agricultural Experiment Station says it fruits abundantly even in pure sand. In the short season of Northwestern Canada it is a godsend, and fruits long after frost has killed most garden truck.

D. S. Hill, Wichita, Kan., says thirty people grew it there last season with perfect satisfaction.

K. S. Enochs, Hammond, La., says it yields $250 worth of fruit per acre with him. Mrs. J. H. Powers, 4732 Kenwood avenue, Chicago, raised enough berries on a space 4x10 feet to supply herself and friends.

J. P. Swallow, Kenton, Ohio, says its equal for all purposes does not exist.

Rev. H. B. Sheldon, Pacific Grove, Cal., says he likes the berries served in any and every way.

W. T. Davis, Enon, Va., says it is true to description in every way, and fruits in three months from seed.

Judge Morrow, of U. S. Circuit Court, says the Wonderberry is simply delicious raw or cooked.

Mr. Childs exhibited one plant five months old bearing 10,375 berries which measured about eight quarts.

Mrs. Hattie Vincent, Hayden, New Mexico, says it stands long, hard droughts of that climate and fruits abundantly all summer.

It is certainly the most satisfactory garden fruit and the greatest Novelty ever introduced.

In a Trance.

Strength at Various Ages.

According to excellent authority the muscles, in common with all organs of the human body, have their periods of development and decline, our physical strength increasing up to a certain age and then decreasing. Tests of the strength of several thousand individuals have been made and the following figures are given as the averages derived from such tests:

The lifting power of a youth of 17 is 280 pounds; in his twentieth year this increases to 320 pounds and in the thirtieth and thirty-first years it reaches its height, 365 pounds. At the expiration of the thirty-first year the strength begins to decline, very gradually at first. By the fortieth year it has decreased eight pounds and diminution continues at a slightly increasing rate until the fiftieth year is reached, when the figure is 330 pounds.

Subsequent to this period strength fails more and more rapidly until the weakness of old age is reached. It is found impossible to obtain trustworthy statistics of the decline of strength after the fiftieth year, as the rate varies greatly in different individuals.

A Carlyle Retort.

An empty headed duke once said to Thomas Carlyle at a dinner:

"The British people, sir, can afford to laugh at theories."

Carlyle, scowling, replied:

"The French nobility of a hundred years ago thought that they could afford to laugh at theorists too. But a man came and wrote a book called 'The Social Contract.' This man was Jean Jacques Rousseau, and his book was a theory and nothing but a theory. The nobles could laugh at his theory, but their skins went to bind the second edition of the book."

Origin of White Race.

The discussion of the precise locality where the primitive man developed into the white race is by no means settled as yet. The old theory that the Aryan or white race began in Asia is still held by many high authorities, but other authorities equally high maintain that the original "white man's country" was Europe and that from Europe the race spread to other parts of the world. It is safe to say that the last word upon the subject has not yet been spoken. The debate is still open and will probably remain so for a very long time to come.—New York American.

Woman's Power Over Man

Woman's most glorious endowment is the power to awaken and hold the pure and honest love of a worthy man. When she loses it and still loves on, no one in the wide world can know the heart agony she endures. The woman who suffers from weakness and derangement of her special womanly organism soon loses the power to sway the heart of a man. Her general health suffers and she loses her good looks, her attractiveness, her amiability and her power and prestige as a woman. Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., with the assistance of his staff of able physicians, has prescribed for and cured many thousands of women. He has devised a successful remedy for woman's ailments. It is known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a positive specific for the weaknesses and disorders peculiar to women. It purifies, regulates, strengthens and heals. Medicine dealers sell it. No honest dealer will advise you to accept a substitute in order to make a little larger profit.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

SUNBERRY—The Improved Wonderberry

LUTHER BURBANK'S GREATEST CREATION. A Luscious Berry Ripening in Three Months From Seed

SEED 20 CTS. PER PACKET. 3 PACKETS FOR 50 CTS. POSTPAID

This is positively the GREATEST new Fruit and the best NOVELTY of modern times. These are facts which no one can get away from. The proofs are overwhelming in number and conclusive in character. Grown last year by 350,000 people.

Fruit blue-black like an enormous rich blueberry in looks and taste. Unsurpassed for eating raw, cooked, canned or preserved in any form. This great garden fruit is equally valuable in hot, dry, cold or wet climates. Easiest plant in the world to grow, succeeding anywhere and yielding great masses of rich fruit all summer and fall. The greatest boon to the family garden ever known. Leaves and branches are also used for greens and are superb. Everybody can and will grow it.

Luther Burbank, of California, the world famous plant wizard, originated the Wonderberry and turned it over to me to introduce. He says of it: "This absolutely new berry plant is of great interest and value as it bears the most delicious, wholesome and healthful berries in utmost profusion and always comes true from seed."

READ MY CATALOGUE, pages 3 and 5, for full description, culture, uses, etc. (Also Colored Plate.) With scores of testimonials from well-known and reputable people all over the country. Also the "Crime of the Wonderberry."

THE SUNBERRY is an improved form of the Wonderberry which I introduced exclusively last year and which proved so satisfactory. It is greatly superior to the original type, and I alone have genuine seed.

SEED 20c per pkt.; 3 pkts. for 50c; 7 for $1.00.

With every packet of seed I send a booklet giving 100 Recipes for using the fruit, raw, cooked, canned, preserved, jellied, spiced, pickled, jam, syrup, wine, greens, etc. It is superior for any of these uses.

Also a copy of my 152-page Catalogue with every order—which tells all about my $12,000 IN CASH PRIZES AND OFFERS. AGENTS WANTED. MY GREAT CATALOGUE of Flowers and Vegetable Seed, Bulbs, Plants, and Rare and New Fruits FREE to all who apply. 152 pages, 500 illustrations and colored plates. I have been in the business 35 years and have half a million customers all over the country. Complete satisfaction guaranteed to everyone. Do not fail to see the many great Novelties I am offering this year of which the SUNBERRY is the greatest ever known.

Address JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.

P. S. This offer will not appear again. Write for Sunberry seed and Catalogue at once. Do not neglect or delay.

One Doctor—Only One

No sense in running from one doctor to another! Select the best one, then stand by him. No sense either in trying this thing, that thing, for your cough. Carefully, deliberately select the best cough medicine, then take it. Stick to it. Ask your doctor about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for throat and lung troubles. Sold for nearly seventy years. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Why try this thing, that thing, for your constipation? Why not stick to the good old reliable family laxative—Ayer's Pills? Ask your doctor if he approves this advice.

Editorial Notes

"A wise old owl lived in an oak,
The more he saw the less he spoke,
The less he spoke the more he heard;
Why can't we all be like this bird?"

President Taft is going to give a dinner at the White House in honor of the Honorable Joseph E. Cannon, speaker of the house. By that simple process he will tell some persons just what he thinks of them—if, indeed, he thinks of them at all.

The Republican state convention is to be held on April 5. That is not quite April 1, as the last one was, but it is close enough to have the same effect. Brother Hanly should be able to talk just as well on the fifth as on the first—that is, if he gets a chance.

Senator Beveridge's chief organ, the Indianapolis Star, brands LaFollette, the Wisconsin insurgent, as a "blatherskite" and "sensational demogue," but praises Beveridge as a "constructive statesman." There be Republicans, however, and many of them, who are calling Beveridge a "destructive" personage, who is even less desirable than the more outspoken and candid LaFollette.

Cannon Not Alone

A Taft elector from Ohio, Mr. E. M. Higgins, returned from a visit to Washington a few days ago and gave his impressions to the Ohio State Journal as follows:

"I have seen in the concrete in Washington what I have always known in the abstract, and that is Cannonism and Aldrichism in control of the legislative machinery of the national government, directing the party's policy suppressing reformative measures, blocking the president in his program, insolent with power, defying public opinion, celebrating their successful exploitation of the people and planning further to serve the special interests of which Cannonism and Aldrichism are the agents. I am a republican All these evils are done in the name of the republican party. If these forces of corruption and deplorable political methods are not dislodged the republican party will collapse by the very weight of them. The issue is becoming more a moral than a political one."

Referring to this interview, the Kansas City Times, a republican paper, says:

"All of which means, in a word, that if the republican party is to be saved it is to be saved by the insurgents, whom Speaker Cannon has been trying to read out of the organization."

But why lay it all onto Mr. Cannon? What about Mr. Taft? Is he not trying to drive the insurgents out of the republican party? Is it not about time that republicans recognize that Aldrichism and Cannonism is as thoroughly entrenched in the White House as it is in the capitol building?

WELL DESERVED

The Praise That Comes From Thankful Butler People

One kidney remedy never fails.
Butler people rely upon it.
That remedy is Doan's Kidney Pills.
Butler testimony proves it always reliable.

Mrs. G. R. Abram, N. Pearl Street, Butler, Ind., says: "I have nothing but words of praise for Doan's Kidney Pills as they have always given very satisfactory results in my case. For years I suffered from severe attacks of backache and pains in my kidneys, sometimes extending as far as my shoulders. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and caused me much annoyance. After I had tried several remedies without success, I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Stone's drug store and they brought me relief. In July, 1902, I gave a statement for publication endorsing this preparation and at the present time, I gladly confirm all I then said in its favor. I have used Doan's Kidney Pills several times during the past two years when a cold has brought on a recurrence of backache and I have never failed to receive the desired relief."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

His Trolley Twisted

The Twelfth District Press had the following information (?) Tuesday evening under the heading: "Suffers Loss of His Mind."

BUTLER, Ind., March 6.—Mayor Mondhank stated this afternoon that he is confident that the circuit court will not permanently enjoin the city in its paving project, as has been asked in a suit by remonstrating property owners. No steps toward letting the contracts will be taken until the court has rendered its decision on April 7. The streets sought to be paved by the council are Main and Broadway over their entire lengths. Grading on these streets will be started tomorrow so that when the contract is let April 10—provided, of course that the injunction is defeated—the work can be commenced at once.

The trouble is not with Mayor Mondhank. He gave the news to the Press correctly, but the reporter is the one who has a twisted trolley. The injunction spoken of was begun several months ago to stop the payment on the sewer contract and has nothing to do with the paving proposition.

The new chairman of the Republican state committee says that he "is just getting his bearings." That is what he says, but is he? Many abler Republicans than the new and inexperienced chairman have not got their "bearings" and openly admits it.

POSTAL BANK BILL PASSES SENATE

Division Was on Party Lines---Carried By 50 to 22 Vote---Has Many Unique Features

Without a dissenting republican vote and with Senator Chamberlain, democrat, voting with the majority, the senate has passed President Taft's postal savings bank bill. The vote upon the measure was 50 to 22.

The insurgent republicans, whose opposition to the Smoot amendment threatened defeat of the bill, were swung into line by an amendment offered by Senator Borah of Idaho, which provides that no funds can be invested in government bonds paying less than 2 1-4 per cent interest.

This amendment was adopted by a vote of 49 to 11, and it satisfied the western senators, who were determined that the bill should not permit the use of funds deposited in the savings bank for the purchase of the $700,000,000 worth of 2 per cent government bonds now outstanding.

It is understood that the bill in its present form does not meet the wishes of the president as to the bond provision.

The postal savings bank bill, which now goes to the house for consideration provides for the establishment of a system of postoffice savings banks similar to the systems in vogue in many foreign countries. Its primary purpose is to provide a banking system under government protection which will inspire confidence in Americans, and especially in immigrants, and bring into circulation the savings they are hoarding because of distrust of the established banks. It is expected that between $500,000,000 and $1,000,000,000 will be restored to circulation through the new bank.

All postoffices now authorized to issue money orders, and such others as the postmaster general may designate, are authorized by the bill to receive deposits of money as public savings banks.

Deposits by any one person are limited to $100 in a single month and the total individual balance may not exceed $500, exclusive of interest. Deposits may be made only in sums of $1 or multiples thereof. In order to provide for saving smaller amounts postal savings cards may be purchased for 10 cents, to which postal savings stamps may be attached. The value of the card is added to the value of the stamps in computing sums of $1 or multiples thereof for deposit in the savings accounts.

Two per cent interest is to be allowed depositors, to be computed once in each year. Depositors may withdraw the whole or any part of the funds standing to their credit upon demand.

COMING OF SPRING SUGGESTS PLANTING

Farmers Urged to Prepare for Big Exhibit at Free Fall Fair at Auburn

The success of the Fifth Fall Exhibit of DeKalb county products is again assured if the farmers of the county will, with the coming of spring, lay their plans to make an exhibit, and if possible capture some of the handsome premiums to be distrubuted this year.

The preliminary arrangements for holding another fair are well under way and the business men and manufacturers of Auburn will offer premiums this year that anyone would be proud to carry home. It remains for the farmers to raise the products and compete for the prizes and the success of the Fifth Free Fall Fair will not only make you feel glad that you are a resident of DeKalb county, but will establish a new mark in the enormity and magnitude of what the soil of old DeKalb under the tillage of proper husbandmen can produce.

Negotiations are under way to secure an expert from the Purdue Agricultural Experiment station to act as judge of corn and all other cereals. He will be a man who is thoroughly familiar with the business and when the red tag is attached there can be no doubt as to it finding place on the best bushel raised in DeKalb county.

Parties desiring a copy of the premium list are requested to send their name and address to J. C. Lockner, Secretary, Auburn, and a copy will be mailed them as soon as it is printed. The dates of the fair this year are Oct. 5, 6, and 7.

A Word For the Tightwad.

In France they have an expressive phrase, "liquid money." It means that part of the family income which is used for the necessities and luxuries of life. It is quite apart from and kept apart from the more serious, substantial part of the income, which is the saved part. In America the entire income is "liquid, and the man who attempts to make part of it solid is called a "tightwad." A "tightwad" is really a man who creates a principal—a capital, in other words—and he is the living example of what every private business must be and of how the country's resources should be handled.—Argonaut.

Voting In Spain.

Voting in Spain is held to be a duty to the community, not merely a privilege of the individual, and neglect of civic obligations carries its own penalty. Male adults of legal age and under seventy, with the exception of priests, notaries and judges, are required to vote in municipal elections. Failure to cast a ballot is punishable by having one's name published as censure for neglect, by having taxes increased 2 per cent, by suffering a deduction of 1 per cent in salary if employed in the public service and for the second offense the loss of right to hold elective or appointive office.

His Landscapes.

A nouveau riche recently attended a picture sale. A friend who had n. ed him at the sale asked afterward, "Did you pick up anything at that picture sale, Jorkins?" and the other responded: "Oh, yes; a couple of landscapes. One of 'em was a basket of fruit and the other a storm at sea."

Rather the Other.

"Don't you know that tune? I forget the name of it, but it goes like this." And he whistled it.

After he had finished his friend turned to him with a sigh. "I wish to goodness you had remembered the name and not the tune," he said.—Lippincott's.

Your Money Back if You Are Not Satisfied With the Medicine We Recommend

We are so positive that our remedy will permanently relieve constipation, no matter how chronic it may be, that we offer to furnish the medicine at our expense should it fail to produce satisfactory results.

It is worse than useless to attempt to cure constipation with cathartic drugs. Laxatives or cathartics do much harm. They cause a reaction, irritate and weaken the bowels and tend to make constipation more chronic. Besides, their use becomes a habit that is dangerous.

Constipation is caused by a weakness of the nerves and muscles of the large intestine or descending colon. To expect permanent relief you must therefore tone up and strengthen these organs and restore them to healthier activity.

The discovery of the active principle of our remedy involved the labor of the world's greatest research chemists. As an active agent it possesses the valuable qualities of the best known intestinal tonics as well as being particularly pleasant and prompt in its results.

We want you to try Rexall Orderlies on our recommendation. They are exceedingly pleasant to take, being eaten like candy, and are ideal for children, delicate persons and old folks, as well as for the robust. They act directly on the nerves and muscles of the bowels. They apparently have a neutral action on other associate organs or glands. They do not purge, cause excessive looseness nor create any inconvenience whatever. They may be taken at any time, day or night. They will positively relieve chronic or habitual constipation, if not of surgical variety, and the myriads of associate or dependent chronic ailments, if taken with regularity for a reasonable length of time. They come in two sizes of packages, 12 tablets, 10 cents; 36 tablets, 25 cents. Sold in Butler only at our store—The Rexall Store. Geo. W. Geddes. 1t

Charles Heck, one of the owners of the celebrated goldfish ponds near Waldron, is perhaps the first victom of lightning in Indiana this year. He was struck by a bolt and killed instantly as he was working in the field near his home. At that time an electrical storm visited the vicinity of Waldron. Heck had been working on the farm several hours when Linville came driving by. They were talking with each other when suddenly the lightning flashed from the clouds and Heck was seen to fall to the ground. Linville jumped from his buggy and climbing over the fence, lifted the prostrate form from the ground and tried to arouse him, but after several attempts it was found that he had been killed. The lightning struck Heck in the head and passed through his body, tearing the feet off at the ankles. He wore a cap and this was burned. The lightning made a ridge from the top of head down to the point of his nose. The buttons were torn from his shirt and his clothing was scorched. His shoes and overshoes were torn to shreds. The body was blackened.

Closer relations between the churches and the workingmen are the object of a resolution presented to the American Federation of Labor at its recent convention in Toronto. The resolution calls attention to the growing interest taken by the church and its ministers in labor problems, and asks that the first Sunday in September be set apart as Labor Sunday. The ministers are to be requested to present some phase of the labor problem, and the unions urged to co-operate, would make an excellent introduction by attendance. The plan, if adopted, would introduce Labor Day.

The construction of the great municipal building which New York is to erect at a cost of seven million dollars has begun, and in two years it ought to be ready for occupancy. This extraordinary structure is to be twenty-three stories in height, with a pillared tower rising still farther in the air. Chambers street passes directly beneath it, as footways from Broad and Market streets pass under the Philadelphia City Hall, and as Mount Vernon street passes under the state house in Boston. The lower floors are to serve as a subway terminal, but there is room enough in the floors above to accommodate for many years to come all the city departments not elsewhere housed. The old city hall, in City Hall Park, built over a century ago, is not to be torn down. Its architectural beauty and historic associations have saved it from that fate, and the mayor and board of aldermen will still have their quarters there.

After the experience of recent years, which everybody has noted and has personally felt in increased expense, one does not readily agree with this statement of the New York Journal of Commerce: "Suppression of competition to put up prices generally will tend to restrict consumption and injure the very trade which it is intended to benefit." A notable case of the contrary result is evidenced by the meat trust, which has restricted trade, has advanced prices and is—according to the showing made by the Armours to the New York Stock Exchange—making about 35 per cent on its capital. The Standard Oil Company with its 40 per cent dividends is another, and the recent 300 per cent dividend declared by Wells, Fargo & Co. shows what may be done by the judicious management and high rates of an express combination. Many other trusts and combinations might be cited with more or less of the same effect.

In looking over the published records of a family of some historic importance, which dates back to prerevolutionary times, a gentleman found that the year of the date of his birth, as well as the birth-dates of all his brothers and sisters, had been erased by an elder sister whose sensitiveness upon that point had long been a subject of family jest. One's age is something for which one is not responsible, and it is the last thing that one should be ashamed of. In the lives of the best there is enough for regret, for chagrin and mortification; but shame should be felt only for mistakes and offenses which could have been avoided. Nature is a stern literalist. The procession of the seasons cannot be checked. It is futile to turn back the hands of the clock. We may look with charity upon a person in search of employment in this day when to have passed the half century mark seems to be an insuperable bar to entrance into any useful occupation, for attempting to put up a more youthful front; but concealment of one's age from motives of mere vanity is intolerable to any just sense of propriety. If a lady can be beautiful and charming in spite of her years, that is to her honor. If a man can defy Time to abate his vigor, it is vastly to his credit. The fact speaks of a temperate and virtuous and well-spent life. Macbeth, when his way of life had fallen into the sere and yellow leaf, reflected despairingly that he must not look to have that which should accompany old age, "as honor, love, obedience, troops of friends." For such miscreants old age cannot fail to be a horror; but for one who can face the end of his earthly pilgrimage as one who is about to lie down to pleasant dreams, the years are luminous and golden. Each added one is a crown of glory upon the silver brow. Experience, wisdom, spiritual understanding, lurk beneath the lines of care and the bruises of conflict. Such an old age is at once a joy and beneficence.

FAIR WARNING.

A party of American ladies traveling in Ireland were delighted to find, conspicuously posted at the head of a grassy lane leading to what was evidently a country gentleman's farm, a notice which read as follows:

Notice to Pigs: Keep Out.
Notice to Owners: I do not prosecute, but I keep a gun and a pork barrel.

The pig, it is well known, has long been accorded unusual consideration and liberty in the Emerald Isle, often including the freedom of the family living room, so perhaps the direct address to the gentleman himself, preceding that to his owner, need not have been surprising. It is to be hoped the pigs took heed, and that the pork barrel was not replenished at the expense of trespassers.

It was, at least, less abruptly surprising than a second notice, which the same party encountered a few days later, upon the wall of a public building on the main street of a considerable town:

Riding bicycles and Pigs strictly forbidden on this sidewalk.

The choicest gem among anti-pig notices is, however, that reported by an English lady from Fernando Po, where the careless ranging at large of the natives' pigs had resulted in such damage to gardens that a proclamation was issued, decreeing that all pigs must be confined, except such as had a ring in the nose and could not root.

The official crier, a large and pompous colored man, patrolled the streets, clashing his bell, and shouting aloud the new ordinance, in terms of West Coast pidgin English.

"I say! I say! I say!" he vociferated in his best and most richly melodious bellow. "Suppose pig walk—iron no live for him nose. Gun shoot! Kill him one time! Hear re! Hear re! Hear re!"

FIRST WATCH AND CLOCK.

Working of Earliest Alarm Clock—When Second Hands Were Added.

Since celebrations are the order of the day why did we not observe the sixth centenary of the introduction of clocks? It was, we are told, in 1309 that the first clock known to the world was placed in the tower of San Eustorgio, in Milan, the London Globe says.

The greatest astonishment and admiration were manifested by crowds who came to see the timepiece. In 1344 a clock was installed in the palace of the nobles at Padua. This was a wonder of mechanism, indeed, for besides indicating the hours it showed the course of the sun, the revolutions of the planets, the various phases of the moon, the months and the fetes of the year.

The period of the evolution from the clock to the watch was seventy-one years, not so very long, all things considered, and the record of the first watch is 1380. A half century later an alarm clock made its appearance. This, we are told, was looked upon by the people of that age as "un instrument prodigieux."

The fortunate possessor of this clock was Andrea Alciato, a councillor of Milan. The chroniclers have placed on record that this clock sounded a bell at a stated hour, and at the same time a little wax candle was lighted automatically. How this was done we are not told, but it must not be overlooked that until about seventy years ago we had no means of obtaining a light other than the tinderbox, so that the Milanese must have been centuries ahead of us in this respect.

Not much progress was made with the watch until 1740, when the second hand was added.

Ten to One.

Canada's population is close to eight millions, and the United States is about eighty millions. Each nation reached respectively its hundred million dollar parliament and its thousand million dollar congress almost simultaneously, and the chances are that Canada will turn the ten million population mark about the time the United States population numbers one hundred millions. The ten to one ratio between the two nations seems to hold good in a number of matters.—Ottawa Journal.

OPEN-AIR SCHOOLS SUCCESSFUL

PUBLIC schools conducted in the open air summer and winter have been a success in a number of cities of the United States as well as in Europe, according to Elnora Whitman Curtis, holder of the degree of master of arts and an honorary fellow of Clark University, who gives in the American City Magazine a description of such schools.

In the United States open-air schools until lately have existed only in two cities. Providence established its school some two years ago, and Boston followed about a year ago. The more prominent cities to try the method are Chicago, Pittsburg, Rochester and Hartford. Concerning the Providence experiment the writer says:

"About two years ago an old city schoolhouse was remodeled by removing a portion of one side of its upper story so that considerable exposure to sun and air was effected. Adjustable windows that can be lowered were provided, but the idea is to so harden children to weather conditions that this would be seldom necessary. The room is heated during the winter by two stoves, which temper the air slightly so that it averages 10 degrees or so warmer than that outside. These stoves are used also for cooking purposes and for heating the soapstones that form part of the school equipment.

"The children sit in their outside clothing, over which are drawn heavy canvas bags, which protect the lower part of their bodies and extend up over the backs of the chairs. The desks upon movable platforms are placed opposite the wide opening, so that the children face away from the light with their backs exposed to the sun and air. The number of pupils is limited to twenty-five, and the studies are those of the usual ungraded school. Health cards are kept for each child, and the school physician makes regular visits, looking after the needs of individual cases. Children have made good progress physically, and have been able to keep up most satisfactorily in their studies, so that the school may be counted an unqualified success. It is a part of the regular school system, though run in connection with the local Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, through whose efforts it was established."

In contrast to the Providence school is that in Boston, started at the beginning of the last school year and run by the city in conjunction with the Society for the Relief and Control of Tuberculosis. Here twenty children study and play; they undergo medical examination and records are kept showing their weights and measurements. No soapstones or stoves are provided, but canvas bags are used.

On the general results of the experiments made the writer says: "Such experience with defectives cannot but point to broader conclusions as to the care and education of children in general. That delicate and backward children can accomplish in far less, sometimes in half, the time the task of ordinary school children, raises the question as to whether similar methods in elementary school instruction might not be adopted to the benefit of all school children. On the grounds of social hygiene alone, then, outdoor schools would seem justifiable. On the pedagogical side they are a revelation."

THE INDIVIDUAL.

I will obey my light
Though my light be night;
This is the only right.

I will declare my word
Though to the world absurd;
Thus only may I be heard.

I will live out my dream
Though it should folly seem
And but for me the gleam.

I will pursue my way
Though no illuming ray
Eases the toilsome day.

Others may scout the plan,
Wise men my nature ban—
I will be my own man.

JUST A WOMAN

"Why do you look at me like that, Ken? I'm only flesh and blood, you know, just like any other girl."

"Oh, no, you are more beautiful than any other girl," replied Kenneth Mayes impetuously—"far more beautiful!"

They were standing together in front of the fireplace, and now that they were once more alone, after long days of absence, they felt that they must unburden their minds to one another, come what might.

"Do you know, you frighten me sometimes," said the girl slowly, after a pause, "because you're so dreadfully in earnest. Do you mean it?"

"Of course I mean it."

"Oh, Ken, you silly boy! Why, how long have you known me, sir? About thirteen weeks, isn't it? And, of course, I've been on my best behavior all the time. You've only seen one side of me—the amiable side. You haven't seen me just as I am—at home with the mater and sister."

"But I hope to. You will introduce me?"

"Oh, of course. I've no horrid crimes to confess. Just a few little peccadillos, that's all. Now, instead of hugging a delusion to your heart and waking up one day crying you've been deceived, I should like to have you forgive me for something beforehand, and yet to love the woman while you deplored the fault."

Presently she found him picking up a book she had been reading which had fallen to the floor.

"H'm! . Tennyson," he said, and opened it. His eye fell on a photograph.

"Price Carew!"—looking at her. "You knew him?"

"Yes," she said, simply, wondering at the change in his tone. "Did you?"

"He was the dearest friend I ever had. A man I would have laid down my life for." He spoke sternly, evidently striving to suppress his emotion. "Where did you get his photo?"

"It was given to me." Her face was crimson, and her eyelids drooped low over her eyes.

"By him?"

"Yes."

He groaned.

"To think it should be you, Madge—to think it should be you! You broke his heart—one of the truest that ever beat. And I've been deluding myself——"

"Kenneth!" she broke in. "Wait—don't blame me till you've heard the story."

"Do you know that he practically committed suicide—exposing himself recklessly to the Boer marksmen till at last a bullet found him? I know now what it was that made your face so familiar. He carried your photo next his heart, and when he was dying he put it into my hand. 'Bury it with me, Ken,' he said. And I did. He had told me the story a few months before, without blaming you, and without mentioning names. But you killed him, and he was one of the best."

"I deny it," she cried sharply. "I deny it. His death brought sorrow to me. The story is a very unhappy one. If a girl finds she has made a mistake——"

"A mistake?" he interposed, and there was a look of scorn in his face. "A nice sort of a mistake. Do you claim that a woman can amuse herself with a man—encourage him, lead him on, and then, when she's got him in the toils, turn round and tell him she's very sorry, but she's made a mistake?"

"You are heaping blame without having heard the girl's side of the story. She——"

"A woman who makes such mistakes is unpardonable—unpardonable! Why didn't——"

"Kenneth! Be careful. You are the only man, Kenneth, that I have ever allowed to make love to me—the only man I have ever loved. The only one."

"H'm!" he muttered sullenly. "It's all very well to put it off on a mistake. I like the word as little as I like the action. And a girl who does that sort of thing once may do it twice. Now, what guarantee have I got that next week, or next month or next year, you won't find that you've made another mistake?"

Then he looked up, and there was a sneer on his lips.

"I won't keep you waiting even a week, Kenneth," she said, quietly, "because I have found it out already."

The next moment she was gone.

For ten minutes he remained where she had left him. Then, hardly knowing what he was doing, he picked up the volume of Tennyson, and looked at the title page. On the flyleaf he read the name, "Madge Prentice," in Price Carew's well known hand.

It was long before he met her again. Mrs. Prentice and her daughters had gone abroad and had not returned. It was a time of wretchedness and misery for Kenneth. In spite of all, he loved her still. Perhaps he had been hasty. Certainly he had not asked for her side of the story. Anyway, he must see her again.

The Prentices arrived back one evening, and the next morning Madge got a wire:

"May I come?"

* * * * *

"Well, Ken," she said, after she had allowed him to babble incoherences for several minutes, "are you sure now?"

"That I cannot live without you? Why, yes, of course, otherwise—"

"No, no—sure that you know me for

"THEN IT WASN'T YOU AT ALL?"

what I am—just a woman, a faulty woman, and not a——"

The door opened slowly and a woman's form apeared on the threshold.

"I beg your pardon. I thought——"

"Come in, Kate, come in. I want to introduce you to Mr. Mayes. Kenneth, my sister, Kate."

Kenneth was staring so hard at the lady that for a moment he did not see the proffered hand.

Miss Prentice was frail and delicate, obviously an invalid. But in health she must have been the very picture of Madge—only four years older.

"I'm glad to see you," she said. "Madge has told me about you—that you were a great friend of Mr. Carew's. I am glad to welcome any friend of his." Then she slipped away as quietly as she had come.

"You mustn't blame her, Ken. She suffered as much as he did. She nearly died. She has never been well since. No, you wouldn't understand it, but I don't blame you for that. It was a sad—said mistake for both of then. Leave it there."

"Then it wasn't you at all?"

"No."

"But why did you let me think it was?"

"You misunderstood—jumped to the conclusion; and then—well, it was a woman's whim. I saw a chance to try whether you really loved me—me, or the dream woman—not the real woman, but the ideal woman."

"Madge! And you let me go—through——"

"Have I gone through nothing—loving you as I did? Why, the very first time, sir, you merely thought I was wrong—yes, and without wanting or waiting to see, you blamed me—me, the perfect woman! Oh, Ken!"

"Still, I don't think it was quite right of you to let me believe what wasn't really true," he said, glad to have something to urge against her.

She laughed. "Oh, Ken!" she cried, again. "I don't defend it. But forgive me, dear boy, forgive me! And be thankful that you'll have just a woman for a wife, and not a spotless, flawless goddess that you couldn't even forgive."—M. A. P.

ANECDOTE OF CLAY.

Incident Showing the Esteem in Which the Senator Was Held.

Adlai Stevenson, commenting on Henry Clay, tells this anecdote, an exchange says:

Possibly since the foundation of the government, no statesman has been so completely idolized by his friends and party as was Henry Clay. Words are meaningless when the attempt is made to express the idolatry of the Whigs of his own state for their great chieftain. For a lifetime he knew no rival. His wish was law to his followers. In the realm of party leadership a greater than he hath not appeared. At his last defeat for the presidency strong men wept bitter tears. When his star set it was felt to be the signal for the dissolution of the great party of which he was the founder. In words worthy to be recalled, "when the tidings came like wailing over the state that Harry Percy's spur was cold, the chivalrous felt somehow the world had grown commonplace."

The following incident, along the line indicated, may be considered characteristic. While Mr. Clay was a senator a resolution in accordance with a sometime custom was introduced into the Kentucky house of representatives instructing the senators from that state to vote in favor of a certain bill then pending in Congress. The resolution was in the act of passing without opposition when a hitherto silent member from one of the mountain counties, springing to his feet, exclaimed: "Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that this legislature is undertaking to tell Henry Clay how to vote?" The speaker answered that such was the purport of the resolution. At which the member from the mountains, throwing up his arms, exclaimed, "Great God!" and sunk into his seat. It is needless to add that the resolution was immediately rejected by an unanimous vote.

BLINDED SONG BIRDS.

English Dealers Take Sight from Chaffinches to Make Them Sing.

The magistrate at Lambath police court has sentenced Frederick Collins, a laborer of 4 Sultan street, Chamberwell, to three months' hard labor for cruelty to two chaffinches by blinding them, the London Daily Mail says.

S. G. Polhill, who prosecuted on behalf of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, said that the practice of blinding was resorted to because birds so dealt with were supposed to become better songsters or warblers. He was sorry to say the practice had been going on for many years, but in such secrecy that this was the first occasion upon which the society had been in a position to prosecute. The operation was carried out with a needle, and was done skilfully, so as not to burst the eyeball. The birds adapted themselves to their blind state in a wonderful way. They fed and found their water and jumped about the cage.

Arthur Wilmot, one of the society's inspectors, produced the two blind birds in court. He purchased them for 1 shilling 6 pence from the prisoner at his house, where one room was full of birds, at least ten of which were blinded chaffinches. The prisoner said he himself had blinded them, but that "blinded" was a dangerous word to use because if he were "given away" it would mean three months in prison for him. He had been at "the game," he said, twenty years.

Alexander Pearce, veterinary surgeon, said that in the birds produced he came to the conclusion that the optic nerve and the artery in the center of that nerve had been severed by inserting a needle at the bottom of the eye. This operation paralyzed the sight and made the bird totally blind, while leaving the eye to the casual observer the same as before the operation. The suffering would be acute.

The magistrate (to the prisoner): You knew what the penalty was. It is three months' hard labor.

To Prevent Contagion.

To prevent contagion when a patient has diphtheria, scarlet fever or any of the dreaded diseases, take equal parts of turpentine and carbolic acid; put one-half teaspoonful at a time in a kettle of water kept near the boiling point. The odor gives relief to the patient and also prevents the spread of the malady if kept in the room.

Boutell on the Tariff.

Congressman Boutell of Illinois will have uphill work running President Taft for re-election on a platform to the effect that the Aldrich tariff is the best the country ever had. Even some of the most faithful of the regular Republicans now admit a doubt that this tariff is all that they hope it will prove to be and are pleading with the people to give it a fair trial before making up their minds that it is altogether bad.

The new tariff has worked badly ever since President Taft signed it on Aug. 5. The high prices which Mr. Boutell extols as among the good things it has brought are robbing industry and enterprise of their just rewards, for the man whose earnings remain stationary is impoverished to the exact extent of higher prices for all the things he has to buy.

It is a false prosperity which puts money into a man's pocket with one hand and takes it out with the other. And this is just the kind of prosperity we have been getting from the Dingley tariff and the Aldrich tariff during the last thirteen years. Since the enactment of the Dingley tariff the necessary cost of living has increased by 50 or 60 per cent, while the earnings of the people in the average have advanced in no such proportion.

Both these tariffs have demoralized the business of the country with the notion that the main purpose of business is to get rich quick. If the protected manufacturers can prey upon the consumer, why should not everybody else who has dealings with him do the same? And the process has gone on until everybody is preying upon everybody else to the extent of his power to find price victims.

The rage for high prices has its moral as well as its economic side, and tariff robbery is at the root of it. For the ordinary wage earner the situation created by the tariff is made worse by economic conditions which have advanced the prices of food products. These are causes which legislation cannot control. The direct injury which the Republican party, with its monopoly tariff, is doing the average citizen is in making him pay double for things that are made artificially dear. If President Taft is a candidate for re-election in 1912 he will not stand pat on the Aldrich tariff.—St. Louis Republic.

Democracy's Real Opportunity.

It should not be necessary to reiterate that the rock-rooted principles of Jeffersonian Democracy embrace a constant struggle to make better living conditions for the masses.

Therefore, if Democratic leaders have real sagacity, if they simply adhere to their party's fundamental principles, they will find a clear call from the people to "revise" Congress as a preliminary to a real revision of the tariff.

Democracy, in short, can not become blind to this issue without actual treason on the part of those who should answer the people's call. The opportunity is not manufactured—it is natural. It has come by the logic of circumstances.

In spite of the fact that certain Democratic members of Congress scrambled for what they could get for their particular sections out of the Aldrich-Taft tariff law, and as a consequence voted against their party's historic principles, it is undeniably true that such traitors form a small minority in the Democratic party.

What the Democratic party needs, in the coming alignment of forces for the congressional campaign, is to shake itself free from traitors and weak-kneed spoils-grabbers.

The congressional campaign should be waged by candidates who have the full confidence of the people. With clean, strong candidates, a victory is assured.

The people will turn more readily to a party that is historically the champion of the "bread and meat" multitude than they will to any new hybrid organization. The need of the hour is a resurrection of simple Democratic loyalty to the faith of the republic's fathers.

The struggle against tariff taxation and high prices differs only in degree from every other struggle that the Democratic party has waged in the past against special privilege.

This time the call will be inspiring if Democratic leaders are honest with themselves and the American people.

Cause and Effect.

The spectacle of Senator Aldrich, author of the notorious Aldrich-Taft tariff, and Senator Lodge, crony of Massachusetts mill bosses, demanding an investigation of high cost of living is highly amusing.

High prices are a natural sequence to high tariff and national extravagance.

The scale of living fostered by the Republican party as the creator of combinations and trusts is merely reaping one of its inevitable penalties. The whole country is alarmed over the rapid increase in the prices of life's necessities, following the passage of the Aldrich-Taft tariff bill.

The nation's boasted prosperity under the rule of Aldrich is thus tainted at its core. It is a prosperity for privileged "interests." It fattens the bank accounts of the mill bosses, but does not reach down to the level of average American citizenship.

The reckless extravagances of the national government and its rich tariff beneficiaries have encouraged a scale of living unwarranted by ordinary incomes. Even the most thriftily inclined of wage earners or persons with small incomes battle ineffectually against the wall of artificial prices raised by the Aldrich-Taft tariff.

Trusts and combinations that have sprung up like mushrooms under Republican rule make the ordinary man's attempts at personal economy almost futile. They monopolize the production and sale of life's necessities. Consumers are the helpless victims.

High prices are like epidemics—their bad effects are out of all proportion to the original cause. Tariff greed explains the rapid advance in most commodities, stockings, cotton goods and gloves, for instance.

A return to normal prices means, first of all, a return to sane, economical government under a tariff for the people instead of for the trusts.

The Lodge-Aldrich whitewash brush can not exonerate the Aldrich-Taft tariff from responsibility for high prices. The American people understand the cause and suffer from the effect.

Ship Subsidy Is Bareface Graft.

The ship subsidy is a brazen, barefaced, unblushing graft, asserts Senator T. P. Gore in the National Monthly. No man that votes for it or that has voted for it should be re-elected to either house, whether he be Democrat or Republican. No platform and no candidate should be supported that does not pledge unrelenting hostility.

The policy of centralization goes on. The states are to be stripped of legitimate power in order that the federal government may be vested with omnipotent power. The administration threatens virtually to divest the states of the authority to charter interstate carriers and to transfer that power to Congress alone. "This is an indestructible union of indestructible states." Let the states charter and the federal government license interstate carriers—thus accomplish the good and avert the danger.

The capstone upon the climax of centralization is Senator Aldrich's central bank. This is the tigress which Jackson drove to the jungles. Who will dominate this benevolent institution? Will the Standard Oil and steel trust be voiceless in its councils? The United States bank of old debauched American politics! Will this one be shriven of those vices? This great moneyed institution would control the finances, the commerce, the industries and the politics of the nation. It is unsuited alike to the conditions of our country, the character of our institutions, and the genius of our people. It can be builded only upon the grave of our liberties. Is it not enough for Mammon to reign? Must he insist upon a formal coronation? Will he demand the insignia as well as the substance of power? Is it not enough for the people to serve? Must they kiss the rod of this crowned and sceptered monarch?

The Nursing of Business.

In the long run it will be found—if it has not already become obvious—that great injury has been done to the business activities of the United States by various methods and devices of artificial fostering. Even admitting that it was wise in the early history of the country to nurse domestic business, more especially the industries, the fact remains that this practice has far overreached the margin of wisdom. It not only has accustomed many lines of business to special privileges which they do not need, but upon which they continue to insist, but it has also crippled other lines and has made them dependent on artificial aid in the great arena of trade, when if they had been forced to resort to scientific development, they might have been on both a sound and an independent footing.—Kansas City Star.

WILD GEESE IN KANSAS.

They Ate the Grass as Fast as It Grew in the Early Days.

"As late as 1873 the wild geese in Kansas for a time ate all the grass as fast as it grew during the time that these birds stayed in this part of the country," said I. J. Beyers, an old settler of Reno County, the other day to some people who were talking of plagues like the grasshopper and hot winds, according to the Kansas City Journal. "Old-time settlers in Reno County will remember this and to the people who knew of the vast number of geese this will not appear incredible.

"The familiar sight in those years of the long lines of geese in their flight from the prairie to the river with incessant noise will never be forgotten by the old settlers. Some doubted whether or not the numerous geese which came each fall would permit the prospective farmer to enjoy the wheat and corn he might coax from an apparently grudging soil.

"Many who wanted to appear wise said that between the dry weather and the grasshopper on one hand, and the geese and predatory animals on the other, farming was impossible or scarcely remunerative and the whole country would ultimately lapse back into either a desert or wilderness, or else be merely a cattle country. Of course, the wish to some was the father of the unwarranted expression.

"The age which had just preceded had witnessed vast herds of buffalo, roaming at will, subsisting on the rich herbage of the plains, and the country was in a transitional state, which was favorable to the development and increase of other forms of life after the buffaloes were slain. The latter fact accounts for the unusually large numbers of wild geese after the buffaloes were exterminated and also of the grasshoppers and other insects which gave the settlers much trouble."

MARCH

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

"I shall explain, and it is lucky for you that Mrs. Dallas gave you permission to ask me for an explanation, otherwise I should have been forced, from a sense of honor, to hold my tongue. Mrs. Dallas fears that if Isabella marries anyone but David, her death will take place."

"Whose death? Isabella's or Mrs. Dallas'?"

"The latter. You must know, Maurice," continued the Major, "that Mrs. Dallas, though well born and well married, is an extremely ignorant woman. She was brought up mostly by Dido's grandmother, who was the most accursed old witch in Barbadoes. This old hag instilled into the mind of Mrs. Dallas all kinds of superstitions, in which she really believes. When the grandmother died Dido became nurse to Isabella, and private witch of the Dallas household. She is clever—wonderfully clever—and she has continued her grandmother's system of terrorizing both Mrs. Dallas and Isabella."

"Yes; I can see that, Uncle Jen, and it is for that reason I want to marry Isabella, and take her away before her mind is degraded further by that old fury."

"Well, the old fury sees what you want, my dear lad, and so she is determined that Isabella shall marry David and not you. To accomplish her aims she went through some hocuspocus and discovered that if Isabella marries you, Mrs. Dallas will die."

"And does Mrs. Dallas believe that rubbish?" asked Maurice, incredulously.

"Implicitly! I tell you she is ignorant and superstitious. Come what may, she is convinced that your marriage with Isabella means her own death; so you may rest assured, Maurice, that she will never, never accept you as her son-in-law."

"I understand," said Maurice, with a shrug. "It seems hopeless to contest this decision of a diseased and feeble mind. I can understand Dido stopping my marriage, as she wants to retain her sinful influence over Isabella; I can understand Mrs. Dallas, weak and silly, being dominated by this negro Jezebel; but I can't understand why David is chosen as the future son-in-law. If he marries Isabella, he will no more put up with Dido that I should have done."

"Of course not; I can't explain the reason," replied Jen, shaking his head. "But you know all that I know, Maurice; and you can see that it is hopeless for you to attempt to marry the girl."

"I'm not so sure of that," retorted Maurice; "I love Isabella, and come what may, I intend to make her my wife."

"But what about me?" said a voice outside the open window; "what about me?" And a moment later David, in dusty riding-dress, stepped into the room. He looked disturbed and angry, and his strongly marked face bore traces of agitation and haunting thoughts.

Disturbed by the unexpected appearance of David, and seeing from his expression that he was bent upon making himself disagreeable, Jen hastily interposed to prevent a quarrel between the two young men.

"What, David? back again!" he said, ignoring the question asked by Sarby. "So you did not stay to dinner?"

"No," replied David, shortly, "I didn't!" He flung himself into a chair and resumed in a significant tone, "Mrs. Brance didn't ask me, and if she had, I couldn't have accepted in this dress. Besides, I am not the man whom she delights to honor. Now, if Maurice had been there, Meg——"

"Don't couple my name with Meg's," interrupted Maurice, sharply. "You know quite well——"

"It's no use your assuming that innocent air, Maurice. You have not treated Mag well!"

"I have! How dare you say such a thing? Meg knew that I was in love with Isabella."

"Oh!" said David, with a sneer. "I overheard you arrange to marry her. But you'll never do that while I am alive, or Mrs. Dallas either. I told Mrs. Dallas that I loved Isabella, and she said that nothing would give her greater pleasure than to see us married."

"You shan't marry her!" cried Maurice, angrily rising.

"I shall!" said David, and rose also.

"Boys! Boys!" said Jen, annoyed at this quarrel, "do not be so positive. If you are both in love with the same woman, let the woman decide."

"She has decided!" said Aylmer, sharply. "She loves me."

"I don't care two straws about that," said David, coldly. "I have not spoken to her yet; but all the same I intend her to become my wife. I give you fair warning, Maurice, that you are not to poach upon my preserves."

"Your preserves. Confound your insolence!"

"Upon my word, David," said Jen, seeing that Maurice could hardly speak for rage, "you go too far. The girl loves Maurice and not you; and it would be much more honorable for you not to press your suit."

"I don't care two pins for honor, Major! I love Isabella, and I intend to marry her. But become the wife of Maurice she never shall; I'd rather see her married to Etwald."

"The third Richmond who is in the field," scoffed Maurice. "Well, he has as good a chance as you. Dido supports his pretensions; Mrs. Dallas is your champion. As for me, I have the love of Isabella, so I'm afraid of nothing."

"Are you not?" said Sarby, with a peculiar smile. "Remember what Etwald said about your life in death!"

"I don't believe in that rubbish, David, and I should be very sorry to think you did."

"As to that, I don't care about discussing the point," was the reply. "Our own beliefs are are own business. But I may say that Etwald is a dangerous man, both to you and to me."

"I daresay," said Maurice, coolly. "The more so, as I believe he has stolen the devil-stick."

"What!" David made a step forward and stared at the wall. His face was quite pale, and his hands trembled in spite of his efforts to control himself. "The devil-stick gone!" he said, turning on his heel. "Both you and I must be careful, Maurice."

CHAPTER VIII.

So far the reader may wonder at the constituent elements of this story. African witchcraft, mysterious strangers, and barbaric women seem to be out of place when set in the sober framework of a provincial town. But romance is not dependent upon landscape or on surroundings for its occurrence; it is to be found everywhere, and very often in the most unlikely places. Here, for instance, by some trick of fate, certain people had come together, certain passions had been aroused, and now that the drama had been set in motion, it seemed likely that it would play itself out to a tragical conclusion.

For a whole week after the events already related, nothing new took place likely to alter the situation. Maurice and David remained coldly polite, and very watchful of one another; neither mentioned the name of Isabella, nor did the one or the other see the girl. Mrs. Dallas took care of that. Acting, no doubt, under the advice of Dido, she kept Isabella within doors and refused to allow her to communicate with Maurice. But, on the other hand, she did not force her to see David; and Isabella was thankful for the consideration.

But there was one visitor to The Wigwam whom Isabella would gladly have avoided—no less an individual than Dr. Etwald. After the violent scene with Maurice, the widow so overtaxed her strength that she became ill, and the doctor was sent for. His mere presence appeared to sooth Mrs. Dallas, and he came frequently. When she could, Isabella absented herself; but this she was not able to do on all occasions, and so she had to endure his complimentary speeches and the mesmeric quality of his gaze. This last, especially, was a trial to one of her sensitive organization, and one day she felt so uncomfortable that she remonstrated with Etwald.

"You make me afraid, doctor," she said, impetuously. "Your gaze is disagreeable to me."

"My dear young lady," replied the man, blankly. "I must look at you when I address you."

"Then don't address me!"

"Isabella, do not be rude!" cried Mrs. Dallas, who had overheard this passage of arms; whereupon the girl, with a defiant glance at her tormentor, left the room.

"I'm sure I don't know what I'll do with Isabella," sighed Mrs. Dallas; "she is getting so disobedient."

"Perhaps I can assist you."

Mrs. Dallas looked uneasily at her medical attendant.

"No," she said, quietly. "I may persuade her into doing what I want."

"Which is to marry Mr. David Sarby," said Etwald, coolly. "In that case I can only hope that the young lady will continue obstinate, as I wish to marry her myself."

"I know—I know! But I don't want her to marry you, doctor. Mr. Sarby is the man for my daughter. He is good-looking and clever and——"

"And poor!" finished Etwald.

"Well, yes," assented Mrs. Dallas, "there is that objection. But it is not much of an obstacle, as Isabella has money. The young couple can live on three thousand a year."

Dr. Etwald went home with this sum running in his head, and more than ever he resolved to marry Isabella. He was in love with her, and would have taken her without a penny; all the same, if she was an heiress in a small way, it was all the better. The doctor was clever but poor, and with an income like that he could move to the metropolis and do great things. There were many schemes in Etwald's head, and certain of these he determined to put into execution at once, in order to secure Isabella for his wife.

Some time previously Major Jen had asked Etwald about the devil-stick, but only to be informed that the doctor knew nothing of the missing article.

"I have not set eyes on it since that night you showed it to me," declared Etwald, coolly. "You refused to sell it to me, so of course I gave up all idea of possessing it. All the same," finished he, politely, "I am sorry that it is lost."

"Lost! Stolen, you mean," growled Jen, tartly. "That negress——"

"Dido! Well, I admit that such a barbaric treasure would tempt her, the more particularly as she knows about such wizard instruments. Ask her if she took it."

"I have done so, and I have asked Mrs. Dallas also," replied Jen; "but it seems that Dido wasn't out of the house that night. She was ill—and, oddly enough, I hear, Etwald, that it was you who made her ill."

"Really!" said Etwald, quite self-possessed. "I suppose Mr. Aylmer told you so. I thought as much," he continued, as Jen nodded. "He saw me calming Dido's agitation when I arrived to ask Mrs. Dallas for her daughter's hand. This negress is hysterical, and on that day she happened to be so. I quieted her, yet Mr. Aylmer accuses me of having caused her illness."

"I don't know anything about it, Etwald; but truth to tell, Maurice does not like you!"

"Because I prophesied ill concerning him!"

"Oh, that was rubbish," said Jen, contemptuously. "You didn't mean it."

"Didn't I. Wait and see!"

After which Etwald bowed his visitor politely to the door of the gloomy old house which he occupied in Deanminster, and Jen returned home, quite baffled as to what could have become of the devil-stick. Maurice still held to his idea that Dido had taken the wand, but Jen's inquiries proved that the negress had not been out of the house on the night in question.

"Then it must have been Battersea!" said Maurice, decidedly. "He is a friend of Dido's and a pensioner of Isabella's. I'll find out if he stole the stick for the negress or for Dr. Etwald."

This was easier said than done, as Mrs. Dallas would not allow Maurice to set foot in the house. Still Maurice hoped to learn the truth from the tramp himself, a hope that proved futile also. Battersea had gone on one of his begging excursions, and for quite a week was not seen in the neighborhood of "Ashantee." Then he suddenly made his appearance at the house, and asked to see Maurice. On being led into the hall, Aylmer came out to speak with him, and after a few words he took the old man into the library. Jen, who was rather curious to know what Maurice might learn from the disreputable old scamp, waited patiently for the termination of the interview. As Aylmer did not reappear, he sought the library, and found the young man alone.

"Where is Battersea?" asked Jen, glancing round. "What did he wish to see you about?"

"He heard that I accused him of taking the devil-stick," explained Maurice, "and came here to exculpate himself. He is quite innocent. He didn't take the devil-stick."

"Then who did?"

"I'll tell you that to-morrow."

"Why not to-night?" asked Jen, sharply.

"Because I have a suspicion, which I cannot prove at present. Battersea gave me a hint, upon which I am determined to work. To-night I may learn the truth!"

"From whom?"

"Don't ask me, Uncle Jen; I can't answer you yet."

"Well, just as you please, but you are as mysterious as David."

"Why, what about David?"

"Only this, that he has gone up to town without bidding me good-by, save in this short note. I can't understand such conduct."

"Nor I," said Maurice, stretching out his hand. "Please let me read the note, Uncle Jen. I wish to see precisely how it is worded."

The note which the Major handed over was curt to the verge of rudeness. It merely stated that the writer had gone away for a couple of days on business, and would be back as soon as possible. Maurice did not wonder that Jen was annoyed at receiving such a missive from one whom he regarded in the light of a son.

"The fact is David has not been quite himself since this trouble about Isabella," he said, gravely, "and he thinks it best to go away for a time. You know how he tortures himself over trifles."

"This love business of you two young men is getting to be anything but a trifle," said Jen, testily. "What between the lot of you and Etwald, there seems to be nothing but trouble. I wish you'd marry the girl, Maurice, and have done with it."

EXCESSIVE EATING.

Cause of High Price of Food Credited to Our Appetite.

We knew it would come; somebody was sure to discover the fact and hammer our heads with it. Prof. Milton Whitney, chief of the bureau of soils, declares that the increased cost of living is due simply to the fact that Americans are eating far more than they did fifty years ago. His reasoning is, we gather, that though our production of food is very great, yet our national appetite has grown faster still; because it tastes good in the back of our mouths, we sit at table, and eat and eat, and gorge and gorge and gorge.

Thus, the supply is drained, and up goes the price. The ultimate consumer should think more, work harder, and eat less. Only so shall he remain fit to survive, and hence, to consume. But what about the man who sells food products to the consuming appetite? He gets enough profit so that he does not have to rise hungry from the table; he is even able to accumulate enough invested capital to enable him to have gingerbread twice a week all the rest of his life, if he choose. It is the non-selling, hard-eating, hand-worker or brain-worker not employed in directly commercial pursuits who inevitably pays the freight. He eats too much; we have suspected it all along; now Prof. Whitney has told us, flatly.

Well, it is worth something to have dislodged the truth from its hiding—got it into the open where it can be met. And that old wheelhorse, the ultimate consumer, will have to pay, no doubt. Good enough for him, of course. His lack of worthy attributes was pointed out some time ago by that eminent and ingenious economist, Mr. Whidden Graham. He said: "The ultimate consumer! Why shouldn't he pay? What consideration does he deserve? Nobody ever made his living by being an ultimate consumer."—New York Sun.

The Humor of Investment.

"How's that mine of yours coming along?"

"They've struck a new vein."

"That's funny."

"What makes you think so?"

"Oh, the mine is such a good joke that I'm sure it must have a funny vein."—St. Louis Star.

Best Seal for Envelope.

When you seal an envelope with the white of an egg it is impossible to steam it open.

VELVET IN FAVOR FOR FORMAL GOWNS.

Velvet in black and other deep rich tones is very much in favor for formal gowns, and especially for walking suits. It is also used for long, handsome top coats, often with a soft white fur. The sketch shows three velvet models, each one serving in a different garment. The first figure shows a long coat of smoke gray velvet over a princess gown of gray satin cloth. It is quaintly cut and partly covered with arabesques of tarnished silver braid. The one in the center is a black afternoon gown worn for teas, weddings and musicales. It is a belted princess, with bands of fur at the edge of the long skirt and the short sleeves. The belt is of black satin, with an immense rosette in front, and one long tasseled end. The hat is of velvet with white feathers. The third figure shows a street suit of dark blue velvet with stitched seams and military frogs in front.

Women of the Future.

There is not a country in the land but bristles with Jane Austen women, says a writer. With a good many exceptions, one would not be sorry to see them go. They are kindly, but small—deadly small.

The woman of the future is not of this type. She is far too busy to be womanish, but she will never grow out of being feminine. She is shedding her smallness. Like the genie in the Arabian Nights, now the cork has been removed, she is darkening the whole sky like a pillar of smoke; but presently the smoke will settle into "a figure of gigantic size." She will be the Meredith woman, softened by reality, as Galatea softened into life.

She will not glide about with uplifted finger like Agnes, nor drive tired men to distraction with her prattle, like Dora, nor weep eternally when George is unkind, like Amelia. No, when she feels hysterical she will go and sit on a Himalaya till she is cooler, and when her husband annoys her out of her usual placidity, sticking a few pigs in Texas or India will soon put her straight. And with it all she will wear her frills as well as ever.

Health and Beauty.

Beef tea is one of the best stimulants and the poorest of foods.

Acids taken before meals and alkalis taken after meals lessen acidity.

You should not take tea or coffee with any meal containing fresh meat.

Malt preparations are the best remedies for dyspepsia caused by foods containing starch.

In combing the hair use a comb with blunt, widely separated teeth. Never use one with sharp teeth.

Much vinegar causes gastric catarrh, whereof comes indigestion, which in turn gives rise to redness of nose.

Lettuce and onions promote sleep. Resting with the head to the north is essential for the repost of some people.

The most useful of all drugs for rickets is iron, not lime. Lime is useful, but iron compels the system to assimilate it.

Comfortable Sweater.

This sweater is rather heavier or closer knit than the regulation garments of this sort. It is all white, in a small block design, and trimmed with large white pearl buttons and large flat collar, in ribbed stitch matching the belt and cuffs and piece down front. The jaunty cap is also knit and makes a chic finish to a very pretty skating or sledding costume.

Dry Cure for Colds.

A French physician has been writing in one of the Paris papers about a cure for colds which he says is very old, but which a long time ago fell into disuse and was practically forgotten. It is a very simple remedy, the only requirement being that the patient refrain from all liquids for a period of from twenty-four to forty-eight hours. A spoonful of tea or coffee may be taken at meals and a small glass of water at bedtime, if thirst is very great. But it is much better to do without all liquids entirely, if possible. It is not necessary, says the physician, to remain indoors while the cure is being tried; in fact, he recommends that the patient get out of doors and breathe the fresh air. He calims that the "dry cure" is infallible.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Silk blouses are severe. The sleeves are flat, with little or no fullness.

Flat jet ornaments, as well as those of metal, are frequently used as trimming.

The vogue for gilt is now at its height, and silver trimming is also in demand.

Tasseled ornaments and fringe vie with each other for chief favor in trimming.

Some of the new bracelets encircle the wrist and end in a tiny jeweled bowknot.

Coats are a bit closer than the half-fitting ones of the past season, and skirts are usually plaited.

Bows on shoes are more in evidence than ever before. In fact, there are bows and bows and bows this season.

A quaint pelerine and muff was of white fox, with one large pink velvet rose on each piece and silk cords and tassels.

A novel trimming is made of two bands of black velvet ribbon fagoted together, with a gold braid under the open stitchery.

Transparent scarf coats of tulle or chiffon will be general favorites in alliance with evening or ultra-elaborate afternoon toilettes.

There is every reason to believe that the coat with belt and deep peplum will be used again, since coats are decreasing in length.

Copper is one of the most popular tones of the season, but it is of a reddish shade, not the brown or yellow one of former years.

The jersey of 20 years ago is again in style, but this time it is in lustrous silk, and hooks down the side and is elaborately decorated.

Favorite shopping bags of the day are as big as ever, but they are flat, and are carried under the arm with the straps over the wrist.

Braiding upon coats has lost none of its vogue, and all manner of original results are gained by its combination with silk cordings, rattail buttons and made ornaments.

Tiny flowerlets are scattered over the evening gown of satin and placed with the view of giving the gown a good hem finish. The flowers are partially covered with thin tissue drapery.

The Home Storeroom.

The cellar or other similar room in which vegetables and fruits, either green or canned, are stored for winter should have the windows open on mild days for ventilation and for lowering the temperature of the room for chilling the store. The cooler they are held without freezing, the better they will keep. Bacteria which cause fermentation and decay cannot grow and multiply in low temperature. Dry cold will always hold them in check.

The Happy Habit.

Mothers who are constantly cautioning the little ones not to do this or nor to do that, telling them not to laugh or make a noise, until they lose their naturalness and become little old men and women, do not realize the harm they are doing.

There is an irrepressible longing for amusement, for rollicking fun, in young people, and if these longings were more fully met in the home it would not be so difficult to keep the boy and girl under the parental roof.

A happy, joyous home is a powerful magnet to child and man. The sacred memory of it has kept many a person from losing his self-respect and from the commission of crime. Fun is the cheapest and best medicine in the world for your children as well as for yourself. Give it to them in good, large doses. It will not only save you doctors' bills, but it will also help to make your children happier, and will improve their chances in life. The very fact that the instinct to play—the love of fun—is so imperious in the child shows a great necessity in its nature which if suppressed will leave a famine in its life. A sunny, joyous, happy childhood is to the individual what a rich soil and genial sun are to the young plant. If the early conditions are not favorable, the plant becomes starved. This is true with the human plant. A starved, suppressed, stunted childhood makes a dwarfed man. A joyous, happy, fun-loving environment develops powers, resources and possibilities which would remain dormant in a cold, repressing environment.

Needlework Notes.

A lovely centerpiece of fine linen was beautifully decorated with Mountemellick embroidery in the most exquisite design.

Chinese, Indian and Bulgarian embroideries are favorites for all kinds of bags, card cases and veil and handkerchief cases.

It is better to use light-blue transfer paper for tracing embroidery designs that the dark colors, as these are apt to rub off and soil the article.

A linen or denim shoe bag, with one Japanese motif of simple though striking design on each pocket, is a useful and attractive gift for a man.

Practical and attractive lamp mats are made of linen in gray or the natural color embroidered in shades that harmonize with the furnishings of the room.

To pad a wide edge for a buttonholed scallop, go over the outline with a row of catstitch or with the loose chain stitch. This saves many stitches of padding and serves the same purpose.

Hat for a Young Girl.

While this is a Parisian model, it could nevertheless be copied by one of the many private and inexpensive milliners for a very reasonable amount of money. If the exact shape is unobtainable, a near duplicate should be covered with black velvet and trimmed generously with white marabout. The result is, indeed, pleasing.

Best Thing That Happened.

Man is a lazy animal, and the best thing that ever happened in his history was when Adam's wife ate the apple and they both were turned out of a tropical Eden to earn their bread by the sweat of their brows.—Lancet.

Civil War Stories

The Drummer Boy.

In the battle cloud's eclipse,
And a shower of shot and shell,
With his soul upon his lips,
Benny fell;
And they laid him stiff and cold
In the grave; yet why repine?
When he reached the gates of gold
If he had the countersign
All is well.

Hallowed is the path he trod
And the little nameless knoll
Earth has claimed his form, but God
Claimed his soul.
Heaven's reveille at dawn
Reached it through the battle's din;
When the last relief came on
He was mustered out—mustered in
Was his soul.

Pilgrim clouds in mourning deep,
As they journey through the skies,
Pause upon their way to weep
Where he lies;
But the sun when they are gone
Glorifies the tears they shed;
And o'er him, from dark to dawn,
Stars and blue he loved are spread
In the skies.
—Chicago Ledger.

The Mule in the War.

Down in North Carolina, writes Capt. Henry A. Castle, of St. Paul, in the National Tribune, a squad of Sherman's "bummers," mounted on mules and straying miles in advance of the column, accidentally stumbled on a brigade snugly encamped, into whose ragged, decollete bosoms and discouraged souls the clangor and bray of the onset smote such terror that they swiftly pulsated out of sight, leaving the invincible mules and their astonished riders in unlitigated possession. Gen. Grant's "Memoirs" tells us that a similar event occurred in Lookout Valley in 1863. Otherwise, this splendid achievement is unprecedented, perhaps, since Gideon attacked the Midianites, "lying along the valley like grasshoppers for multitude," leading a battalion of 400 Hebrews, with a trumpet in every man's hand, with empty pitchers and lamps within the pitchers."

In the innumerable miscellaneous episodes of a military sphere, the mule was marked high as to deportment. To the hospital and the guard-house those Siamese bugbears of honorable service, he was a stranger. No venial dereliction subjected him to stoppage of pay or reduction to the ranks, even when the fodder that he longed for never came. The proneness of his voice apparatus to go off at half-cock unfitted him for the crooked work of strategy; he could never be relied on either to "lie" in wait or to "steal" on the enemy. A zoological riddle, offspring of amalgam and miscegen, as unclassifiable as a combination fire-escape and corn-sheller, he had, nevertheless, too much beastly self-respect to ever incur censure for getting humanly drunk. Patient in toil, silent in suffering, serene amid confusion and alarm, he was in no sense a grumbler, and in no unpardonable sense a "kicker."

If to his straight enduring back a mountain howitzer was sometimes strapped, and fired without unslinging, he accepted the indignity, went to grass with the recoil, and rose unruffled as a boodle alderman ticketed for Montreal. Oh! dimless, unknowable mule!

Dodging Bullets in Battle.

The physical effect produced upon different men in the presence of danger forms an interesting study, but in many cases the outward signs as indicated by the actions of the individual in no wise measure the degree of courage or his fear. The practice, for instance, of dodging shots, "jack-knifing" under fire, proceeds from a nervousness which is often purely physical, and has but little more significance as a test of courage than winking when something is thrown in our face. The act is entirely involuntary. A general officer, who was killed at the second battle of Bull Run, was one of the most gallant soldiers that ever drew a blade. Everybody had predicted his early death from the constant and unnecessary exposure to which he subjected himself. When under fire the agile dodging he performed was a whole gymnastic exercise in itself. His head would bob from side to side, and occasionally bob down to his horse's neck, with all the vigor of a signal flag in waving messages. These actions were entirely beyond his control, and were no indications whatever of fear. Dodging to some extent under a heavy infantry fire is very common. I can recall only two persons who throughout a rattling musketry fire always sat in their saddles without moving a muscle or even winking an eye; one was a bugler in the regular cavalry, and the other was General Grant.

When Farragut Wanted a Pilot.

Some days ago a former companion pilot of mine died, and recalled one of those undying incidents of war days, said an old Mississippi River pilot to a reporter of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. He and two other pilots were drifting down the river one night just after having taken some Confederate boats up. Just as they were passing Farragut's fleet off Vicksburg they were hailed, but would have drifted on past in the dark if a shot had not been fired. Knowing well what was wanted they planned a moment and then one of them went aboard. The officer of the deck asked him if there were any pilots in the party, telling him the fleet was only waiting for some one to take them up stream. My friend denied his calling, and then the Admiral examined him with a manner that indicated that he suspected the truth. Getting no satisfaction, he left, whispering a word to his Lieutenant, who called the Sergeant-at-arms and remarked in an unconcerned way, "You may take this man and the two alongside in the skiff, lock them up, and get them ready to be shot. If they can't be of service as pilots, we can't be bothered with them as prisoners." The sergeant took them below, but the bluff didn't work, for they would have been shot by their own folks, the Confederates, for serving the Federal navy, and they preferred death with honor to the same thing without. Three days after, a Yankee pilot was sent aboard, and one who knew my friends well. The Admiral determined to test them again, with a view of having them exterminated if satisfied they were pilots. The prisoners were suddenly brought, unprepared, face to face with the Yankee pilot, under close scrutiny by the Admiral and his staff. There was, perhaps, the slightest involuntary recognition, but it was not detected, and even when the Northern pilot was closely questioned as to whether he knew them, denied it emphatically, and poo-poohed at the idea that they were of the profession. This secured their release. I have often been in their company since, and enjoyed the mutual joke of "You're the man that didn't know me at Vicksburg, eh?"

Zack Chandler.

I think, says Charles B. Dean, in the Detroit Free Press, it was the next Sunday after the first Bull Run battle our regiment, the Fourth Michigan, was back in its old camp near Washington. One afternoon Senator Zachariah Chandler rode into our camp on horseback. He passed up one street and down another between the rows of tents, in company with friends, and all this while expressing his opinion on the way the war was being run generally. The fact was Zack was riled, and when in that way no one had trouble in finding it out.

After he had finished his discourse on the conduct of the war he dismounted and proceeded to shake hands all around. Talking about our affairs he soon learned how hard up for change, even enough to pay postage, some of us were, having as yet received no pay. Learning that we had credit at the sutler's for stationery, etc., he said:

"I'll fix it, boys! You lay in for a few packages of envelopes and I will frank them for you."

He seated himself on a cracker box under a tree, took his hat off and was soon deluged with yellow envelopes, more than he could have signed his name upon in a day.

"Oh, ——! boys, I can't stay over an hour or so, anyway. See here, you, and you," beckoning to several, "can't you write that nearly as I do, so it will pass? Try it."

Soon several soldiers were installed as secretaries pro tem., and you may well believe a rushing business was done in franking for an hour or so.

On leaving for the city he called back to us: "Now, of course none of you boys will put 'Z. Chandler, U. S. A.' on the upper corner of an envelope hereafter" (then laughing) "at least until after the paymaster comes."

Did we? Oh, no! Why, bless you, twenty-five envelopes fixed up that way sold for one dollar. Our cigars and "pop" came high in those days. Well, the paymaster came in time, bringing specie and the new greenbacks. We were always grateful to Old Zack for his sermon that Sunday—especially the application thereof.

Sneezes Out Buckshot.

After carrying three buckshot in his head for forty-seven years, Francis Rogers of Wilkesbarre, Pa., a civil war veteran, ejected them from his nose in a fit of violent sneezing. He was shot in the head at Antietam with buckshot during a charge upon the Confederate lines and severely wounded. He recovered, although the surgeon did not extract the bullets.

The leaden missiles have been in the front portion of his head since and have often caused terrific headaches, but physicians did not like to probe for them, because they lay so close to the optic nerves. They have gradually been working themselves about, but Rogers had no idea they were to come out until they appeared to-day.

A CONVERT.

He Is Now a Firm Believer in Psychi Psychic Phenomena.

"Do I believe in the occult? Sure, I do," said the suburbanite as he settled down into his seat in the smoking car and filled his pipe. "I was just as great a skeptic as you are until a week ago. I was firmly convinced that table manipulation was a fake, that mind reading was pure guesswork and that all alleged psychic phenomena could be attributed to natural causes. But now I'm willing to accept the entire propaganda. Nothing is too obscure for me to accept on blind faith. I've experienced a complete change of heart, as they used to say in the old camp meetings.

"You see, it was this way. My friend Buggins, who is really a bug on the occult, induced me to go to a seance with him the other afternoon and prevailed upon me to have a sitting. In spite of my non-belief he said I was a good subject, and I guess I was. The lady who was delivering the soul fluid told me I should have trouble with a dark, stout woman. All the way out on the train that evening the idea haunted me. I couldn't get it out of my head.

"And, say, she was right. What happened? Why, when I got home I found myself up against the proposition of firing the colored cook. Sure, I believe in the occult. Got a light?"—New York Times.

Wonderful Cactuses.

The largest cactuses in the world are those to be found in parts of Mexico. The curious bristling plants common in greenhouses and even in botanical collections give but a poor idea of the size and beauty of this variety. It is common, for example, to find a single plant growing to a height of eight or ten feet which will weigh several hundred pounds. The cactuses grow in a bewildering variety of forms and colors. Their blossoms are correspondingly large and varied.

A Cynical Citizen.

"Is your town improving?"

"Yep," answered Broncho Bob. "The figures show that the tone of Crimson Gulch is improving. The population has decreased 30 per cent in the last year, and I don't know of anybody whose absence wouldn't be a benefit."—Washington Star.

The Mightiest Money Saving Event in This Vicinity!
Thousands of Dollars Worth of Factory Remnants and Odds and Ends to be Distributed at Shattered Prices.

An Event of almost Limitless Saving Possibilities and Bargain Benefits.
An All-Eclipsing, Cost-Ignoring Sacrifice of Fresh and Reliable Merchandise.

THIS WIDELY FAMOUS SALE IS NOW RUNNING IN FULL BLAST AND CONTINUES TEN DAYS. DON'T LET ANYTHING KEEP YOU AWAY.

To explain, if explanation be necessary, the "why" of the Mill End Sale, It may be termed the Broom of the Manufacturer. Periodically he sweeps clean his store rooms of vast accumulations of remnants, of short lots, of surpluses, and odds and ends. The live merchant catches his share of these sweepings and pays practically his own price for them. In turn he distributes them at prices lower than their actual cost to manufacture. We share with you the loss the manufacturer gladly bears to rid his stocks of goods which must be moved.

There's the cause of the Mill End Sale. The results are very incompletely told in the almost unbelievable sale values printed on this page. They are as but a drop in the bucket. Every department of the store has its full share of them. There are thousands of them quite beyond description, but all as wonderful as these listed here.

We need add no more to the argument of the prices, except our assurance that there's nothing trashy in the entire assortment; nothing which is not fresh, clean, dependable, and worthy of this good store.

Be on hand early and get first choice of these truly unprecedented offerings. You'll be well repaid for coming to this sale.

IDEAL COUNTRY SAYS BUTLERITE

Thomas Shoub Writes Interesting Letter Concerning Mississippi Her Many Advantages.

Escatawpa, Miss., March 8, 1910

DEAR HERALD:

I enclose draft herewith to keep the "old home" paper coming to our address. We look forward to its coming each week as we do for the letter from home. We scan its pages eagerly to make note of the happenings to our friends and neighbors of the past. The four years since we left Butler has wrought many changes there. These years have been eventful to us, and it may interest some of your readers to hear something of our new home. I do not think I can describe it in any other way so well as to quote a stanza from an old song:

"Ah! that sunny southland where the orange blooms
Where magnolias scent the morning's breeze,
There what wealth of roses, thousand rich perfumes,
Climbing vines and ever verdant trees."

Before we had time to learn much of our new surroundings the above came to our minds as a splendid description of this section. There is an abundance of the most beautiful flowers to charm the eye, and they are everywhere and all of the time. To day the yellow jasmine is in its glory. Next week it will be some other equally beautiful one that will claim our attention. But while I might write a long letter about our flowers they are not the only things of interest to us. Their beauty and fragrance are a continual delight. They also have another claim for our consideration. They are often heralds of fruits that are as fine and valuable as the flowers are beautiful.

We have many kinds of fruit that can be grown here, including most of those grown in the temperate zone and some of those of the tropical or subtropical regions. I will not have space to name each kind we have, but I will mention the fig and the Satsuma orange. These do especially well in our immediate vicinity, and a few acres of either may be made more profitabie to the owner than most one hundred sixty acre farms in the north. Figs are easily grown from cutlings, and with ordinary cases will produce a crop worth $100 net per acre the third year from planting and will increase in yield each year after that, for the next five or six years, at the rate of from 40 per cent to 100 per cent per year.

The Satsuma orange is not so well known, but it is sure to win its place. It is the hardest variety now known, comes into bearing early and is productive, of good flavor and nearly seedless. It is called the "kid glove" orange, because one can peel and eat it without soiling the glove. It is claimed that these oranges grow in our immediate vicinity, are of larger size and better quality than those grown in any other place in the United States.

They are profitable too. Our nearest neighbor sold $75 worth of oranges off of the trees that grew on five square rods of ground last year. They begin to bear early. A brush in our door yard that was a dormant bnd two years ago bore four nice big oranges last year, during its second years growth from the bnd

But figs and oranges are not our only good things. The paper or thin shelled pecan is a rival for either the fig or orange. This is a comparatively new thing, since it is within the last twenty years that there has been any effort made to propagate the best nuts for commercial purposes. The tree belongs to the hickory family. Is hardy, long lived, and many trees are very productive. Within the last twenty years the process of grafting of the best varieties has been begun and is now carried on quite extensively. You and your readers may judge if it will pay to grow pecans, from these facts. The best nuts grown in this vicinity the past year sold readily at from 75 cents to $1 00 per pound. A tree of best varieties with good care will bear from 40 to 60 pounds of nuts at ten years old. They are commonly planted about 20 trees to the acre. The above yield ought to increase until the tree is 30 to 40 years old. If the above figures are right, a little time spent with pencil and paper will show if it is profitable or not. If you should be "from Missouri" you can be shown, if you will give me a chance.

We live on a farm within ten miles of the Gulf of Mexico. We are working for a pecan orchard and a Saisuma orange grove. They look mighty good to us. The longer we look, the better it appears to us. In a general way here are some of the advantages we enjoy. We can have fresh fruit from tree or vine about ten months of the year. We can have fresh vegetables from garden or field every day of the year. We can leave home in the morning and go to the bay and pick up more and better oysters than all of the people in Butler eat in a week, and get home the same evening.

We can have all the fish we want by going after them. We have no use for cisterns, as the water from our wells are freestone. We have the largest rainfall of any section of the United States, very evenly distributed through the year. No expense of irrigation—the water is free and plenty of it. The country is healthful. For the above and many other reasons we like our new home. The only thing we wish to be different is, that there are not enough people here.

We note some contrasts with our old home in Butler. I will mention one. There, when we saw the first robin we knew spring had come. Here when we see the first robin we know your winter has begun. The robins come here to spend the winter. We think they are wise old birds.

There are many other things I might tell if I had the space and could say them well, but I will close with another stanza from the old song:

"In that smiling southland, in green bowers to be.
Music's voice may soothe the languid day,
There where comes no winter, that's the home for me,
When bright flowers forever more are gay."

With a "Long live the HERALD" I am,

Yours truly,
T. H. SHOUB,
Escatawpa, Miss.

A CLOSE CALL FOR C. B. OBERLIN

Lake Shore Inspection Train Hits Rear Wheel of Bicycle While Going 60 Miles an Hour

Clyde B. Oberlin came neer losing his life last Saturday when he was struck by a fast train going west on the Lake Shore.

He was on his way to the store at the noon hour. Upon arriving at the railroad crossing on Broadway he was held up by a freight train. As soon as the freight had passed by he mounted his bicycle and started to cross the track, the gates being partially raised. He was in the center of the second track when the watchman called to him to hurry. Looking up he saw the train only a few feet away and coming toward him at the rate of a mile a minute. He gave a lunge forward and crossed the track, the train striking the rear wheel of his bicycle, throwing him forward only a few feet from the wheels. He was picked up and taken home on a stretcher, although not unconscious. Dr. W. F. Shumaker was called and upon examination it was found that no serious injuries had resulted.

Although badly shaken up and mentally passing through the jaws of death, having escaped with his life with less than a second to go on he still has some pluck left and remembered enough of the accident to give the HERALD the facts as stated above.

The train which struck him was the observation car and could not be heard above the noise of the freight. John Wilson, who was operating the gates, did not as we understand it raise them sufficiently to let him pass under, but had just started to swing them up when Mr. Oberlin, thinking the track to be clear started across. His friends were badly frightened at the time, thinking he was either killed or fatally injured. But at this time they are rejoicing over the fact that his life was spared.

Announcement

A. W. Madden desires to announce his name as candidate for county auditor subject to the will of the democrats of DeKalb county.

President Harrington, Peoria

The word of a prominent and respected business man should be listened to. Mr. F. M. Harrington, president of the Harrington Manufacturing Co., Peoria, Ill., writes that he was for years a constant sufferer from indigestion and constipation, which nothing seemed to relieve, and he had almost given up hope when he began to take Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and it made a new man of him. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed and if you want to try it before buying send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 9-1m KENDALLVILLE, Ind., March 14—The Orange township advisory board has decided to build a new school house at Rome City at a cost of $35,000. As the old building had been condemned, a new structure had been under advisement and Architects Griffith & Fair, of Fort Wayne, will visit Rome City today and submit plans for the new building, which will be of brick, with six rooms, and will have steam heat and it is thought that the old school lot will be used.

AUBURN, Ind., March 14.—The country home of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Gramling midway between this city and Ashley, was totally destroyed by fire this morning, and the contents lost are not covered by insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown.

ANGOLA, Ind., March 14.—The funeral of William Carpenter, whose death occurred at his home on North Elizabeth street, this city, Sunday morning, will take place from the Methodist Episcopal church at two o'clock this afternoon. The deceased was a native of Saratoga county, New York, having been born there 76 years ago, and came to Steuben county with his parents when but a small boy. He had been in very poor health for more than a year from nervous prostration, and his death was, therefore, not unexpected. He is survived by his wife, one son and two daughters, Mrs. Emma Baker and Mrs. Ida Mulenix; also two brothers, Alvah and Alanson.

AUBURN, Ind., March 14.—Since Saturday afternoon the county clerk has issued three marriage licenses to DeKalb county people. The first to make application was Thomas Stutz, who would wed Miss Mabel Musser, aged 22 and 17 respectively. Miss Musser will be remembered as the young lady who was taken into custody last fall after evidence had been submitted to the effect that she had been encouraged in delinquency, and was placed under the jurisdiction of Willis Rhoads, who gave his permission for the wedding to occur Saturday. Peter Frederick, a 47 year old farmer of near Steubenville, and Elizabeth Rummel, aged 47, of the same neighborhood, were granted a license. Eugene Warham and his divorced wife, Mabel Warham, was the third couple to secure a license to marry, and at once embarked on the second installment of married life. The couple was separated about a year ago, and ever since have been very devoted to each other. The father of the groom was very much opposed to the remarriage.

In Honor of "Tode"

On last Monday evening about a dozen friends gathered at the New Process laundry in honor of J. H. Latson who will soon depart for the wilds of Michigan.

A general good time was enjoyed by those present until about 10 p m when a sumptuous banquet was served. Dr. Frank Fanning was chosen as toastmaster.

After the toasts, Mr. John D. Mitchell in behalf of the friends in a few well chosen remarks, presented Mr. Latson with a very nice present, after which in departing each wished him success in his new home.

When Furniture Buying Time Comes

There are two words of advice that all should remember--GO SLOW.

You may safely hurry when purchasing a new pair of gloves or shoes, or any article that you will be done with in a short time.

But with furniture go slow, you are buying for life. We invite you to be deliberate--ask questions, so that you may know exactly wdat you are doing.

There's our experience to help the inexperienced, and there's a well chosen stock to do your chooing from.

Nobody who bgys furniture hgre ever regrets it. Like wine, our furniture improves with age.

There's a reason.

"KING BEEF IS DEAD; LONG LIVE THE HEN"!

BOYCOTT beef! All hail the hen! The consumer's determination to force down the price of the meat packers' product has an entirely different purpose in view, but the plan is working admirably for the exaltation of Secretary James Wilson's feathered friend, the great American hen.

Here are some facts about the things you eat at the breakfast table:

Eggs form a tremendous part of a city breakfast. Scrambled, fried, poached and boiled. So many eggs in fact, that on some mornings, when the egg eaters are extremely busy, the eggs would reach in a line, laid end to end, several miles. The size of the omelet those eggs would make varies according to the deftness of the cook, but if two eggs will make an omelet six inches long by two and one-half inches wide—a very fluffy one, indeed, but entirely possible, then all the eggs that came into a city on record egg-import day would make an omelet fifty feet wide and 337 feet long.

The ordinary man who can afford two eggs at this season when eggs are being classed with precious stones, may have two boiled eggs for breakfast, and eat them entirely unconscious of the fact that one of them may have come from Texas and the other from Alabama. Yet such could be true and very probably is true a great thousand times a year.

Now, eggs are not always just eggs. There are many varieties, as a glance at the commission men's list will show. For instance, there are fresh gathered extras, which are the real thing in eggs, and are known to the common or garden personage as a "fresh egg." There are also "fresh gathered storage." These are also packed with a view to size and color and are further divided into "packed firsts" and "packed extra firsts." "Fresh gathered firsts," "fresh gathered seconds," and "fresh gathered thirds" follow with only a tinge of difference in size, color and price. The rear guard of the high grade eggs is brought up with "fresh gathered dirties, No. 1," and "fresh gathered dirties No. 2."

And then comes the division given over to refrigerator eggs and stored away eggs. The "refrigerators" run in five classes, three of whic hare of the better grade. Then come refrigerator seconds and thirds—and the procession is brought up with "limed firsts" and "limed seconds."

There is a lot of talk about germs in milk these days. Everyone knows the herculean efforts being made to protect folks from unclean milk, tuberculous cows, and the like, but the germ is more active than the much talked-of flea, as a glimpse at his ability to raise and provide for families will show.

A germ simply breaks in two and becomes two germs. They break in two and become four germs, they break in two and become eight germs, sixteen germs, thirty-two germs, sixty-four germs, one hundred and twenty-eight germs and so on—and the remarkable part about it is that they increase almost as rapidly as the words are written down. Milk is a great place for germs, although it is very true that some of the germs of milk—such as those which are found in the lactic acid in the milk—are life-living and healthful, so when the health officer says "there are three million germs in this quart of milk," he does not mean necessarily that there are three million life destroyers there.

Ten thousand people handle Washington's milk, that is, they help shove it along from cow to front door. Tons of ice are used daily in getting the milk from the outlying farms on the railroad. A squad of inspectors meet the milk every morning and check it off, so that every can may be traced direct to the original farm whence it came.

Before the anti-meat movement started people expected to eat about 200 pounds of meat apiece a year. Now, of course, they are expected to eat none at all, according to the leaders of the great movement. Some of those who have delighted in heavy breakfasts and have had a club steak and "trimmins" every morning for years may think that steaks are indispensable, but the figures don't show it—not by a jugful. The hotel men and lunchroom men are pretty good judges of this thing, and they say that about one-tenth of the meat only is eaten at breakfast. Still, if you had to pay the check every morning you would have a nice little item to attend to.

"Brown the wheats!" A city's stack of wheat cakes, buckwheat cakes and other delicious things of the sort would make a mighty nice warm blanket on a cold night. The theory that a newspaper reporter and a prepared flour salesman worked out while waiting for a plate of hot cakes in a hotel restaurant the other day was that if all the hot cake flour in the city was apportioned off into parcels representing the average morning consumption, the cooks could mix and bake a stack of wheats a thousand feet high. Of course, all that includes cornmeal, patent pancake flour and the rest of them.—Washington Post.

A WINTER on NEW YORK ROOFS to FIGHT CONSUMPTION

A Radical Test of the Fresh Air Cure.

There were no hills in Babylon. This was a great relief to the queen, who had lived all her life in the highlands. She grew ill for want of the pure air and the restful solitude of the hills. So the king built the Hanging Gardens.

Hills are more numerous in New York. Babylon in all her glory had no elevated gardens equal to those of the great modern city. They cover a thousand roofs. Many of them are for pleasure only, amid the enchantment of music and brilliant electric lighting.

But many also are for health. These are the roof sanitariums, and their near relatives, the roof playgrounds. They are in some cases one and the same thing. They are recent developments of the mighty crusade for health in the city.

All the public schools that have been built lately or are building now in Manhattan have on their roofs great glass-covered solariums, which are gymnasiums and playgrounds. In the new Bellevue Hospital an extensive space on the roof is devoted to the solarium—one of the great features of the city's chief hospital. It is large for some hundreds of patients to sit or lie in the open air.

On the roof of a tall apartment house that overlooks the beautiful south end of Central Park, from near Fifth avenue, there are two tents. These tents have been the homes of two men for several months, their sleeping quarters throughout the winter. In the daytime the men recline in chairs outside the tents. Their meals are usually brought up to them. These men have faith that tuberculosis can be cured by the air of New York City.

There are 20,000 consumptives in New York whose names are recorded at the City Board of Health. Many of these are too poor to go where they would find better conditions for recovery. And this class is too numerous to be cared for in the sanitariums that the city can control through its charities. Hence, the roof solarium, and the heavily-cloaked invalid sitting all day in the quietest corner of the public park.

Dr. James Alexander Miller established the clinic at Bellevue and is its director.

"The home treatment of tuberculosis in the tenement houses of this city, or on their roofs, is only a makeshift," says Dr. Miller. "It is not an adequate substitute for the sanitarium.

"That the roofs of tenement houses have been quite largely used is due to the fact that no other suitable place near the patient's home was available for securing a restful spot where he could breathe the outdoor air. Dirt and dust, objections of tenants or landlords, and interference or danger from rowdy neighbors, often render the tenement roofs impossible. The patient is then advised, and, if necessary, assisted, to move to a place near one of the public parks, or where he can secure the use of a suitable roof.

"After a positive diagnosis of tuberculosis has been made at the clinic the physician goes over carefully with the patient the general principles of the treatment, emphasizing the dangers of infection and the way to avoid it and the necessity of painstaking perseverance to obtain a maximum of fresh air, rest and good food. The dangers of dirt, darkness, poor ventilation, overeating, insufficient or improper food, irregular or vicious habits in undermining the general health and so hurrying the progress of the disease, are taught to the patient. This may be called the first lesson, and the nurse then takes the task of drilling these principles constantly and repeatedly in the house with both the patient and his family.

"By means of an inexpensive steamer chair and suitable wraps, the patient may rest out of doors, on the roof, very comfortably, and should sleep there during the summer months. In some cases we secure for the patient the sleeping bag and reclining chair or hammock that will make him comfortable while taking the rest cure on the roof.

"The great principles of sanitary treatment: An open-air life by night as well as day and an abundance of nourishing food. Simple a matter as this appears, it is difficult enough to carry out in a sanitarium, and these difficulties are much intensified in the home. Intelligent co-operation on the part of the patient and his family and a period of time amounting at the least to six months, and generally a year or more, are required for successful treatment."

A NATIONAL DISGRACE.

United States Leads All the World in Number of Murders.

That the number of criminal homicides in the United States each year is practically forty-three times greater than in Canada and eight times greater than in Belgium, which has the greatest number of any European country; that in the United States the average criminal serves but seven years of a life sentence, and that at the present time only about one murderer in every seventy-four is punished, were statements in an address delivered by Dr. Andrew D. White, former president of Cornell University and former ambassador to Germany and Russia. He said:

"The number of felonious homicides per year per million population for various countries follows. Canada, 3; Germany, 4 to 5; England and Wales, 10 to 11; France, 14 to 15; Belgium, 16; United States, more than 129. These figures are based on an average taken for eight years.

"It seems impossible that on one side of an imaginary line homicide could be so much more prevalent than on the other, as in the case of Canada and the United States. But the reason is that on one side law prevails and not chicanery, and that on the other side has taken place a break-up in the administration of criminal law.

"'By far the greatest of all causes is the fact that the administration of criminal law has become simply a game. A trial is a game between two or three lawyers; the whole thing has become very much a farce."

TEMPEST IN A TEAPOT.

How a Girl and Her Photograph Led to Two Courts-martial.

A girl and her photograph were the innocent cause of two courts-martial at Boston recently, and the effects of which may be long continuous. The girl's name is Dorothy Hesler and her home is at Evanston, Ill.

Recently Miss Hesler paid a visit to an uncle in Boston and a chance visitor at the latter's home was Dr. Edward S. Cowles, middle-aged and married. He greatly admired Miss Hesler, who is a pretty young girl of 18 and the daughter of a soldier who fell fighting in the Philippines. One day he took her photograph from her uncle's home and is said to have boasted, while exhibiting it, that his manly pulchritude had charmed her.

Miss Hesler was engaged to Past Assistant Surgeon Ansey H. Robnett, formerly of the Charlestown navy yard, and acquainted him with the conduct of Dr. Cowles. There was a dance given at the Charlestown navy yard, to which Dr. Cowles was invited by one of the officers. There he encountered Dr. Robnett and the latter's intimate friend and master of ceremonies, Paymaster George P. Auld. An altercation ensued, and during an interchange of back-hand courtesies Dr. Cowles was ejected by Auld, aided and encouraged by Dr. Robnett. The following day the latter said things to Dr. Cowles over the 'phone and demanded that he return at once the picture of Miss Hesler.

The dignity of Dr. Cowles was insulted and he lodged a complaint which resulted in the Secretary of the Navy administering a reprimand to Paymaster Auld and Dr. Robnett, and in transferring the latter to Newport naval station. The wife of Dr. Cowles was not placated by this punishment, and went to Washington, where her representations resulted in the ordering of courts-marial for Auld and Robnett. There were three charges against the officers—conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman; assault, and falsehood. The last charge was eliminated by the judge advocate.

The affair created a good deal of interest in Boston, and also in the naval set in Washington. To the layman who can handle such affairs without recourse to the courts and without undue publicity the whole matter seems trivial. It seems like a tempest in a teapot.

NOW AND 10 YEARS AGO

Writer In Review of Reviews Compares To-Day's Prices With Those of 1900.

HIGHER THAN IN WAR TIMES.

Proper Standard of Living Cannot Be Maintained by the Average Wage Earner.

Agnes C. Laut in the Review of Reviews gives an illustration of the exorbitant advance in the cost of living, not based on theory, but dealing in facts such as every householder in these days is compelled to face. As compared with ten years ago, she says:

"The increase in the simplest articles for mere subsistence is marked not by cents and fractions of a cent, but by 25, 50 and 100, and, in the case of lard, actually 200 per cent * * * and this increased cost of living falls on the average wage earner, especially the office wage earner, who has no labor union to send his market value up—falls with the heavy hand of a tax collector in time of war, or tribute levied by a conqueror. As a matter of fact, with the exception of two or three staples, like cotton and wheat, prices are higher to-day in America than they have ever been in time of war. Never has the country been so prosperous. Never has there been vaster abundance of all the staples supplying human subsistence, yet never in the history of America have all the staples of living gone to such a level of extortionate prices."

The Russell Sage foundation report on the standard of living in 1907 said that it required no statistician to show that $600 and $700 a year was wholly inadequate to maintain a proper standard of living, "and no self-respecting family should be asked or expected to live on such an income." The committee expressed the opinion that with an income of between $700 and $800 a family can barely support itself, provided it is subject to no extraordinary expenditure. Statistics show that the average income of a worker in the United States does not begin to equal $800 a year. It is really under $600. But take as illustration an income between $600 and $700, with the family unit as five—two parents and three children. A few years ago a family of this size could lease apartments at $14 or $16 or $18 a month, in a typical city. To-day decent sanitary surroundings will cost from $25 to $30 a month—$300 to $360 a year—one-half of the income. It is estimated that where the income ranges from $600 to $900 a year, with a family of five, 50 per cent must go for food. Add thereto the rent, and so there is left but $150 to $200 at the outset for clothing, illness, fuel, carfare, education, insurance and incidentals. At present prices the absolute minimum at which a family of five can be clothed is $100 a year. Economists figure that a man can be poorly fed at 20 cents a day; adequately fed at 25 cents. With a family of five this means $35 a month. So the writer says:

"Screw it down as you will, you cannot keep your family of five in health and keep the food bill below $400. If you screw your food bill lower somebody is going to be skimped as to brain and brawn. Screw your rent below $300, somebody must pay carfare, or take lodgers, or live in dark rooms for low rent. Pay for plain but adequate food and housing and you are coming out with a deficit on incomes and from the $900 income with less than $200 left for clothes, carfare, fuel, clothing, education, illness, incidentals."

At many of the cooking schools to-day beginners are compelled to care for themselves at an absolute limit of 6 cents a day for raw material, out of which they cook nutritious food. At a later day, the estimate is increased to 12 cents a day. But taking the lowest possible limit (6 cents) for bare material, handled with all the knowledge and care of science, the low wage earner is unable to meet the conditions, or, if he were, with a family of five, his food bill is equivalent to $300 a year. It is readily seen at his best the small wage earner will need his entire income for fuel, food and rent, leaving clothing and other incidentals of living to be met with a deficit. The result is, poorer housing, overcrowding, with nothing for education, health, recreation—just plain underfeeding, tainted food, child labor and other attendant ills. Where the income runs to $1,500, better housing and better clothing is essential, so that the wage earner can move in the sphere to which his position entitles him. No matter how economical he may be, fully $1,100 of his income is absorbed in essentials, and there are still the items of education, illness, insurance, recreation, wear and tear and savings. All the resources of economy must be brought into play by him to make ends meet.

ELEVATOR FOR THE OCEAN.

Pino's Method of Raising Material from the Sea Bottom.

The Italian Giuseppe Pino, who has invented an apparatus by means of which things on the bottom of the sea can be seen just as clearly as if they were exposed to the eye on land, calls his apparatus hydroscope.

It consists of a platform of steel supported on the surface of the water by strong cork girdles, says the Philadelphia Record. The platform can easily bear the weight of twenty men. From this platform descends a large steel tube, provided with spiral-shaped steps on which a man can go down to a chamber provided for at the lower end of the steel tube. From this chamber electric searchlights of great power are displayed, whose rays penetrate to the bottom of the sea.

This submarine chamber connected with Pino's hydroscope affords also room for a diver and a complete outfit for same. After a certain thing has been discovered by means of the electric rays, a safety-valve can be opened large enough to allow the diver to descend to the bottom of the sea. Trials with this new apparatus have been carried on on the Italian coast, between Genoa and Spezia, and, according to Italian reports, they have been very satisfactory. The inventor is of the opinion that his apparatus will be of especially great value to harbor and port authorities, river authorities, navies, shipyards, etc.

"So this is the way you neglect me!" she hissed. "What have you to say for yourself? Why didn't you come?"

"I couldn't," faltered the young man. "I had the dyspepsia, and the doctor advised me not to come."

"What—the doctor told you not to come to see me because you had the dyspepsia?"

"Well, he told me to keep away from all sweets."

The next moment she had him seated on the parlor sofa, telling him he was the nicest young man in the world.—London Express.

Lot of Mexican Neighbors.

The living conditions of the workers in the larger mines of Mexico are extremely humble. The average man and his family live in a one-room shack, mud house, stone hut or dugout along some bank. Their food consists of dried meat, fried flour cakes, beans and rank coffee. Stoves are found only in the better homes, the laborers' meals being cooked over a little fire between stones. At meal times the family gather around the fire and they sleep on blankets on the floor.

The Elephant's Revenge.

In the autobiography of Lindley Murray a passage occurs from which it appears that one of the clearest heads that ever engaged in the business of analysis was well nigh cracked by a simple agent for a small offense. In the year 1771 he visited the elephants at the queen's palace and, from whatever motive ventured to withdraw a portion of the hay which one of them had been collecting with his proboscis on the floor. The little affront offended the sagacious animal highly. The keeper remarked that he would never forget, and it was obvious from the rapid convolutions of his trunk that he only wanted an opportunity to avenge the misappropriation of his property on the spot. The grammarian, however, kept out of his way, probably thinking no more of the matter, until he chanced to revisit the same place after an interval of several weeks. On this occasion a number of other persons were present, but of the whole the elephant singled out his enemy and aimed a desperate blow at his head, which, fortunately, neither proved fatal nor took effect.

SHE QUIT.

But It Was a Hard Pull.

It is hard to believe that coffee will put a person in such a condition as it did an Ohio woman. She tells her own story:

"I did not believe coffee caused my trouble, and frequently said I liked it so well I would not, and could not quit drinking it, but I was a miserable sufferer from heart trouble and nervous prostration for four years.

"I was scarcely able to be around, had no energy and did not care for anything. Was emaciated and had a constant pain around my heart until I thought I could not endure it. For months I never went to bed expecting to get up in the morning. I felt as though I was liable to die at any time.

"Frequently I had nervous chills and the least excitement would drive sleep away, and any little noise would upset me terribly. I was gradually getting worse until finally one time it came over me and I asked myself what's the use of being sick all the time and buying medicine so that I could indulge myself in coffee?

"So I thought I would see if I could quit drinking coffee and got some Postum to help me quit. I made it strictly according to directions and I want to tell you, that change was the greatest step in my life. It was easy to quit coffee because I had the Postum which I now like better than the old coffee.

"One by one the old troubles left, until now I am in splendid health, nerves steady, heart all right and the pain all gone. Never have any more nervous chills, don't take any medicine, can do all my housework and have done a great deal besides."

AFTER FOUR YEARS OF MISERY

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Baltimore, Md.—"For four years my life was a misery to me. I suffered from irregularities, terrible dragging sensations, extreme nervousness, and that all gone feeling in my stomach. I had given up hope of ever being well when I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Then I felt as though new life had been given me, and I am recommending it to all my friends."—Mrs. W. S. Ford, 2207 W. Franklin St., Baltimore, Md.

The most successful remedy in this country for the cure of all forms of female complaints is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has stood the test of years and to-day is more widely and successfully used than any other female remedy. It has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means had failed.

If you are suffering from any of these ailments, don't give up hope until you have given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. She has guided thousands to health, free of charge.

All Snarled Up Again.

Mr. Hakinbrakes had just been introduced to the fair debutante.

"I need not tell you, Miss Glizzard," he said, "that I am very happy to—and yet, I suppose, of course, it's the proper thing to tell you—and I am sure you know I didn't mean it—though I did mean that I was happy to—to—make your acquaintance in this informal—though, to be sure, it's formal, and quite properly so, for there is nothing so enjoyable as witness the opening—I should say the unfolding—of the premature, or, rather, of the immature—which is the word I intended to use, of course—in this delightful and conventional function, to—to stand with reluctant feet, you know, where the—I beg your pardon, Miss Glizzard, but one of your hairpins is coming out."

WESTERN CANADA

Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, says:

"The stream of emigrants from the United States to Canada will continue."

Senator Dolliver recently paid a visit to Western Canada, and says: "There is a land hunger in the hearts of English speaking people; this will account for the removal of so many Iowa farmers to Canada. Our people are pleased with its Government and the excellent administration of law, and they are coming to you in tens of thousands, and they are still coming."

Iowa contributed largely to the 70,000 American farmers who made Canada their home during 1909. Yield crop returns alone during year added to the wealth of the country upwards of A Cordial Invitation.

Men who are "good mixers" may be as valuable as they are rare. There can be no question that a certain preacher in one of the large cities of Indiana fulfilled all the requirements, as the following story shows. He was the pastor of one of the leading churches of his city, says a writer in the Louisville Times. His motto was that of the late Henry George: "I am for men."

One day he stopped in a blacksmith shop to chat with the workmen. During the visit a florid-faced man of prosperous appearance came into the shop. He and the minister began chatting, but neither knew the other's occupation. They became good friends in a few minutes.

Finally the florid-faced man produced his card, which announced that he was in the saloon business on West street.

"Come down to my place any time," he said, "and I'll give you a good time."

"All right," replied the minister, "and by the way, I'm running a pretty good place myself. Come and see me and I'll give you a good time."

"I'll sure do that," said the other, "but by the way, where is your joint?"

"My joint," was the reply, "is the First Presbyterian Church. Just inquire for the pastor, and I'll be at your service."

As in Laundries.

A California woman in training a new Chinese servant to wait on the door had her daughter ring the bell and present her card. Next afternoon a friend called and handed her card to the Celestial, who pulled out of his sleeve the card the daughter of the house had presented the afternoon before and carefully compared the two. "Tickee no matchee," he exclaimed, handing back the visitor's card. "No

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by the inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Work of the Earthworm.

When we behold a wide, turf covered expanse we should remember that its smoothness, on which so much of its beauty depends, is mainly due to all the inequalities having been slowly leveled by worms. It is a marvelous reflection that the whole of the superficial mold over any such expanse has passed and will pass again every few years through the bodies of worms. The plow is one of the most ancient and most valuable of man's inventions, but long before he existed the land was, in fact, regularly plowed by earthworms. It may be doubted whether there are many other animals which have played so important a part in the history of the world as have these lowly organized creatures. Some other animals, however, still more lowly organized—namely, corals—have done far more conspicuous work in having constructed innumerable reefs and islands in the great oceans, but these are almost confined to the tropical zones.

Well He Knew.

Emperor Francis of Austria and his empress once attended the performance of a play which abounded in political allusions. On leaving the theater he remarked good-naturedly, "We may congratulate ourselves on having seen the piece at all, for I am sure that it will be speedily forbidden."

Environment.

The person with the Van Dyke beard and the artistic temperament had died and gone to the abode of the blest.

"Well, what do you think of it?" they asked him.

"The scenery is not bad," he answered, "but the music is hopelessly crude and archaic."

Farmers and High Prices.

The farmer is not guilty. He is a very small factor in the high prices now being paid for products. A study of prices paid in Chicago for beeves, sheep and hogs and for produce will show that the farmer is not getting more than his share. Recently the writer purchased a hind quarter of beef, dressed and delivered on his farm, for 9 cents a pound. This same piece of meat would retail in Chicago for twice that amount. Any one can buy dressed meat from the farmers for that price—7 cents a pound for fore quarter and 9 cents for hind quarter.

Our hogs sell for nearly 8 cents a pound on the hoof and can be purchased from farmers, killed and dressed, at 12 cents. There is no waste in either dressed pork or beef purchased from farmers—the same kind as that you get from your local butcher. The farmer is paying high prices for everything he uses and his land must earn an income on an investment of from $100 to $200 an acre. His farm machinery and horses have doubled in price.

Don't blame the farmer; he is working hard for very ordinary wages. I am farming 160 acres. I will be highly pleased if I get $20 an acre for my crop, or $3,200 for the year. The landlord gets one-half the crop for rent, leaving me $1,600 for a year's work for myself, wife and son, and $2,500 worth of horses and machinery. To earn this $1,600 we work from 4 a. m. until 8 p. m., eight months of the year, and during the other four months put in more than eight hours a day at hard manual labor. It is not all milk and honey on the farm, and the writer believes that the farmer, as a consumer as well as a producer, is buying too many automobiles for middlemen, paying dividends on too much watered stock and being the "fall guy" as well as the cliff dwellers of the city. —A. Farmer.

Different Methods.

It is generally conceded by the best stockmen and farmers, as well as by authorities of some of the experiment stations, that meat animals of the future will have to be fed and finished in a different manner from what they have been. Less corn and more nitrogenous feeds in the form of clover, cowpeas and alfalfa, supplemented with better pastures, must be used in order to make the production profitable and at the same time make more and better manure for maintaining the fertility of the land.

Corn fodder and stover have in the past been used to a considerable extent in steer feeding, thus utilizing nearly all the corn plant. Feeding silage to beef steers is gradually gaining in favor, and by the use of silos and silage in beef production all of the corn plant can be used to good advantage.

The legumes, including clover and alfalfa of the north and cowpeas of the south, have been found very profitable and economical in feeding both steers and hogs. Careful experiments have shown that a steer will make more economical gains on about half the corn usually fed with about an equal weight of alfalfa hay than on a diet of corn, with the dressed meat of a higher grade. Alfalfa on the farm before it is baled and marketed is worth only about half as much as corn, pound for pound, hence the gain to the grower in using the hay as a part of the finishing ration.

Growing and finishing hogs has already been radically changed over wide sections. More of forage crops such as alfalfa and cowpeas are being used, with less corn.

To Clean the Well.

It is well to make one of these devices against time of need. The dry season is the best and only time to fix and clean the farm well, writes J. L. Risley. Any floating matter may be removed by using an ordinary hand sieve. After marking off the rim into three parts attach a wire to any of these parts or points, and for a handle use an attached rope. Fasten the end of the rope to the third point in the rim and a weight to the sieve, so it will sink after lowering. In using sink the sieve edgewise in the water, pull the rope with a single attachment, lifting out of well all the floating sticks and other debris from the surface of the water.

SIEVE TO CLEAN THE WELL.

Fattening Fowls.

A fowl should always be fattened as quickly as possible. Ten days is long enough, but it should be confined either in a coop or a number in a small yard. They must have a continual supply of fresh water, and should be fed four times a day, the first meal being given early and the last one late. A recommended mixture is three parts corn meal, one part ground oats, one part bran, one part crude tallow, the entire lot scalded and fed for the first three meals, with all the corn and wheat that can be eaten up clean at night. Weigh the articles given.

Cholera Hogs.

Carcasses of hogs which have died from cholera should be immediately burned or buried deeply and covered with quicklime. Separate the sick from the well hogs and divide the well hogs into two or more groups and separate them as widely as practical. As the germs of cholera gain access to the system only through the digestive tract, the line of prevention is well marked. All feed and drinking troughs should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected. If the troughs are of metal, holding them over a blaze will be effective. Streams that do not rise on the home farm should be suspected as a possible carrier of infection and for this reason water from wells should be given. Feed sparingly. Where hog cholera serum is used, the hogs should remain in the infected yard.

Brace for Fence Post.

In about four cases out of every ten sagging of wire fences is due to poor, improper bracing. It is not enough to staple the separate strands secured to each post—that is splendid as far as it goes. To have a well-stretched fence and keep it taut, it is absolutely necessary that a good brace or anchor post be used and that the fence be stretched from these anchors. A good brace is illustrated. The construction is very simple and the cost is as moderate as any.

The end post should be of good size and perfectly sound. The brace post need not be large, but must be in good condition if it is to wear. Other posts may be easily reset without interfering greatly with the fence, but this is not the case with either of the bracers. The 4x4 running from the top of one post to the base of the other should be well selected, as considerable stress is placed upon it. It is best to mortise the ends of the cross bar or brace into the posts, as blocks nailed on give way in time. A fairly soft wire is better for the binding strand than one more liable to break with winding.

Keeping Accounts.

It has only been in recent years that farmers have been awakening to the fact that by taking an inventory once a year and by keeping an accurate book account that many valuable lessons could be learned and that by so doing they could place their farms on a more profitable basis. With business men, competition is so keen and profits necessarily so small that without keeping an accurate book account they would soon be forced out of business, but with farmers more slack methods do not necessarily result in bankruptcy, due, no doubt, to the fact that the farmer gets most of his living from the farm without any cash outlay, whereas the merchant must pay cash for everything he eats and wears. Notwithstanding this fact, however, the farmer who keeps a book account will find it just as profitable, if not more so, as the merchant.

Live Stock Builds Up Land.

It is very well known that in the old agricultural districts of Europe where land has been under cultivation for 2,000 years there is an increasing tendency to expand live stock industry. It is now recognized that animal husbandry is a wonderful help in not only maintaining the fertility of the soil, but also live stock industry builds up the land. Germany now has 10,967,000 milk cows, an increase of 500,000 in the past seven years. The total number of cattle in the empire agregates 20,631,000, a gain of nearly 5,000,000 since 1883. Pigs total 22,147,000, as against 9,206,000 in 1883. The only class of live stock which shows a decrease is sheep, which declined 2,000,000 in the past seven years.

Tungsten Lamps for Farms.

The introduction of tungsten lamps is doing much to advance the use of electricity on farms. It is possible for the farmer with a small plant driven either by a gasoline engine or by damming a small stream, to obtain sufficient current to light his house and barn with this economical type of incandescent lamp. The use of electricity on the farm, by the way, is growing, and, as pointed out by the Electrical World, farmers will in time come to consider electricity a necessity. Then it will be found profitable to establish central generating stations for farming districts to take the place of the small individual plants now being installed.

Milk Production.

Where help can be obtained to operate the dairy, milk production is one of the best paying branches of animal husbandry. The farmers operating their holdings with milch cows are enabled to market all the roughage and grain produced on the farm in milk, butter, cream or cheese. The dairy industry is especially adapted to build up and increase the fertility of the farm. It is popular among farmers because the farmer realizes a monthly income on his investments. As a rule, dairymen are thrifty and prosperous agriculturists.—Drovers' Journal.

Satisfaction in Rich Cream.

A rich cream testing 35 per cent fat or more is the most satisfactory to both farmer and factory. The best separators will skim a rich cream as efficiently as a thin cream, and more skim milk is left on the farm when a rich cream is sold.

New Egg Beater.

An effective egg beater that is operated in a simple and novel manner is that invented by a Connecticut man. By merely pulling a flexible cord attached to the drum of the implement the blades are made to revolve both ways with great rapidity. The beater consists of a hollow receptacle with a drum inside and a step bearing in the bottom for the support of the revolving member. The blades are bent wires, as shown in the illustration. Around the top of the drum is wound a flexible cord. The eggs are placed in the receptable and the cord pulled to its full length, thus causing the blades to revolve rapidly in the mixture. The momentum thus gained causes the cord to rewind about the drum, and when it is again drawn out the blades revolve in the opposite direction and the cord winds up once more. This double action continues, indefinitely, or as long as is necessary to operate the beater to do the work.

EGG BEATER.

Batter Pudding.

Fill a deep dish with apples cut in slices; sprinkle them with sugar and bits of butter, nutmeg or cinnamon; pour over the fruit a batter made as follows: Two cups of flour, one cup of milk, three teaspoonfuls baking powder, one teaspoonful of melted butter. Stir well, pour over the fruit and bake. Eat with a stirred sauce or cream and sugar.

Cinnamon Buns.

Sift one pint of flour, add one cup of milk, one cup of butter, four eggs beaten separately, one cup of sugar, half a teacup of yeast, one teaspoonful of cinnamon and one grated nutmeg. Knead well, roll out, cut in large biscuits, let rise and bake; when taken from the oven sprinkle with white sugar and ground cinnamon.

To Clean Copper.

Mix together two tablespoonfuls of flour, the same quantity of salt, and three tablespoonfuls of sand into a thin paste with vinegar. Clean the copper with this mixture, then rinse it thoroughly in hot water and polish it with a soft cloth or leather. Articles cleaned thus will last bright for some time.

Layer Cake.

This is a cheap and very nice cake for patty tins and layer cake. Take one cupful of sugar, one heaping cupful of flour, three eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one large iron spoonful of butter (melted), two iron spoonfuls of sweet milk.

Stuffed Dates.

Work to a paste a cup of powdered sugar, a tablespoonful of rich cream and half teaspoonful of any flavoring desired. Roll this paste into small cylinders and press one of these rolls into each stoned date. When all are done, roll in powdered sugar.

Fruit and Nut Sandwiches.

Take equal parts of figs and dates, with half as much in weight of almonds, and double the amount of peanuts. Put through the meat chopper alternately so they will be mixed in chopping. Spread very thinly between rounds of buttered bread.

Hints About the House.

Stuffed potatoes are made by mixing cheese and bread crumbs in with the contents.

When boiling fresh potatoes try putting a sprig of mint in the water to give a delicious flavor to the vegetables.

For a salad out of the ordinary, mix cream cheese with chopped olives and a boiled dressing. Serve it on hearts of lettuce.

A tall, narrow vase makes a good hatpin holder, if it is partially filled with ground cork, obtained at any drug store.

Soak all cooking utensils in warm water before you sit down to dinner and you will be surprised how much easier they will wash.

To avoid scraping new potatoes boil them in their skins until tender, then skin and put back in the steamer for a few minutes to dry out.

Plaster figures in hard or alabaster finish are easily cleaned by dipping a stiff toothbrush in gasoline and scrubbing into all the crevices.

If you have a black gown that needs freshening cleanse it thoroughly with clear black coffee diluted with water and containing a little ammonia.

After the weekly washing rub a little vinegar and spirits of camphor over the hands. This will keep the hands in good condition summer and winter.

Garments that are to be hung out to air can be put on hangers rather than pinned to the line. This prevents sagging or marking with the clothespins.

Do not launder stockings with other clothes because the lint from other garments will adhere to them. Use ammonia in water to wash them and they will not spot.

Never rinse lace in blue water with the idea of improving its color. Real lace should be finally rinsed in clear soft water, or, better still, in skim milk, which will give it a soft, creamy color.

Steel carving and bread knives can be quickly cleaned if there is an old razor strop in the house. This, sprinkled with emery, makes an excellent article to brighten sharp steel. Should a strop not be obtainable, a piece of cloth tacked over a long stick and covered with powdered emery will answer the same purpose. The stick should be flat on top.

How to Keep Baby's Skin Clear.

Few parents realize how many estimable lives have been embittered and social and business success prevented by serious skin affections which so often result from the neglect of minor eruptions in infancy and childhood. With but a little care and the use of the proper emollients, baby's skin and hair may be preserved, purified and beautified, minor eruptions prevented from becoming chronic and torturing, disfiguring rashes, itchings, irritations and chafings dispelled.

How Eskimos Measure Time.

Writing of the Eskimo methods of measuring time in a region of six months day or night, Harry Whitney in Outing says:

"The Eskimo divides his periods into 'sleeps,' but a sleep does not designate by any means the civilized measure of day and night. It is, in fact, a very uncertain term. Often we traveled from twenty to thirty hours without rest. Now there was no night, and I so far lost count of time that I was not at all certain of dates. Our single marches with the succeeding 'sleep' not infrequently covered a full forty-eight hours, or two ordinary days. The object of these extended marches was to take advantage of good weather and general conditions or because no safe or convenient camping place presented itself in the interim."

Patriotism

The stomach is a larger factor in "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" than most people are aware. Patriotism can withstand hunger but not dyspepsia. The confirmed dyspeptic "is fit for treason, stratagems and spoils." The man who goes to the front for his country with a weak stomach will be a weak soldier and a fault finder.

A sound stomach makes for good citizenship as well as for health and happiness.

Diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition are promptly and permanently cured by the use of

Dr. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY.
It builds up the body with sound flesh and solid muscle.

The dealer who offers a substitute for the "Discovery" is only seeking to make the little more profit realized on the sale of less meritorious preparations.

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for the paper covered book, or 31 stamps for the cloth bound. Address World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y.

Why Take Alcohol?

Are you thin, pale, easily tired, lack your usual vigor and strength? Then your digestion must be poor, your blood thin, your nerves weak. You need a tonic and alterative. You need Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the only Sarsaparilla entirely free from alcohol. We believe your doctor would endorse these statements, or we would not make them. Ask him and find out. Follow his advice. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

The endorsement of your doctor will certainly greatly increase your confidence in Ayer Pills as a family laxative. Liver pills. All vegetable. Ask your doctor about them

Editorial Notes

All indications go to point that the engagement of "St. Elmo," a dramatization of the famous novel of that name, in this city will be an exceedingly profitable one for the management. This is only another proof of the great popularity of the book, and it would seem that every reader of same is desirous of seeing the play. That it will prove to their liking is evidenced by the fact that it has met with unanimous approval from both the press and public. The George Amusement Company has given the play a fine production and a capable company. The engagement at the Thompson opera house is for one night only, Saturday, March 19.

Eyes are only obedient servants. They will see whatever the man behind the eyes may command them to see, but they lack any searching initiative. If there is no commanding will to direct them they roam aimlessly hither and yon, resting on only the most obvious and often the most uninteresting objects in the physical world. Five men walked through the same countryside on the same day. The first saw only the dusty roads, the long stretches of loneliness, the cheap dwellings and rough farm building, and the occasional barking dogs which challenged his irksome progress. The second beheld on every hand rolling hills and smiling meadows, masses of dark; cool green, splashed here and there with the bright colors of wild flowers, floating clouds touched with the glory of the sunlight sparkling waters, nestling in the lowlands with the deep blue of the sky on their bosom, and his artist soul was ravished by the beauty of it all. The third man observed the men and women at their toil and the children at their play. He noted the manner of domestic life and the indications of a social and religious activity in the little village church and schoolhouse. The fourth wanderer saw the teeming insect life of field and woodland, and searched out innumerable varieties of butterflies and bugs for his collection. The fifth man stood on the hillside and saw stretched out below him the bustling city or the thriving suburban town which an advantageous location suggested to his mind, and began planning a great real-estate development. The first three men viewed the landscape and the objects before them them without any particular command of their sight and without calling their imagination into play. Their eyes obeyed unconsciously the habits of mind and selection and went no farther. The fourth man directed his seeing for a definite purpose and found what he looked for. Only the fifth man looked upon the things before him and saw in them the greater things of the unseen. —Circle.

WELL DESERVED

The Praise That Comes From Thankful Butler People

One kidney remedy never fails.
Butler people rely upon it.
That remedy is Doan's Kidney Pills
Butler testimony proves it always reliable.

Mrs. G. R. Abram, N Pearl Street, Butler, Ind., says: "I have nothing but words of praise for Doan's Kidney Pills as they have always given very satisfactory results in my case. For years I suffered from severe attacks of backache and pains in my kidneys, sometimes extending as far as my shoulders. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and caused me much annoyance. After I had tried several remedies without success, I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Stone's drug store and they brought me relief. In July, 1902, I gave a statement for publication endorsing this preparation and at the present time, I gladly confirm all I then said in its favor. I have used Doan's Kidney Pills several times during the past two years when a cold has brought on a recurrence of backache and I have never failed to receive the desired relief."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. 10-2

It Saved His Leg

"All thought I'd lose my leg," writes J. A. Swenson, of Waterman, Wis. "Ten years of eczema, that 15 doctors could not cure, had at last laid me up. Then Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured it, sound and well." Infallible for skin Eruption Eczema, Salt Rheum, Boils, Fever Sores, Burns, Scalds, Cuts and Piles. 25c. at Stone's drug store. 9-1m

S. G. Stone is being urged by the democrats of the county to take the nomination for representative. Mr Stone is just the sort of a man that is needed in legislature and if he consents to accept the nomination his election is sure to follow, and this is a well known fact by both parties. He is a clean cut business man, and knows the wants of the people. There is probably not another man in the county that is better fitted for this office than Mr. Stone His business career and high standing makes him the logical candidate. The Herald beleives he will be nominated and elected.

About two thousand imported empty Camembert cheese boxes, bearing the names of well-known French cheeses were imported at New York on one steamship recently. Duty had to be paid on the printed matter on their two thousand labels, and another duty on the imported boxes. According to a New York trade journal, these boxes are filled in New York state and sold as coming from abroad.

A Good Beginning

Everything in later life depends upon how we began it. You cannot be successful in life if you haven't good health. To insure good health in later life it is necessary to start right. Many of life's serious ills are caused by constipation, indigestion and liver trouble. The best way to cure them in old or young is by the use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what we claim, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co, 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 9-1m

Few novels have been more widely read in the last forty years than St Elmo, a dramatization of which is to be presented at the Thompson theatre, Saturday evening. March 19. When the author, Augusta Evans Wilson, died a few months ago, she left an estate of $600,000. Over 75 per cent of this, it is said, represented her royalties on St. Elmo. Mrs. Wilson was constantly besieged with offers to permit the book to be made into a stage story, but only once, it is understood, was she persuaded to allow a play from it to be presented. This was some years ago and exercising a woman's privilege, she changed her mind and the play was withdrawn. Now it has been made into what sterling critics call an excellent play, bringing into life the best situations and most thrilling incidents of the novel. The dramatization is by Miss Grace Hayward, whose literary bent has kept pace with her bright stage career. That it will please a great mass of theatre goers is indicated by the cordial reception given it in the several cities in which it has been presented.

I want more low priced residences I have the purchasers. Wallace C. Webster.

Don't Break Down

Severe strains on the vital organs, like strains on machinery, cause breakdowns. You can't over-tax stomach, liver, Kidneys, bowels, or nerves without serious danger to yourself. If you are weak or run-down, or under strain of any kind, take Electric Bitters the matchless, tonic medicine. Mrs. J. E Van de Sande, of Kirkland, Ill., writes: "That I did not break down, while enduring a most severe strain, for three months, is due wholly to Electric Bitters." Use them and enjoy health and strength. Satisfaction positively guaranteed. 50c. at Stone's drug store. 9-1m

Don't Be Bald

Almost Any One May Secure a Splendid Growth of Hair

You can easily find out for yourself if your hair needs nourishment, if it is thinning, getting dry, harsh and brittle, or splitting at the ends You simply have to pull a hair from the top of your head and closely examine its roots. If the bulb is plump and rosy it is all right; if it is white and shrunken your hair is diseased and needs nourishment

We have a remedy for hair troubles that cannot be surpassed. It has a record of growing hair and curing baldness in 93 out of 100 cases where used according to directions for a reasonable length of time It will even grow hair on bald head if the scalp is not glazed and shiny. That may seem like a strong statement—that is, and we mean it to be, and no one should doubt it until they have put our claims to an actual test.

We are so sure that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will completely eradicate dandruff, prevent baldness, stimulate the scalp and hair roots, stop falling hair and grow new hair, that we personally give our positive guarantee to refund every penny paid us for Rexall "93" Hair Tonic in every instance where it does not do as we claim or fails to give entire satisfaction to the user

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is as pleasant to use as clear spring water. It is perfumed with a pleasant oder, and does not grease or gum the hair We have it in two sizes, prices 50 cents and $1 00 We urge you to try Rexall "93" Hair Tonic on our recommendation and with our guarantee back of it. You certainly take no risk Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Butler only at our store,—The Rexall Store Geo. W. Geddes

Everybody knows that doctors give less medicine than they used to. Nevertheless, it is a little surprising to learn that the cost of medicine per patient in the Massachusetts General Hospital is less than one-third what it was fifteen years ago, although the price of most drugs has risen in that time.

The "biggest" comes along with increasing frequency, especially in the engines of war. The largest and most powerful gun ever made for the United States navy was tested the other day. It is fifty-three feet long, has a fourteen-inch bore, and weighs sixty-three tons. Each discharge costs $500, and its shell, which weighs fourteen hundred pounds, is expected to pierce battle-ship armor eleven inches thick at a distance of fourteen miles.

Scenery is a crop the value of which to the acre no one has yet figured out. Considering the ease with which the crop is harvested, the return is tremendously high. The value of the summer resort business of New England has lately been given as between fifty and sixty million dollars a year, which is much greater than the annual output of all the silver mines in the country. It is evident that "scenery" does "pay." The trouble is that not every soil can produce it, not even with irrigation.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt has decided to drive his coach between London and Brighton again during the coming season. "I intend to drive myself," Mr. Vanderbilt explains, "except Saturdays and Mondays, when my friend Vanderhorst Koch will be the whip. We earnestly hope Vanderbilt Koch will prove an efficient whip. It would be distressing if Mr. Vanderbilt were compelled to do the driving every day and thus be robbed of the week-end rest that gentleman coach-driving seems to make so necessary.

For generations America has been busily seizing upon the opportunities provided it by nature to increase its wealth. Nature has been free-handed, and so has man. Extravagance has become the characteristic of the age. But there are clear signs that a change must come. Economy is necessary. The Harvard professor who says that our trouble with food prices is not so much that of "the high cost of living" as "the cost of high living" speaks the truth. His proposed diet of mush, cocoa and a few other cheap and wholesome foods may not be very attractive as a permanent thing, but even a limited use of it would mean great saving. The lecturer who talked at the University of Wisconsin on "The Grocery Bill, and How to Keep It Down" was in touch with the spirit of the future. Economy is needed in the preparation of foods as well as in their selection. In the last two or three years the fireless cooker has come into slight use, and this is in a way surprising, considering the hard fate which befell Edward Atkinson's Aladdin oven when he introduced it with high hopes for the economies which would result from it. In steam-heated flats people can cook many kinds of food by merely placing them on the radiators, but most people scorn the economy. All that must be changed. Economy in consumption is bound to proceed as the reverse side of that economy in the productive use of our farming resources which James J. Hill so persistently and so wisely advocates.

"Speaking of the severe floods in France, Germany and Switzerland," said the amateur scientist, "I can tell you the reason for their occurrence. It is the succession of terrible earthquake shocks, beginning several years ago with Mont Pelee in the West Indies, and including the destructive quakes of San Francisco and Italy. These explosions throw up clouds of dust which reach into the upper stratum of the atmosphere, the fine particles remaining up for years. These particles cause congelation of moisture and induce heavy rains, which are liable to fall upon any portion of the earth's surface." This theory is perhaps as good as another. It is certain that rains and snows have fallen in unusually liberal quantities in many parts of the world in the past five or six years. Severe floods have occurred in widely separated localities and at widely varying intervals. It will be found that in our own country the banks of lakes and river courses have run unusually full. The stage of water has averaged higher. It will be remembered that some ten years ago drouth conditions were prevalent and wide-spread. The change is on the whole beneficial, although considerable damage has been done by floods. But the beneficent effect of abundance of moisture on crops has more than compensated. Perhaps this is an answer to the question, Why are earthquakes? The ways of nature are mysterious and past finding out. When conditions recede from the normal, as in the case of long-continued drouth, she has to do something violent to restore the equilibrium. And in the perturbations somebody is bound to get hurt. The same is true in all intellectual and moral and political movements. It seems to be a law of the universe that no progress can be obtained without some disturbance and more or less suffering. The human race is obliged to pay a certain price for whatever good it gets. Agitation, whether in the material or spiritual world, is symptomatic of progress, and if we would enjoy its benefits we must manfully endure its hard knocks.

DANGEROUS THINGS TO HANDLE.

Articles of Daily Use Which May Be a Peril to Human Life.

Thousands of people are handling certain articles daily without any idea of their dangerous nature.

The ordinary soda water siphon, for instance, is a bomb, and an exceedingly powerful one to boot, charged, as it frequently is, up to a pressure of between 130 and 160 pounds.

A child who dropped one of these dangerous contrivances in the street the other day was almost as shockingly mangled by the resultant explosion as was M. von Plehve, the assassinated Russian Minister of the Interior, by the dynamite bomb thrown by the Anarchist Porzonef.

The large celluloid combs, again, which ladies are so fond nowadays of wearing in their hair, will, if accidentally brought into contact with a naked light, burst into flame of explosive violence.

Nor is this to be greatly wondered at, seeing that one of the ingredients to celluloid is guncotton, while another is camphor, than which is no more inflammable substance known to chemists.

Iodide of nitrogen, for instance, which is frequently prescribed in combination with other drugs, is a highly explosive chemical, and accidents have happened over and over again through its incautious handling by persons ignorant of its dangerous properties.

Ticture of iron and diluted aqua regia, again, a mixture often prescribed as a tonic, gives off an explosive gas which has been known to shatter the strongest vessels.

Chloride of potash lozenges are highly dangerous if accidentally brought into contact with an unlighted phosphorus match. Chloral hydrate and sal volatile, the favorite nerve tonic, become, under certain conditions, as deadly as dynamite.

The spontaneous explosive combustion of a box of oxide of silver pills has ere now caused fatal injury to their unfortunate possessor. Bicarbonate of potash, a common remedy for flatulence, will cause a dangerous explosion if accidentally mixed with subnitrate of bismuth.

Ordinary spirits of wine is a substance possessing tremendous perils. A pint of it if suddenly ignited will produce the very same destructive effects as three or four pounds' weight of gunpowder. This has been proved on many different occasions.

Once at the Royal Surrey County Hospital a clergyman rashly threw a small quantity on to a "snapdragon" dish, around which a number of choir boys were gathered. The resultant explosion killed one unfortunate lad and severely injured several others.—Pearson's Weekly.

American Women.

A favorite fling of the French at the English has always been that the latter are a nation of shopkeepers. An Englishwoman has called Americans "a nation of housekeepers." During a visit to this country she was struck by the fact that so many American women of means and refinement either "do their own work" or actively superintend the domestic arrangements, taking a pride in this duty.

Our friend was surprised to learn that "an American woman will spend the forenoon in cooking or dusting or cleaning, then dress herself like a duchess and sally forth to the meeting of a fashionable club where she is to read a learned paper, like as not, or else call a carriage and make a round of social calls. And her standing does not seem to be impaired in the least by the fact that during part of the day she has done the work of a menial nor has it affected her own personal attractiveness."

No other woman has done so much as the American to emphasize the dignity of labor.—Housekeeper.

If a farmer hasn't anything else to kick about, he buys a gold brick.

PAPERS BY THE PEOPLE

THE APPEAL OF POLITICS TO WOMAN.

By Rosamond Lee Sutherland.

It is just possible that if political equality had been ours from the beginning of this country, without the long and bitter struggle for it, we might have prized it less keenly. So all the more for the effort, when it comes—and it is so right that it must come—suffrage will be held a dearer privilege and more sacred possession by the women of America than it ever has been, or ever can be by the men, born to the purple. It is because the women of America are loyal and patriotic citizens; because they know the necessity of having good men in office; because they want good schools and the children protected from every evil that they may become good citizens in the future; because they believe that they can do infinitely more toward attaining these things if they stand on the same plane with their husbands and brothers, with reasonable human beings and given the ballot.

No one claims that all women are thoroughly conscientious or that their judgment would never be at fault. Neither do I think that all women would be benefited by the privilege of the ballot. I do not think that all men vote honestly or that all men should have a vote. Yet they do have it, to the exclusion of women; a great majority of whom are thoroughly worthy and capable.—North American Review.

HUNTING IN ITS VARIOUS PHASES.

By Hugo Krause.

One of the greatest fallacies of the day is that we must hunt for large opportunities alone while countless smaller chances for doing good are constantly passed by unnoticed. A large city like Chicago offers an unsurpassed hunting ground for philanthropic people, both rich and poor. If the man of means who annually betakes himself to hunting game in neighboring states could but realize the ruthless suffering he inflicts in order to satisfy a savage instinct inherited from past ages, and if he could further realize how this same hunting instinct with its expenditure of time and money could be directed into channels of comfort and pleasure to his less fortunate associates and with a thousandfold greater satisfaction to himself, how glad he would be to make the change and how much better off the world would be.

Come with us almost any day and join the hunt for wretched, worn out, limping, sore and suffering horses that may be seen on the city streets, especially in the poorer quarters; do something to alleviate the overworked, overdriven, and cruelly treated beasts of burden, and you will have the satisfaction of having done one of the most unselfish pieces of benevolence for which you will not receive any thanks, but which will make you feel far better than if you had hunted wild animals for sport. Get the habit of opening your eyes and ears to the many irregularities and wrongdoings of those who hunt for riches alone, and learn to report violations of the law made in defense of the helpless. Do not be a case of arrested development, but help establish the fashion of hunting for truth, righteousness and justice.

REINCARNATION AND ITS NECESSITY.

By Annie Besant.

There are but three explanations of human inequalities, whether of faculties, of opportunities, of circumstances: I. Special creation by God, implying that man is helpless, his destiny being controlled by an arbitrary and incalculable will. II. Heredity, as suggested by science, implying an equal helplessness on man's part, he being the result of a past over which he had no control. III. Reincarnation, implying that man can become master of his destiny, he being the result of his own individual past, being what he has made himself.

The savage of to-day is the saint of the future; all tread a similar road; all are destined to ultimate human perfection. Pain follows on mistakes and is ever remedial; strength is developed by struggle; we reap after every sowing the inevitable result; happiness growing out of the right, sorrow out of the wrong. The babe dying shortly after birth pays in the death a debt owing from the past, and returns swiftly to earth, delayed but for brief space and free of his debt to gather the experience necessary for his growth. Social virtues, though placing a man at a disadvantage in the struggle for existence, perhaps even leading to the sacrifice of his physical life, build a noble character for his future lives and shapes him to become a servant of the nation.

In every case the individual past explains the individual present, and when the laws of growth are known and obeyed a man can build with a sure hand his future destiny, shaping his growth on lines of ever increasing beauty until he reaches the stature of the perfect man.

IS WOMAN FITTED TO RULE?

By Charlotte Perkins Gilman.

Some of us talk and think a lot of the sufferings of the woman through the historic period. Suppose we have suffered some; we came through, didn't we? We aren't exterminated yet. If it hadn't been for the good of the race that we should have adopted a subordinate place in the civilized world, it would never have happened.

We are behind man in civilization. We are dependent creatures, because we have to depend on others. If society will profit by our effort to attain man's level in these matters, it is our duty to strive towards that end. If the time is not yet here, we serve the race best by staying where we are.

NOTES OF FOREIGN LANDS.

Furnished in Consular Reports and Gathered from Other Sources.

A limited stock company has been formed in Berlin by leading German industrial concerns for the manufacture of flying machines of the Wright system. Wilbur and Orville Wright have conveyed all the rights for Germany to the new company. The General Electric Company of Berlin and New York is interested.

Schools are being established in every part of the Chinese Empire and are being put in charge of educated Chinese who have studied in Japan, Europe and the United States, says consular report No. 3636. Popular education is a strong feature of the new movement in China for the general betterment of the country and its people, all tending toward a limited monarchy in place of the centuries old autocracy.

The new dealer's annual license tax of $81.10 imposed at Aden may injure the sale of American kerosene in that busy city, and force the natives to resume the use of candles. Next to cotton goods, kerosene has for years been the leading American export to Aden after driving Russian and Sumatran oil out of the market.

One hundred thousand dollars is to be spent for improvements in the service of the fire brigade in the city of Sao Paulo, Brazil.

In the effort to reorganize the rubber factories of Scotland on American lines American experts are being put in charge of the principal departments of manufacture. The salaries are much higher than the British standard. The industry turns out about 6,000,000 worth of rubber goods yearly. American competition abroad is forcing the change, says our consul at Edinburgh.

Liberia, West Africa, is energetically calling for American goods even among the 2,500,000 aboriginal population.

China buys $2,000,000 worth of foreign-made printing paper every year. The American share is insignificant. Why? See consular report No. 3635.

The Euphrates river will probably be bridged at the three points where the crossing is now done by ferries. The first bridge will be constructed next spring.

Mining concessions are being snapped up in Turkey. The new governor of Adana is favorably disposed to concessionaries.

ANCIENT COPPER MINE.

Deposits Found by Phoenicians Near Gibraltar 3,000 Years Ago.

The most ancient copper mine in the world is the Rio Tinto, in Spain. Three thousand years ago the Phoenicians found just beyond Gibraltar extensive deposits of copper ore, says the New York Times. Copper was one of the most desired metals of those days, and the Phoenicians, skillful artificers, set to extracting it. When their sea trade was usurped by Carthaginians several centuries later ore from the mine was carried to the various ancient trading ports. When Carthage fell, the Romans took possession and worked the Rio Tinto for centuries. Then came Goths, and later Moors, digging more gold out of the Iberian mountain side.

When Ferdinand and Isabella drove the Moors out of Spain the crown took possession of the Rio Tinto mine and leased it from time to time to adventurers from various countries of Europe; in the seventeenth century it was leased to a Swede and later to a Frenchman; in the eighteenth century to a company of Englishmen. During the French invasion the mine was abandoned to be reopened by the crown about 100 years ago. In 1873 English bankers offered a good round price, and the Spanish government turned the property over to them; a public company was formed and the shares offered investors. The yearly output was enormously increased, and since the English took possession some $30,000,000 worth of copper has been mined. In 1906 and 1907 dividends of $10,000,000 were declared, the largest ever paid by any copper mine in the world. The steam shovel has added generations to the life of Rio Tinto.

As the property has been entered deeper and deeper the ore has become poorer—rich ores were all extracted years ago. Six years since, when the owners were puzzling over mining the low-grade ore at a profit, along came an American with an idea. A few steam shovels, he showed, would do the work of thousands of Spanish miners, and even though the miners were paid only 6 cents a day steam shovels would save much money. The English timidly sent to the states for two shovels; now American shovels are grunting and snorting all over Rio Tinto, within sight of the old slag piles of the Romans, Carthaginians and Phoenicians.

The Peculiar Snail.

The common snail has lungs, heart and a general circulation, and is in every respect an air breathing creature. This notwithstanding, he can live on indefinitely without inhaling the least atom of air, that which is usually considered the essential to existence in all creatures supplied with lungs.

Leppert says: "To all organized creatures the removal of oxygen, water, nourishment and heat causes death to ensue." When that statement was made he did not appear to consider the snail as one among the great host of "organized beings," for the experiments made by Prof. Spallanzani prove that any or all the usual life conditions can be removed in its case without terminating its existence or in any way impairing its functions.

It is a fact well known that the common land snail retreats into his shell on the approach of frosty weather in the fall and that the opening or mouth of the shell is hermetically sealed by a secretion which is of a silky texture and absolutely impervious to air and water. In this condition it is plain that he is deprived of three out of four elements of life mentioned by Leppert—viz., air, water and nourishment.

A Russian Scare in Australia.

"Russian scares" were at one time common in Sydney and Melbourne. Once, when Australia was not yet connected with the Old World by telegraph, a mail steamer from London beat the record in smart passage, and to signalize the event she fired off all her guns as she advanced up the harbor of Melbourne. But the Melbourne authorities misconstrued this demonstration and, feeling sure that the Russians were really coming at last, promptly mobilized all their military and naval resources before they discovered their mistake.

A good many people who believe they are indignantly protesting against sin are really gossiping.

The city is always in the situation of a poor man with very extravagant tastes.

"Vy don't you reduce der price on does all-vool suits?" "Vat! Vos you crazy? Vid cotton so high?"—Puck.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

Standpatters in a Corner.

The unanimous vote of the Ways and Means Committee of the House on Monday to undertake an investigation of the high and increasing cost of living is a confession on the part of Republican members of the committee that popular clamor against artificially high prices, including those produced by the Aldrich tariff, has become too loud and too widespread to be neglected.

It is presumed that the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee will do all that they can to find other causes than the tariff for prices that are making it hard for families of moderate means to make buckle and tongue meet. They will find other and contributing causes, but unless they are willing to confess imbecility they cannot deny that the Aldrich tariff does compel the American consumer to pay more for the manufactured merchandise he buys than he would pay if the rates of tariff taxation were lower.

Every member of the committee knows that the Aldrich tariff was passed for the very purpose of raising the prices of manufactured goods. Behind the Republican principle of protection is the avowed purpose of shutting out the American consumer from markets in which he might buy cheap in order to make him pay dear in the monopolized American market.

And now, when the country is rising in revolt against the imposition, the Republicans will try to prove that the Aldrich tariff doesn't do the thing it was planned with diabolical ingenuity to do. Champ Clark and other members of the Ways and Means stand on firm ground in their determination that the investigation shall be "for blood" and that they will go to "the very bottom to get the very truth."

The price of potatoes by the peck or of pork by the pound may be wholly uninfluenced by the tariff just now, though when the potato crop is short in this country the tariff boosts the price, as it did a year or two ago. But Champ Clark and his associates ought to make it tolerably plain that the tariff does rob the American consumer of the little money he has left, after paying high prices for the food he lives on.—St. Louis Republic.

Free for the Monopolists.

In face of complaints against the high rates of the Aldrich tariff, the Bureau of Statistics in Secretary Nagel's Department of Commerce and Labor issues a flamboyant statement showing, historicaly and statisticaliy, that since the Aldrich tariff went into effect the percentage of importations coming in free of duty is larger than under any previous tariff except one.

Accepting the statistician's statement that 51 per cent of the importations since early in August have come in free, we search in vain for any article of general use made in this country, on which the consumer escapes the tax. The articles admitted free are mainly raw materials which are worked up into highly protected finished products before the consumer gets a chance at them.

Raw hides and skins are on the free list, but shoes and all other manufactures of leather still demand their tribute of the consumer. Undressed furs pay no custom house taxes, but furs ready to wear pay the tax, and it comes out of the consumer's pocket. India rubber is free, but there is no leak in the tax on rubber shoes. Block tin has free entry to be used in coating American terne plates, but the coated plates are excluded by the tariff, and the importers of the block tin make the American housewife pay dear for the domestic utensils into which it is converted.

Raw silk is imported in large quantities by the protected silk manufacturers of New Jersey and they pay no custom house tax on it; but every woman who goes a-shopping finds that the kind of silk she wants is far removed from the free list.

And so it goes. The monopoly interests insist that everything they need in their industries shall be untaxed, while the consumer must pay tribute on everything they make for sale out of the untaxed material. What is more, the monopoly tariff people got in the Aldrich tariff nearly everything they wanted that Dingley hadn't already given them. The Bureau of Statistics makes a beautiful showing for the tariff barons.

Cut the Session Short.

That Congress is not in a mood to enact legislation of value to the American people becomes daily more apparent. Members are anxious to get home to their districts and fix up their political fences. Their interest in legislation is painfully apathetic.

The time of the House is taken up in routine work. It is evident that no purpose can be served by prolonging the session.

Postal savings banks, the Sherman law amendments, and the central bank scheme and other Taft measures are very much in embryo. The public is dubious about the necessity of such legislation. Congressmen are frankly afraid to declare themselves for fear of endangering their re-election.

The Ballinger investigation and the boomerang effect of the Aldrich-Taft tariff haunt Republican regulars, whose dreams are nightmares of trouble. The sense of impending doom unfits them for legislative work.

The session can not produce anything of public value. Every day it continues entails a heavy money outlay. Congress can earn the gratitude of the great American taxpayer, already overburdened with administration extravagance, by adjourning until December.—Chicago Journal.

The S. O. S. Signal from Ohio.

President Taft must have received signals of desperate danger and heard loud cries for help from the Republican party in his own State before he consented to let Mr. Wade H. Ellis turn aside from the prosecution of the so-called Beef Trust and resign his place in the Department of Justice in order to accept the chairmanship of the Republican Executive Committee in Ohio.

During the outburst of resentment against the high prices of meat that prosecution gave promise of being one of the most popular moves the administration could make. The emergency in Ohio must be great when the man most familiar with the details of the prosecution drops its management to take up the task of mending Republican fences. Though it is announced that Mr. Ellis will not wholly sever his connection with the case, the arduous duties he has undertaken will not permit him to give it much attention.

In trying to harmonize the irreconcilable factions in Ohio, Mr. Ellis will have his hands more than full. Though Senator Foraker has shaken hands with the President, the irritation caused by the feud of two years ago between his followers and those of the President is still unallayed, and the Brownsville incident is not wholly forgotten. The Ohio Republicans who voted for Taft on his promise of tariff revision downwards in 1908 are not in line with those who approve his declaration that the Aldrich tariff is the best ever.

Republican candidates in Ohio this year will need the united Republican vote. They cannot win without it. The Democracy of the State, solidly united under the leadership of Gov. Harmon, is going into the campaign hopefully for an aggressive fight. If Mr. Ellis can win against them he ought to be the Republican candidate for President next time.—St. Louis Republic.

Graft in Ohio and Elsewhere.

Gov. Harmon's investigation into graft under Republican administration of the State of Ohio becomes daily more interesting. Already suits have been started to recover hundreds of thousands of dollars wrongfully pocketed by former State officials. Graft is apparent at every turn.

The Republican leader in the New York State Senate is under investigation, charged with accepting bribes. Gov. Shafroth is bringing to light unpleasant facts about public institutions under the recent Republican administration of Colorado. Republican grafters are on trial for thefts in the State capitol scandal in Pennsylvania. Illinois is the scene of the most stupendous Republican graft game in any State, the scandalous waterway plot.

At Washington we have the sugar scandal, involving, according to the New York Sun, the theft of $30,000,000, for which no one has yet been punished. No one denies repeated charges of huge graft in navy matters. A member of the Taft cabinet is defending himself by counsel against serious charges. Behind and over all looms the shadow of the Panama canal mystery.

The only hope of getting truth is by the election of a Democratic Congress. A Democratic Congress is the one thing Republican grand dukes fear. That is why there is consternation among party leaders at Washington.—Chicago Journal.

The Revision of Congress.

The Republican majority in the Congress now in session had a full year to digest the Republican national platform, with its clear-cut promise to lower the cost to consumers of the necessaries of life. Last year this Congress went into session with a clear tariff reduction mandate from the people, and a concurrent pledge from the ruling party.

The result was the Aldrich-Taft law which, measured by the standard of the 1908 Republican platform, is no tariff revision at all. The chief beneficiaries are still the trusts—not the people who buy and produce.

Therefore, the supporters of real tariff revision must revise Congress. The fires of indignation are burning briskly under standpatters. The West is aflame with real tariff reform sentiment.

Revision of Congress means getting a majority that will execute the people's will. It means forgetting hide-bound party alignments long enough to elect a congressional majority directly pledged to "downward" tariff revision.

The [illegible] not frightened by "senatorial dignity," or the sacred rules of a "stand-pat" house. It has found Congress out. It knows now who are its real masters—Aldrich, Payne, et al.

That is why, from coast to coast, the coming congressional campaign will be fought without much regard to party lines.

No Government Money-Lending.

The postal savings bank plan would permit the government to loan deposits on such securities as State laws now specify for savings bank investments. This means, in some States, mortgages and any ordinary two-name paper.

Imagine the political influence growing out of such power to loan money to friends and supporters, and picture the future of the United States with such a means of perpetual control of office in the hands of Aldrich.

Valuable Old Documents.

The chance discovery of a secret drawer in an old writing desk which has been in the family of Charles Beckel of Bethlehem, Pa., for generations as a treasured heirloom, revealed that the drawer contained an interesting and valuable collection of historical letters and documents. The papers, a score or more, are war department letters, letters of General Anthony Wayne and others, and proclamations that date back to the revolutionary war and early days of the Federal Government. Prof. Allison of the historical department of Carnegie Institute states that taken together the letters form a valuable source of first hand information of an important period in the nation's history.

Waistcoats for Dogs.

Fancy cold weather waistcoats for pet dogs, made by experienced tailors, is the announcement that meets the eye in a London West End shop. These waistcoats are made in all the latest colors and of the finest materials. They are braided and beautifully finished, and must take hours to manufacture. Charms in the shape of mirrors, tiny brushes with the dog's monogram on the back, and silver beads are other novelties advertised for dog wear.

The Wand of Sleep OR The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)

"Perhaps I may settle affairs sooner than you thing," said Aylmer. "Uncle Jen, I won't be back to dinner to-night, as I have to go into Deanminster."

"What about?"

"Business connected with the devil-stick and Isabella."

"H'm! You are pleased to be mysterious. Why not tell me your business?"

"Because I may fail," said Maurice. "Here, Uncle Jen, don't be cross; I'll tell you about it to-morrow, and then you will see and approve of my silence to-night."

"Well," said Jen, with a shrug, "you are old enough to guide your own actions. But I must say that I don't like to be shut out of the confidence of my two boys in this way."

"You'll know everything to-morrow."

"About David also?"

"Perhaps I can even promise you that!" said Maurice, with a smile.

"What!" cried Jen, "do you know why David has gone to town?"

"Not for certain; but I can guess. Now, Uncle Jen, I shan't answer another question just now, as I must go into Deanminster."

It was useless to ask further questions, as Jen saw that the young man was getting irritated; so, in no very pleasant temper himself, the Major went up to his dressing-room. He was of a peace-loving and easygoing nature, fond of quietness, so it annoyed him not a little that all this disturbance should take place on account of a woman.

David and Maurice both being absent, Major Jen was compelled to dine alone. This he disliked doing, so hurrying over his dinner with all speed, he betook himself to the smoking room with a book. Here he chose a comfortable chair near the open window, and attempted to read; but the somnolent influence of the evening was upon him, and before long the good Major was sound asleep.

Outside a warm wind was blowing, and the air was filled with the perfume of flowers. In the darkly blue sky hardly a cloud could be seen, and the moon, just showing her orb above the tree tops, flooded the still loveliness of the night with wave after wave of cold light. All was full of charm, spellbound as it were by the magic of moonlight, when suddenly a long, wild cry struck shudderingly through the silence.

Accustomed as an old campaigner to sleep lightly, Major Jen was on his feet in an instant, and again heard that terrible shriek. It seemed to come from the direction of the high-road, and thinking that some evil was being done, Jen, without loss of time, raced across the lawn and into the avenue. In a few minutes he arrived at the gate, and stepped out into the white and dusty road; a black mass was lying some distance down, and towards this ran Jen with an undefinable sense of evil clutching at his heartstrings. The black mass proved to be the body of a man; cold and still. Jen turned the corpse over and recoiled. The dead man was Maurice Aylmer.

CHAPTER IX.

While the Major, hardly able to credit his own eyes, was staring at the dead body of his dear lad, Jaggard, attracted also by the strange cry, came running up.

"What is it, sir?" he asked, saluting Jen even in that moment of anxiety. "I heard an awful cry, sir, and came after you."

Jen pointed to the corpse, but said nothing. Jaggard, ignorant of the truth, bent down to place a hand on the dead man's heart. Then he saw and recognized the face.

"My Maurice! What does it mean?" he cried, aghast with sudden horror.

"It means murder, Jaggard!" replied Jen, in a hollow voice which he hardly recognized as his own. "Mr. Maurice went to Deanminster before dinner, and now—" the Major pointed again to the remains.

"Murder!" echoed Jaggard, his ruddy face going pale. "And who, sir—"

"I don't know—I can't say!" interrupted his master, impatiently. "Go and get the men to bring down a stretcher for the body, and send the groom for Dr. Etwald."

"Ain't it too late, sir?"

"Do as I tell you," said Jen, so fiercely that Jaggard did not dare to disobey, but ran off, leaving the Major alone with his dead.

The road which ran past "Ashantee" towards The Wigwam was lonely even in the daytime, and at this hour of the night it was quite deserted. Not a person was in sight, although the Major could see up and down the road for a considerable distance, owing to the bright moonlight. He raised Maurice in his arms, and placed the body on the soft grass by the wayside.

In the bright moonlight he carefully examined the body, but could find no trace of any wound until he came to the right hand. Here, in the palm, he saw a ragged rent clotted with blood, but it was a mere scratch not likely to have caused death, unless poison were—— Here Major Jen rose to his feet with a new and terrible idea in his brain.

"The devil-stick!" he said, aloud.

Again he bent down and examined the face and hands. Both were swollen and discolored; he tore open the shirt at the neck, and saw that the young man's breast was all distended and bloated. Undoubtedly the cause of death was blood-poisoning, and the devil-stick had been the instrument used to effect the deed. But here the problem proposed itself: Who had killed Maurice? The person who had stolen the devil-stick! Who had stolen the devil-stick? The person who—Major Jen came to an abrupt pause. He could think, for a moment, of no answer to that question; but it is only fair to say that, dazed by the terrible occurrence of his dear lad's death, Jen had not his wits about him.

While he was still considering the affair in a confused manner Jaggard reappeared with the men from "Ashantee" carrying a stretcher. While they placed the body of Maurice thereon, the groom bound for Deanminster passed them driving the dog-cart, and Major Jen stopped the man to tell him that at all risks he was to bring back Dr. Etwald with him. Jaggard wondered at this, for Maurice—poor lad—was beyond all earthly aid—but Jen was thinking of a certain person who might have committed the crime, and he wished for the aid of Dr. Etwald to capture that person. In the meantime the necessities of the case called for the immediate removal of the body to "Ashantee." It was a melancholy procession which bore the body up to the house, and behind came Major Jen bowed to the ground with sorrow.

In due time Etwald arrived, for the groom had been fortunate enough to find him at home. On hearing of the affair he expressed the deepest concern, and, putting all other business on one side, he came back to "Ashantee" in the dog-cart. Before seeing Jen, he went up to Aylmer's room and examined the body of the unfortunate young man. Having satisfied himself so far as he was able he came down to the library, where Jen awaited him.

"Well, Etwald," cried the Major, when he saw the tall form of the doctor at the door, "have you seen him?"

"I have seen it," corrected Etwald, with professional calmness, "the poor fellow is dead, Major—dead from blood-poisoning."

"I knew it; I guessed it—the devil-stick."

"That may be," rejoined Etwald, taking a seat, "but I cannot be sure. You see neither you nor I know anything of the poison which was in the handle of that African instrument. It——"

"But what are you talking of?" broke in Jen, impetuously. "You say that my poor boy died from blood-poisoning. How else could he have come by that, save through being touched or struck with the devil-stick? No one in the neighborhood was likely to possess any weapon likely to corrupt the blood. If Maurice had been stabbed, or shot, I could understand the crime; but as it is, the person who stole the devil-stick must have killed him."

"And who stole the devil-stick?" asked Etwald, coolly. "If I forget not, Major, you asked me the other day if I did. I was no friend of the dead man; I did not like him, nor he me. We both loved the same woman—we were rivals. What then so easy as for you to say—for a jury to believe—that I had stolen the devil-stick and killed Mr. Aylmer, so as to get him out of the way."

"I never thought of such a thing," protested Jen. "I do not suspect you."

"Then whom do you suspect?" asked Etwald, fixing his dark eyes on the Major.

"Dido—the negress of Mrs. Dallas!"

"That is ridiculous. The commission of a crime presupposes a motive. Now what motive had Dido to kill your friend?"

"She hated Maurice, and she did not want him to marry Miss Dallas."

"Neither did I, if I remember rightly," said Etwald, dryly. By the way, I suppose you will have a detective to sift the affair to the bottom? Mr. Sarby is in the city. Why not wire him?"

"If I thought that—— But," added Jen, breaking off, "how do you know where David is?"

"Oh!" rejoined Etwald, quietly, "Mr. Aylmer told me so tonight."

"No-night!" echoed Jen, starting up. "You saw Maurice to-night!"

"Certainly. About an hour and a half before he was murdered. At my house," replied the doctor, with great deliberation.

"So it was you whom he went to see on business to-night?"

"I don't know if you call it business. I asked Mr. Aylmer to call and see me, and sent the message by that tramp named Battersea."

"I remember his coming. Go on, please."

"Mr. Aylmer called, as I said," continued Etwald. "And then I told him that Miss Dallas was ill from being prevented by her mother from seeing him. That I was sorry for the poor young lady, and that I gave up my position as a rival. In fact," added the doctor, "I advised Mr. Aylmer to see Miss Dallas and marry her as soon as he could."

"But why did you wish to act in this generous manner?"

"For the very simple reason that Miss Dallas is of a delicate and nervous constitution," said Etwald. "If she does not marry Mr. Aylmer, with whom she is in love, she may die. I quite forget that I should speak in the past tense now, Major. Mr. Aylmer is dead, and Miss Dallas may pine away of grief. It was to prevent such a catastrophe from occurring that I surrendered my claim to her hand."

"Very generous of you indeed," said Jen, ironically; "but I do not see why you should behave in such a noble manner when you were so much in love with the girl."

"It is for that reason that I changed my mind. As you know, I have been attending upon Mrs. Dallas this week, and I saw plainly enough that my case was hopeless; that the girl was dying to marry Aylmer. Besides," added Etwald, carelessly, "the mother was not on my side."

"She wants Isabella to marry David."

"So I hear; and he is in town, as Mr. Aylmer told me to-night. But what are you going to do about the matter, Major?"

"Give notice to the police."

"There will be a post-mortem, of course," said Etwald, carelessly.

"No, no! I hope not," cried Jen, horrified at the idea.

"But there must be," insisted Etwald, cruelly. "Aylmer died of poison, and it must be proved that such was the case. Then we may learn if he perished from the poison of the devil-stick. Afterwards you must get a detective to search for the person who stole it from your smoking-room. Once he or she is found, and the assassin of your poor friend will be in custody."

"'He or she,'" repeated Jen, slowly. "Dido I mentioned; but 'he!' who is 'he'?"

"Ah, that is what we wish to find out," said the doctor, gravely. "But how do I know? Battersea may be the thief."

"The thief and the murderer!"

"Well, no, Major. On second thoughts I do not think it is wise to couple those two words as yet. The thief may not be the murderer—but what can I say!" broke off Etwald, suddenly. "As yet we know nothing. It is late now, Major, and I must get back. Shall I give information to the police?"

"If you will be so kind," said the Major, listlessly, and he let the doctor go away without another word.

All through that long night he knelt beside the bed upon which lay the corpse of the man whom he had loved as a son. The Major was broken-hearted by the sorrow which had come upon him, and when he issued from the chamber of death he looked years older than when he entered it.

Fortunately he was not forced to sorrow alone; towards midday David arrived from town, filled with grief and surprise at the untimely end of Maurice. He found the Major in the library, and grasped him by the hand with genuine sorrow.

"My poor uncle," he said, in a low voice. "I cannot tell you what I feel. Etwald telegraphed to me the first thing in the morning, and I came down by the earliest train there was. Poor Maurice!—and we parted in anger."

"More's the pity," sighed Jen, leaning upon the shoulder of Sarby; "but you cherish no anger in your heart now?"

"Heaven forbid, sir!"

David spoke so fervidly that Jen saw plainly he meant what he said. The massive face of the young man looked worn and haggard in the searching light of the morning, and whatever enmity the love of the same woman had sown between him and the dead, it was not to be denied that he was suffering cruelly from remorse at their unhappy difference. Jen was sorry, but even in his own grief he could not forbear a stab.

"You can marry Isabella now," he said, bitterly.

"No!" said David, faintly, turning his face away. "At least, not yet."

The Major looked at him for a moment or two, then, with a new idea in his head, he took David by the hand and led him into the chamber of death.

"Swear," said he, "that you will not marry Isabella Dallas until you have discovered and punished the murderer of Maurice."

(To be continued.)

HOW TO GROW MISTLETOE.

Parasitical Plant May Be Grafted or Sown on Various Trees.

The mistletoe is a parasite; that is to say, it draws its supplies of food from the tree on which it grows, and must, therefore, weaken it to some extent; but when there is only a plant or two on a strong tree the effect cannot be very serious.

Curiously enough, though the mistletoe is traditionally associated with the oak, it is very rarely found on that tree, says the Dundee Courier. It is most common on the apple and not uncommon on the lime, the mountain ash, the hawthorn and the maple. In the north of France it is cultivated on a large scale and it is chiefly from that source that we get the immense quantities of it that generally appear in the markets shortly before Christmas.

The mistletoe is not sufficient to grow, but its progress is very slow. It may be raised from seed or grafted, or trees on which it is already established may be obtained from several firms.

When ripe berries are used, care should be taken in selecting a few seeds that these are extracted only from the best shaped white berries. These will be well matured and suitable for propagation. The seeds may be squeezed out from the berry by pressing the latter between the thumb and forefinger.

In selecting a suitable spot among the branches of a tree for the reception of the mistletoe seed it is advisable to chose a sheltered bend, and to sow the seed in an artificially made crevice. This may be made in several ways.

It may either be a plain horizontal cut in the bark or it may be triangular in shape.

The seed can then be squeezed into its place and if it be thought necessary to protect it from the depredations of birds a piece of fine wire gauze or linen can be fastened over the crevice.

A word of warning is, however, necessary. Failure may follow if an attempt be made to sow the seed at once. The seed does not become thoroughly ripe for at least two months after Christmas. It is a good plan, therefore, to select a few of the ripest seeds and to preserve them in a cool place until the proper time for sowing arrives.

The mistletoe owes its Latin and botanical name, viscum, to the strength or holding power of its glutinous juice, and when the juice hardens, as the result of exposure to the air, the seeds are firmly attached to the branch. They germinate during the following year, but, as previously stated, development is slow.

Some time may be saved by grafting. A small sprig is trimmed at the base, as in whip grafting, and is inserted in a downward slit made in but not quite through the bark. Clay should, as usual, be used to exclude the air, and, though the sprig should be tied with sufficient firmness to prevent any movement of its base, the tie should not be so tight as to stop the circulation of sap.

"Best Dressed" Is Defined.

If I were laying down only one rule in the matter of dress I should make it this," said an authority on woman's dress, "Be inconspicuous."

"I may add that personally it is a great delight to me to purchase goods over the counter presided over by a tastefully dressed saleswoman. By that I mean one who allows her own sweetness and good looks to shine out regardless of extravagant dress accessories. Jewelry, for example, is much out of place on a working woman, or, indeed, on any woman when she goes downtown on business. It is exactly the same with the big bows and inordinate high heels and tightly laced waists. My advice is one or at least two dresses a year, well made and of good material, rather than superfluous flashiness. Of course, a girl should go to the theater and to a party occasionally. It is possible for her to be quite well dressed with another pretty separate waist, which, if she has any ingenuity, she can make valuable herself by handiwork. If she has not the skill, I think it would be far better for her to study sewing in some school for the evening and thus attain this skill.

"But let me add that the inconspicuously dressed woman is always the best dressed woman."

Men Susceptible to Voice.

Very few women realize what an effect a sweet voice has on a man. A woman may be very pretty to look upon, may be faultlessly and bewitchingly attired, and attractive in every way, and yet too often directly she opens her mouth and speaks, the spell is broken, the charm is gone. And this need never be.

Very few voices are so naturally bad that they will not succumb to training, and the voice can be trained to be just as sweet and gentle as we please to make it.

A woman should speak in a low voice. She should not allow her voice to raise itself to a high pitch. She should not shout her orders. This shouting and raising of the voice spoils tone and quality, and tends to make it harsh. A pretty voice is a powerful attraction in a woman, and she who would add to her charms a wondrous fascination should cultivate a voice "ever soft, gentle and low."

Russian Tailor-Made.

This model has the full pleated skirt so acceptable to the American woman, also the new seamless shoulder, the pleated, close-fitting coat proper with graduated peplum and straight belt of the material at the natural waistline. The material is a very dark, smothly-finished French serge, the frogs, cuffs, buttons and collar facing all of black. A Gage hat in the popular tricorne shape is shown with this suit.

Ink Stains.

Fresh ink stains may be removed by the application of sweet milk, and this is good in cases of colored fabrics which may be affected by chemicals and acids. Fresh stains should be saturated with cold water and then pressed with clean blotting paper. Repeat until no more stains can be removed and then rub it with the cut side of a lemon and sprinkle thickly with table salt.

The ink spots may be removed from white wash fabrics by soaking a few minutes and then washing in a strong solution of oxalic acid, taking care to wash out the acid thoroughly afterward. Melted tallow poured on the spot while hot and scraped off when cold will also be found to be safe and often a sure remedy.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Turbans of a military appearance are very fetching with the tailored suit.

Elaborate braiding appears on some of the coats of the dressy tailored suits.

The newest coiffure is flat in front and piled heavily over the ears. It is called the Brittany.

A brocade of a faint opal gray and pink made a lovely lining for a coat of rich black sealskin.

With the season's double-breasted coats the correct thing is to begin the buttons at the waist line.

Light yokes are much more becoming as a rule that the dark material of the gown coming next the face.

Corded ribbon is being used as a trimming on several of the daintiest of the ready-made evening gowns.

Coats of material contrasting with the skirt are a good deal seen, velvet being the most used with cloth skirts.

Black fur is by far the most attractive pelt for the trimming of the numberless green suits and gowns worn this season.

Pretty with coats and colored blouses is the deep cuff of linen with embroidery button-holed scallops and plaited lace frill.

Street costumes will be made of pongees and rajahs. The latest patterns in both goods have changeable hues the same as silks.

Seed pearls lead in the list of jewels for hair adornment. They are used in combination with fluffy tulle or on the classic bandeau.

Petticoats to wear under velvet gowns have an upper part of mousseline de soie, with a flounce and little frills of some heavier silken fabric.

First of all, silks will be worn this year, especially changeable taffetas of two tones. This is really the most important feature as yet developed relative to forthcoming materials.

Dainty Ruffle Condemned.

The dainty little ruffle that suits so well a pretty head, making it look like a flower rising from its calyx, is condemned by fashion. The wired lace or net collar now stops abruptly, and has a most unfinished look to eyes accustomed to the ruffle. But fashion must have change, even if it be for the worse.

A Singing Teapot.

It is said that the Japanese, so ingenious in making curious and fascinating devices of every kind, manufacture singing teakettles. An iron kettle, otherwise quite ordinary, has the almost lifelike characteristic of bursting into song when the water boils. The sounds, they say, are produced by steam bubbles escaping from sheets of iron fastened across the kettle near the bottom. Skill is required, not only in making them, but in regulating the fire under them. These curious kettles have been in use many years.

Don't for Hostesses.

Don't invite more than eight guests.

Don't have dishes of which your cook is ignorant.

Don't invite uncongenial people. Have some stupid and some brilliant; some who will talk and some who will listen.

Don't watch for mistakes in the service.

Don't be absent-minded when the man at your side is talking to you.

Don't give orders to the maid if it is possible not to do so.

Don't seat a husband next to his wife.

If mistakes are made, remember they are more important to you than to others.

Dressmaker.

Of course, every one likes to have a new slut each season, but four suits a year soon land one in quite a mess of half-worn clothes that are a burden and a reproach to a conscientious woman. It is often wiser and more satisfactory to remodel a last year's suit than to buy a new one.

A good material should give two or three seasons of hard service if it is handled in the right manner. It can always be cleaned, turned or dyed so that the most fastidious woman can satisfy herself as to its absolute freshness.

A new lining, new cuff and collar facings for a coat, and a general overhauling for a skirt, will put a last year's suit quite in order if one only intends using it for hard hacking and rainy days.

But if the suit must make a presentable appearance in good society one will have to go to a little more trouble. It should be recut, the sleeves made up to date and the neck opening, collar, etc., made to answer to the last word on smart tailoring.

Bridal Fancies.

Married in white, you have chosen all right.

Married in gray, you will go far away.

Married in black, you will wish yourself back.

Married in red, you will wish yourself dead.

Married in green, ashamed to be seen.

Married in blue, he will always be true.

Married in pearl, you will live in a whirl.

Married in yellow, ashamed of your fellow.

Married in brown, you will live out of town.

Married in pink, your spirits will sink.

Reciprocity.

She sewed a button on my coat,
For I was far from mother.
"'Tis such a thing," she said to me,
"As I'd do for my brother."

She looked so pretty sitting there,
I quickly stooped and kissed her.
"'Tis such a thing," I said to her,
"As I'd do to my sister!"
—Smart Set.

The Usual Thing.

When a man tips his hat to a woman his wife doesn't know she asks him more questions in the next five minutes than a child will ask on a railroad train.—Atchison Globe.

Discovered.

Women always were gentler than men. They say: "O heavens," while men say just the reverse.—Atchison Globe.

Wearing New Shoes.

To prevent shoes from blistering the heel, paste a small piece of felt or velvet in the heel; then they will not slip up and down.

MODISH DESIGNS FOR CHILDREN.

We are showing two modish designs for smartly dressed children. The frock on the left is given a military tone with its front panel and cuff trimming of narrow braid and buttons. The material is the lightest weight pale blue chiffon broadcloth, and that combined with the silver braid and buttons makes a most effective little dress. The long-waisted bodice is joined to a plaited skirt under a sash of sapphire blue satin, the latter tacked at intervals on sides and finished at back in graduated loops. Miss Dainty on the right is wearing a quaint, pretty frock of green-striped white challis, with closing on left side. The little skirt is made in tunic fashion and cut away to show a plaited front. The belt is green velvet, a few shades darker than the stripe, and matches the covered buttons and sleeve bands. The neck finish is a flat collar of baby Irish.

Facts and Figures.

Most of the wars of ancient history that the young men pore over in Latin and Greek were not very great wars after all, compared with that fought out by their grandfathers for the salvation of the American Republic and the cause of liberty.

Look over these dreadful figures, young man, and consider the awful significance of the following facts:

Official returns show that about 2,900,000 soldiers enlisted during the war in response to the successive calls of President Lincoln, and of this number 186,097 were colored troops.

Reports show that the Northern and Southern armies met in over 2,000 skirmishes and battles. In 148 of these conflicts the loss on the Federal side was over 500 men, and in at least ten battles over 10,000 men were reported lost on each side. The appended list shows that the combined losses of the Federal and Confederate forces in killed, wounded, and missing in the following engagements were:

Shiloh, 24,000; Antietam, 28,000; Stone River, 37,000; Chancellorsville, 28,000; Gettysburg, 54,000; Chickamauga, 33,000; McClellan's Peninsula campaign, 50,000; Grant's Peninsula campaign, 180,000; and Sherman's campaign, 125,000.

Official statistics show that of 3,000,000 men enlisted there were killed in battle, 44,238; died of wounds, 46,205; died of disease, 186,210; died of unknown causes, 24,184; total, 303,843. This includes only those whose death while in the army had been actually proven. To this number should be added—first, 26,000 men who are known to have died while in the hands of the enemy as prisoners of war, and many others in the same manner whose deaths are unrecorded; second, a fair percentage of the 205,794 who are put down on the official reports as deserters and missing in action, for those who participated in the war know that men frequently disappeared who, it was certain, had not deserted, yet could not otherwise be officially accounted for; third, thousands who are buried in private cemeteries all over the North, who died while at home on furlough.

The nation's dead are buried in seventy-three cemeteries, of which only twelve are in the Northern States. Among the principal ones in the North are Cypress Hill, with its 3,786 dead; Finn's Point, N. J., which contains the remains of 2,644 unknown dead; Gettysburg, Pa., with its 1,967 known and 1,608 unknown dead; Mound City, Ill., with 2,505 known and 2,721 unknown graves; Philadelphia, with 1,900 dead; and Woodlawn, Elmira, N. Y., with its 3,900 dead.

In the South, near the scenes of terrible conflicts, are located the largest depositories of the nation's heroic dead:

Arlington, Va., 16,264, of which 4,319 are unknown.

Beaufort, S. S., 9,201, of which 4,403 are unknown.

Chalmette, La., 12,911, of which 5,674 are unknown.

Chattanooga, Tenn., 12,962, of which 5,974 are unknown.

Fredericksburg, Va., 15,257, of which 2,006 are unknown.

Little Rock, Ark., 5,602, of which 2,307 are unknown.

City Point, Va., 5,122, of which 1,374 are unknown.

Marietta, Ga., 10,151, of which 2,963 are unknown.

Memphis, Tenn., 16,997, of which 8,817 are unknown.

Nashville, Tenn., 16,536, of which 4,700 are unknown.

Poplar Grove, Va., 6,190, of which 4,001 are unknown.

Richmond, Va., 6,542, of which 5,700 are unknown.

Salisbury, N. C., 12,129, of which 12,032 are unknown.

Stone River, Tenn., 5,602, of which 288 are unknown.

Vicksburg, Miss., 16,000, of which 12,704 are unknown.

Antietam, Md., 4,671, of which 1,810 are unknown.

Winchester, Va., 4,559, of which 2,365 are unknown.

In all 300,000 men who fought for the stars and stripes find guarded graves in our national cemeteries. Two cemeteries are mainly devoted to the brave men who perished in the loathsome prisons of the same name—Andersonville, Ga., which contains 13,714 graves, and Salisbury, with its 12,126 dead, of which 12,032 are unknown.

Of the vast number who are interred in our national cemeteries, 275,000 sleep beneath the soil of the Southern States, and 145,000 rest in graves marked "Unknown."

The total number of men furnished to the Federal army by the United States during the war, under all calls, was 2,688,528. The total number of colored troops in the Northern army was 123,156. The heaviest loss by disease was suffered by the colored troops. While but 2,907 died in action and of wounds, the enormously large number of 26,301 died of disease. Among the white troops the proportion of deaths in action and from wounds to the deaths from disease was about one to two; among the colored troops as one to eight. Of the colored troops enlisted one out of every seven died of disease. The proportion among the white troops was one to fifteen.

Now that we are brushing up these figures, it will be well enough to remember how many men were furnished by each State, and the following list will show:

Maine	71,745
New Hampshire	34,605
Vermont	35,256
Massachusetts	151,785
Rhode Island	24,711
Connecticut	52,270
New York	455,568
New Jersey	79,511
Pennsylvania	366,326
Delaware	13,651
Maryland	49,730
West Virginia	30,003
District of Columbia	16,872
Ohio	317,133
Indiana	190,147
Illinois	258,217
Michigan	90,119
Wisconsin	96,118
Minnesota	25,024
Iowa	75,960
Missouri	108,773
Kentucky	78,540
Kansas	20,097
Total	2,653,062

In the number of her sons sacrificed in the cause of the Union Vermont led all the other States by a heavy per cent, with the exception of Kansas.

Vermont's proportion per thousand contributed to the total of deaths in action was 58.22; that of Ohio 36.55; that of New York 35.68, Massachusetts was 47.76; Iowa, 45.44.

In the proportion per thousand of deaths from disease Iowa led with a percentage of 114.02, and Vermont followed with 91.81. Ohio's percentage was 46.82. The proportion of deaths from all causes in the troops of each State was as follows: Maine, 1 in 7; New Hampshire, 1 in 7; Vermont, 1 in 6; Massachusetts, 1 in 9; Rhode Island, 1 in 11; Connecticut, 1 in 10; New York, 1 in 12; New Jersey, 1 in 12; Pennsylvania, 1 in 12; Delaware, 1 in 20; Maryland, 1 in 26; Ohio, 1 in 26; Indiana, 1 in 8; Illinois, 1 in 7; Michigan, 1 in 6; Wisconsin, 1 in 7; Minnesota, 1 in 8; Iowa, 1 in 5 (nearly 6); Kansas, 1 in 5; California, 1 in 20; Virginia, 1 in 6; Kentucky, 1 in 19; Missouri, 1 in 9.

Again the young man must not forget as he reads of the great battles of history that few of them can compare in magnitude with the great battles of the Civil War, and that the battles of that war were the bloodiest in all the history of wars in the proportion of killed to those engaged. Waterloo was one of the most desperate and bloody fields chronicled in European history, and yet Wellington's casualties were less than 12 per cent, his losses being 2,432 killed and 9,58 wounded out of over 100,000, while at Shiloh one side lost in killed and wounded 9,740 out of 34,000, while their opponents reported their killed and wounded at 9,616, making the casualties about 30 per cent. At the great battle of Wagram, Napoleon lost but about 5 per cent. At Wurzburg the French lost but 3½ per cent, and yet the army gave up the field and retreated to the Rhine.

At Racour, Marshal Saxe lost but 3½ per cent. At Zurich, Massena lost but 8 per cent. At Lagriz, Frederick lost but 6½ per cent. At Malplaquet, Marlborough lost but 10 per cent, and at Ramillies the same intrepid commander lost but 6 per cent.

At Contras, Henry of Navarre was reported as cut to pieces, yet his loss was less than 10 per cent. At Lodi, Napoleon lost but 1½ per cent. At Valmy, Frederick William lost but 3 per cent, and at the great battles of Marengo and Austerlitz, sanguinary as they were, Napoleon lost an average of less than 14½ per cent. At Magenta and Solferino, in 1859, the average loss of both armies was less than 9 per cent. At Konigratz, in 1868, it was 6 per cent. At Worth, Specheram, Mars le Tour, Gravelotte, and Sedan, in 1870, the average loss was 12 per cent, while at Linden General Moreau lost but 4 per cent, and the Archduke John lost but 7 per cent in killed and wounded.

In addition to the vast list of dead from the war must be added those who have died from wounds received during the war. The killing is still going on about as rapidly as ever, and the men are dropping daily from "wounds received in action," who ought to live for long years yet. The figures that I have given really give but a glimpse into the sad truth of the awful mortality of the war that saved the Union. I hope the young men who read this will feel no more impatience because the sacrifices of the great war are talked about, and they will cut out the figures I have collected for them and save them for reference whenever they feel that way.—Chicago Ledger.

The First Repeating Rifle.

An Atlanta veteran was talking about his first experience with a repeating rifle.

"I was out on the picket line," he tells it, "and a lot of Yankees kept shooting at us from the shelter of a pine thicket. Finally we made a break for the thicket and then we had it. Every fellow would pick out his man and then load and shoot, taking advantage of the shelter of the trees.

"My Yankee got the first shot, and missed me. As I was only seventy-five or one hundred yards away, I thought I would reach him before he could load again, so I made a dash for him. He stepped out from his tree and aimed, but I thought he was just trying to bluff, so I didn't stop until he pulled down on me.

"'My Lord!' I thought, 'that's the first rifle I ever saw with two barrels!' I just halted, but thought the gun surely must be empty now, so I started for him again. Well, sir, he just stood there and bang! bang! bang! like milking a cow. I jumped for a tree mighty quick, I can tell you. I heard hollering behind the tree. It tickled him mightily. I didn't know what to make of it. I put my cap out from behind the tree and he banged! banged! down on it. It scared me. I didn't know how long the thing would hold out.

"Presently, though, I saw him bending over. His head was protected, but his back was showing, and I took good aim. The ball ploughed through the fleshy part of the thigh, and as he hollered I made for him. He had dropped his gun and started to run, but he stopped and went back with me.

"I carried that old gun back and it was a great curiosity to our boys. They never did believe that it could shoot sixteen times, and I couldn't prove it because he had only one load left, and we couldn't get any ammunition to fit the gun. So we broke up the gun to keep the Yankees from getting hold of it again."—Atlanta Constitution.

W. R. HOLDEN CO., Butler, Ind.

Notice to Contractors

Inviting proposals for paving, improving and maintaining Broadway street in the city of Butler, Indiana, from a point sixty feet north of the north line of Monroe street in Lingenfelter's addition to said city, south to south corporation line of said city of Butler, a total distance of forty-four hundred nineteen and one-tenth feet; also Main street in said city from the east corporation line of said city to the west curb line of West street (south) on east side of Packer's addition to said city, a distance of fifty-three hundred forty-one and seventy-six-one-hundredths feet.

Sealed proposals will be received by the common council of the city of Butler, DeKalb county, Indiana, at the office of said common council and city clerk of said city until two-thirty o'clock in the afternoon on the 5th day of April, 1910, at which time and place said bids will be publicly opened and duly considered, for the construction of the following described improvements, to wit:

Grading, curbing and paving Broadway street from a point sixty feet north of the north line of Monroe street in Lingenfelter's addition to said city, south to the south corporation line of said city of Butler, a total distance of four thousand four hundred nineteen and one-tenth feet; also Main street in said city from the east corporation line of said city to west curb line of West street (south) on east side of Packer's addition to said city a distance of fifty-three hundred forty-one and seventy-six-one hundredths feet, with vitrified brick, sheet asphalt, creosote block, bitulithic or saxite, laid on a concrete foundation, from curb line to curb line, placing the necessary marginal curbing, and curbing said roadway with cement or stone curbing, all as shown on plans and specifications on file in the office of the city clerk, in said city of Butler as authorized by Preliminary Improvement Ordinance Number Sixty-eight, passed and adopted by the common council of said city on the 10th day of February, 1910.

The cost of the street and alley intersections shall be paid from a fund created by special assessment to be levied against all of the lands and lots situated in said city, or in cash, out of the general fund of said city, if said city shall be able to do so.

It is estimated that there will be about thirty-three thousand square yards of improvement, more or less

In case the specifications permit the use of either, or any, one of two or more materials, the bidder must state specifically on which his bid is based

Samples of the paving material bid upon, properly labeled, must be deposited in the office or council room of the city council before the time the bids are received or the bids will not be considered, and materials used in the formation of the wearing surface of the pavement will be strictly held to conform to such samples and to the contract and specifications

All bids filed by those to whom contracts may be awarded, must be made upon the printed blanks provided therefor by the common council, and the price must be stated in words and figures, and in compliance with the instructions hereto attached—which blanks can be had on application to the city clerk, and must be accompanied by the usual statutory affidavit of non-collusion.

Each bidder is required to name in his proposal the following:

(a) A price for constructing catch basins complete, each.

(b) A price for constructing inlets to catch basins complete, each.

FRIEND ARTHUR—

Has it leaked out yet that Chauncey McDonald was united in marriage to Carrie E. Schott, of Edgerton, Ohio. If not let it out of the bag. Yours truly joined the nuptial knot on March 10, at the parsonage in "Bright Edon Land."

Mrs. Chas. C. Noragon and Mrs. A. F. Brindley entertained about thirty-five guests, Thursday afternoon, in honor of St Patrick's day. When all arrived, they were seated at small tables, where progressive "spinning" was indulged in. Each one was presented with a plate, whereon was placed a small top, after finding out how to run the top the fun commenced. The lady's top spinning the longest progressed. After an hour of spinning the most successful spinner received a hand painted plate. The others keeping their tops as consolation. At four o'clock a three course luncheon was served, which was very prettily carried out in the Irish way. The favors were green carnations. Mrs. Shapland and Mrs. Dieble of Kendallville were out of town guests, Mrs Wilson of Angola having sent her regrets.

The Auburn Courier last week seemed to take our hotel article as a joke, but is it a bigger joke than that $300,000 monument which the taxpayers are going to build for Auburn? This same editor thought our gas engine factory was a joke—in fact he thinks the whole city of Butler is a huge joke. The Courier itself is little short of a joke, under Lochner's management.

A. W. Madden, of Auburn, was in the city, Wednesday, calling on his many friends, and incidently boosting his candidacy for county auditor. Mr. Madden called on the HERALD and got acquainted with the editor. He informs us that he has been a lifelong democrat, and if given the nomination he will be sure to be elected. He has been in the monument business for years and during this time has had an opportunity to make the acquaintance of most of the voters over the county. He says in case that $300,000 court house is built he can give them a few pointers, and no doubt he would.

Where a given job will require, say, 15 gallons of ordinary paint, the work can often be well done with 10 gallons of Devoe; that's about the proportion usually.

The best of it is, fewer gallons make a better job of it; lasts longer, costs less first and last.

Grand Lodge Report

The report of the grand lodge, Knights of Pythias of Indiana, for the year 1909, which has just been made to the supreme lodge, Knights of Pythias, by Harry Wade, grand keeper of records and seal of the grand lodge of Indiana, shows the order to be in good condition. Under the leadership of Grand Chancellor Aria M. Brown, a large increase in membership has been made, the membership now being 63, 353; many subordinate lodges have erected building for their own occupancy and many more are in the course of construction. Seven new lodges have been instituted since October, 1909.

The assets of the order have been increased during the last year $175,000. There has been paid $200,000 for relief. The total assets of the Knights of Pythias in Indiana are now $3,070,946.73. The insurance department of the supreme lodge will be moved to Indianapolis during the latter part of the month of March, bringing assets of $3,000,000. The assets of the insurance department, combined with the assets of the order in Indiana, make a total of $6,000,000. The insurance department has paid to beneficiaries, since its organization, more than $3,000,000. The membership in that department is rapidly increasing in Indiana.

Will Hold Election.

The Steuben County Commissioners in response to a petition presented by S. P. Willibey and others have ordered an election to be held on March 29th to vote on the question of local option for Steuben county.

The following election officers were appointed to serve at election in the precincts of Otsego township:

1st. Precinct Inspector, George M. Brown; Judges, Thomas Teegardin, Elmer Vaughn; Clerks, John Zimmer, Walter Everett.

2nd Precinct Inspector, John Dargue Judges, Timothy Dirrim Artemus McClish; Clerks, Harley Griffith, Grover Brown.

To Whom It May Concern

I wish to express my sincere appreciation of the interest shown by my friends in their proffered support of my name as a prospective candidate for representative from this county, but finding it impossible to arrange my affairs at present so as to give the matter the required attention I have decided not to become a candidate.

Very Respectfully,
SAM G. STONE.

WAR STORY FROM MEMORY

(BY W. H. MCINTOSH)

In belief that my experience at the battle of Bentonville, near the Neuse river, North Carolina, would interest the readers of the DeKalb County Herald as a true version of an important historical event from the standpoint of the ranks, I have drawn on memory for the following story:

The regiment came into position at midnight strongly covering crossroads northward, blankets were spread and the men accoutered and rifles at hand lay down for brief sleep. By comparison the command was fortunate, as one regiment of the brigade was on the march all night. Early on the morning of March 19, 1865, the 22nd Wisconsin had the advance of the 2nd brigade that led the 3rd division of the 20 A. C. all of which division was in fact a great fatigue detail for the construction of a roadway for passage of the ordnance and ambulance trains.

Again and again as progress was made, halts were called, arms were stacked by the roadside, and a track war corduroyed, for otherwise wheeling was impracticable. During the forenoon the work went on unceasing for eleven miles, and all this time away forward was heard sputtering volleys of musketry and an accompanying cannonade.

Two divisions of the 14 A. C., the first and the third, were in advance and the 1st division of the 20 A. C. was in supporting distance so that the unusual resistance did not seem to concern, nor interest the troops laboriously bringing up the rear. Gen. Sherman had remained with the unencumbered four division of the left wing till yesterday when he had rode south to join the 15 A. C. in full faith that the great march was as good as consummated and the road to Goldsboro won. He was to learn his mistake and the army of Georgia was to contend against odds and adverse conditions for its very existence.

That astute soldier, Joseph E. Johnston, who had so ably opposed Sherman on the Atlanta campaign, had been called to command in North Carolina and had rapidly and secretly concentrated an army of 25,000 infantry and 5,000 cavalry near the hamlet of Bentonville on the Neuse river.

While Hampton's cavalry boldly demonstrating held the Federals at bay, Hoke, Hardee and Brogg were posting their commands in wedge formation, the vertex on the only road with flanks extended obliquely forward. Of this veritable cul-de-sac the Federals had not even a suspicion. The obvious plan was to close upon the foremost division, overwhelm and drive it back upon the others and follow up the routed forces involving all in a general defeat. It was a forlorn hope and a golden opportunity and but for unforseen mischance and gallant resistance might have struck the exposed divisions a staggering blow.

To them, the situation was critical and almost desperate. For miles the ordnance and ambulance trains were being advanced as the roadway was constructed. Every ambulance was filled with the wounded of Averysboro and in quiet patience they bore the long waits and the rough jolts as the wheels paned over the uneven corduroy. Under these untoward conditions, Carlin ordered an advance, the cavalry gave way, the trap was sprung and the surprised Federals were confronted by long lines of infantry advancing at double quick, and, meeting a heavy fire, were driven back with a loss of three guns, but those veterans were undismayed and rallying promptly resisted vigorously. Being reinforced by Morgan's division they in turn attached and repelled the enemy.

A protracted unaccountable lull occurred. It gave time for arrival of the 1st division, 20 A. C. with the corps batteries which found and occupied an admirable position. At this juncture, Gen. Slocum commanding left wing, sent back a mounted messenger with orders to Ward to bring forward the 3rd division with all dispatch. With arms in stack by the roadside we were busied at road work when the mud-bespattered horseman arrived and meeting Col. Dustin delivered to him his order and rode on to inform other brigade commanders. Col. Dustin promptly instructed Major May to march the 22nd Wisconsin to the front as fast as possible and this regiment had the good fortune to have the lead of its brigade and division to the battlefield. Arms were taken with alacrity and the march was begun with enthusiasm. The interval of four miles was covered at almost a double quick, so eager were the men to reach the scene of action, so fearful were they lest they might arrive too late to prevent or to retrieve disaster. No one spoke, no files were kept. Each hurried on by himself, his nerves tense with the fever of expectation.

Firing had ceased and there was an ominous stillness when we came out upon the clearing and were met by Slocum who rode forward and indicated the position to be held. With sweeping glance, I comprehended the situation. An extensive cleared field seemed an ideal battle ground. From the narrow plateau the slope was gently downward away forward to the edge of distant woods, but fell away more abruptly to forest northward on the left. We had met and given right-of-way to an ordnance train slowly moving back along the road to the rear and saw across the highway to the right when the 14 A. C. line began and extended southward in the woods while close at hand along the crest of the plateau a score of field pieces deployed at regular intervals, each muzzle directed eastward. Besides every gun lay a pile of ammunition, shell case and canister, and the batterymen stood in place ready for action. All limbers, caissons and horses had been withdrawn for security to the rear and only cannon and cannoneers formed the grim line.

Far away across the field I saw the gray ranks of the enemy in beautiful order emerging from the woods in a steady advance and realized the delay for preparation ended and a struggle for the mastery close at hand. As the regiment formed line, command was given to "support the guns" and moving up a halt was made in their rear, and the gunners gave us cordial welcome. Cogswell's 3rd brigade came up and was sent on a run down the slope to fill a gap in the front line. Some foragers and cavalrymen reported having seen large bodies of infantry moving upon our left and less than a mile away from the field upon which the trains were passing. The 2nd brigade was ordered to the left down the slope to guard the flank by extending the line of battle at a right angle connecting with 2nd brigade, 1st division facing east. On receiving the order the regiment moved rapidly to the new position and formed line immediately in front of heavy forest with rank undergrowth concealing a swamp through which flowed sluggishly a small stream. Beyond the infantry to our left, the 1st Michigan engineers lined up and the extreme left was held by the cavalry of Kilpatrick.

The instant ranks had dressed, arms were stacked, knapsacks were flung off and the rear rank with axes and spades applied themselves to throwing up a breastwork with incredible energy and effect. The front rank was equally active. Saplings were felled, cut in lengths and borne back to the proposed line where a trench was begun and the excavated dirt was being thrown back of the logs to form a strong parapet, and so experienced were the soldiers at their work that its progress was wonderful in its execution. Hatchets keen-edged were in use to lop the underbrush knee high to clear a firing range and to obstruct a possible charge from across the swamp. Moments were precious, suspense was intensive and hasty glances to the east and south showed the infantry in readiness and the artillerymen standing at their guns. A little later and a crash of musketry announced arrival of the enemy and opening of the struggle. An incessant fire by file punctuated by regular volleys was suddenly dominated by the thunderous roar of the batteries as they went into action with a service so rapid that the reports were without intermission.

We ceased work, took arms and lining up behind the incomplete defense, stood awaiting a probable and actually intended general attack by Hardee upon this supposedly exposed flank. The enemy had brought no artillery into action and relied entirely upon their infantry whose well sustained fire came not in our direction. But for apprehensive of a break, it was exhilarating to hear and see the artillery in action. Single and double reports were instantly followed by chance volleys and combined with the continuous musketry, it was easy to imagine a murderous effect upon the assailants. On the instant, the dire ceased. The abrupt silence was startling since it indicated repulse or retreat. Uncertainty seemed removed when a horseman came at a gallop close along our rear, shouting: "Enemy repulsed, enemy repulsed!" and we relieved our uncharged feelings with premature enthusiastic cheers.

It was more as if ground had been lost and our front line driven back when our ears were fairly stunned by a tremendous burst of musketry evidently much nearer and now the fight was joined in earnest. The crackling fire of opposing lines was hot and heavy and again the cannon joined in a soul-stirring diapason of battle. Could we have seen what was going on it would have been a relief, but while very near the ground the view was intercepted by the lay of the land and only by hearing was it possible to follow the thunderous flood and the silent ebb of each succeeding billows of attack and repulse. Encouraged by a second and longer lull, labor had been resumed upon the breastwork when a volume of firing more massive and threatening than before announced yet nearer approach and most determined assault. It was gallantly met and well sustained. As time passed and the belligerents seemed stationary, the hope was indulged that our comrades would never yield their ground A feature of their action was the absence of the accustomed rebel charging yell and the resolution shown in prompt rally and renewed effort. Again nervous tension was relaxed by that sudden sinister stillness that came as when in summer time some thunder shower with threatening approach sends forward its heavy splashing drops as prelude to the following downpour. A column of infantry came up, formed in our first position in rear and support the batteries and lay down. Squads of men ran back to limbers and caissons and quickly returned bringing ammunition which they placed in little piles beside the guns. These dispositions were scarcely made when an uproar broke out that for volume and vehemence minimized all preceding and disclosed a desperate resolution. Still observing, a beautiful and inspiring sight was presented by the field artillery, for the most part Napoleons, in astonishingly rapid action but a vogue uneasiness was created by the uninterrupted storm of musketry beating insistently upon the firm barrier in double ranks down in front.

This feverish paroxysm as usual gave place to instant and utter quiet. Close and bloody had been the onslaught, but the confident Union soldiers were not to be dislodged and the field had become thickly littered with the killed and the wounded fallen and unable to rise again. Johnston and his many lieutenant and major generals were loth to acknowledge failure and arrayed their veteran liner to essay a final supreme effort under cover of approaching night. We had improved the interval, to labor on the breastwork when the roar of massive musketry announced fierce attack and indomitable defense. Darkness gave weird beauty to the cannonade Damp air increased the resonance of discharger and darting, long, red tongues of flame illuminating bursting balls of smoke marked the location of the guns. Whatever its execution, the moral effect of artillery fire is excellent and it did seem as if the enemy could not long withstand the sleet of bullets and the hail of case and canister. There is a limit to human endurance, and it was reached. The terrific dire ceased on the instant, yet we stood waiting for a renewal that was not to be and then as before improved the respite to perfect our earthworks. We could not know that the enemy had withdrawn within his fortified lines and took no chances against a flank attack. For hours we toiled diligently upon our breastwork until satisfied of its strength, then lay down back of the trench accoutered and with arms in hand, and slept. The eight Union brigades in action had 152 killed and 827 wounded. The enemy lost 167 dead on the field, 910 wounded and 338 taken prisoners. The left wing army of Georgia had fought its last battle and won a final victory.

When Furniture Buying Time Comes

There are two words of advice that all should remember--GO SLOW.

You may safely hurry when purchasing a new pair of gloves or shoes, or any article that you will be done with in a short time.

But with furniture go slow, you are buying for life. We invite you to be deliberate--ask questions, so that you may know exactly wdat you are doing.

There's our experience to help the inexperienced, and there's a well chosen stock to do your chooing from.

Nobody who bgys furniture hgre ever regrets it. Like wine, our furniture improves with age.

There's a reason.

Something Nice for Breakfast?

Why, yes, ma'am, here is some splendid bacon.

It is wonderfully toothsome—mild, sweet, and as healthful as anything you could eat.

No, ma'am, it isn't just the same as the rest—quite a bit different.

This bacon started to be good before it was bacon. The breeding, you know, then the feeding.

Cured more carefully than most bacons, too.

Really, we don't think you will be able to find anything anywhere quite so nice for breakfast. 20c a pound, sliced.

Plymouth Rock.

Plymouth Rock has become an object of veneration in the United States because of its interesting historical associations. As is well known, it is the rock or ledge on which the pilgrims are believed to have landed when they first stepped from their boats in the harbor of what is now Plymouth, Mass. In 1775 part of the rock was removed to the vicinity of Pilgrim hall, but was afterward restored to its original site, and is now under the stone canopy that surmounts the main rock on Water street. Charles Sumner said: "From the deck of the Mayflower, from the landing at Plymouth rock, to the Senate of the United States is a mighty contrast, covering whole spaces of history hardly less than from the wolf that suckled Romulus and Remus to that Roman Senate which on curule chairs swayed Italy and the world."

Preachers Not Overpaid.

In England the early Methodist preacher, when away from home, was expected to get his food from his congregation, and when at home was allowed 26 cents a day, with the stipulation that the acceptance of an invitation to dine fed to a due deduction. His wife was allowed 96 cents a week with a further concession of five dollars a quarter for each child. At the Bristol conference of 1752, however, a definite salary was fixed. For the future the preacher was able to call $64 a year his very own.

A GOOD CHANGE

A Change of Food Works Wonders.

The wrong food and drink causes a lot of trouble in this world. To change the food is the first duty of every person that is ill, particularly from stomach and nervous troubles. As an illustration: A lady in Mo. has, with her husband, been brought around to health again by leaving off coffee and some articles of food that did not agree with them. They began using Postum and Grape-Nuts food. She says:

"For a number of years I suffered with stomach and bowel trouble which kept getting worse until I was very ill most of the time. About four years ago I left off coffee and began taking Postum. My stomach and bowels improved right along, but I was so reduced in flesh and so nervous that the least thing would overcome me.

"Then I changed my food and began using Grape-Nuts in addition to Postum. I lived on these two principally for about four months. Day by day I gained in flesh and strength until now the nervous trouble has entirely disappeared and I feel that I owe my life and health to Postum and Grape-Nuts.

"Husband is 72 years old and he was troubled, for a long time, with occasional cramps, and slept badly. Finally, I prevailed upon him to leave off coffee and take Postum. He had stood out for a long time, but after he tried Postum for a few days he found that he could sleep and that his cramps disappeared. He was satisfied and has never gone back to coffee.

"I have a brother in California who has been using Postum for several years; his whole family use it also because they have had such good results from it."

THIS THE YEAR OF THE GREAT PASSION PLAY

Most Wonderful of All Human Attempts to Tell the Christ Story.

WHY OBERAMMERGAU EXISTS.

Peasants Who Possess Wonderful Dramatic Ability—Great Honor to Portray the Christus.

There are, no doubt, men and women who, having witnessed that most wonderful of all human attempts to tell the Christ story, the Passion Play at Oberammergau, Bavaria, are utterly unimpressed and who stoutly maintain that the whole thing from start to finish is "little more than a show of mountebanks acting for money." This sort of person is not to be envied. The quality or condition of mind which can remain to the end either unmoved or antagonistic is something incomprehensible to the ordinary mortal. For setting aside every consideration of the moral quality of the play and looking at it simply as a dramatic spectacle, it is impossible to deny to it a place among the most masterly theatrical representations of the world.

To the masses—that is, to the Bavarian peasants—the Passion Play is today as holy as it was when, nearly 300 years ago, the people of Oberammergau, stricken with terror because of a plague in their village, knew no better device to stay it than to vow to God the performance of a Play of the Divine Passion of Christ. Once in every ten years it is presented and then the quaint little village swarms with all sorts, kinds and conditions of people, the great majority of whom are for the time, at least, filled with awe and a profound sense of exaltation.

THING FOR WHICH THEY LIVE.

Acting in "the play"—to the Oberammergau people there is but one—has been not only the one recreation of their life, otherwise hard worked, sombre and stern—it has been their one channel for the two greatest passions of the human heart—love of approbation and the instinct of religious worship; for the Oberammergau peasant, both these passions have centered on and in his chance to win fame, please his priest and honor God, by playing well some worthy part in the Passion Play. The hope and the ambition of this have been the earliest emotions roused in the Oberammergau child's breast. The greatest honor in all this wide world which may fall to a man is to render the part of the Christus, while the most shameful of all misfortunes which may be visited upon a resident of Oberammergau is to have taken from him, because of his unworthiness, an important part he has once portrayed. One man to whom this happened became insane through grief. Right here it might be well to explain a phase of the great mystery play, which, strangely enough, is seldom understood and is often the subject of sarcasm on the part of many tourists who, putting it frankly, do not know what they are talking about. This is the financial end of the undertaking. Every dollar of the money received goes into the hands of a committee selected by the people. When all the costs are paid the profits are divided into four portions, one-quarter is set aside to be expended for the church, for the school and for the poor; another for the improvement of the village, for repairs of highways, buildings, etc.; a third is divided among the taxpaying citizens of the town who have incurred the expense of preparing for the play, buying the costumes, etc. The remaining quarter is apportioned among the players, according to the importance of their respective parts; as there are 700 of them, it is easy to see that the individual gains cannot be very great.

THE PASSION PLAY.

The play—given on an uncovered stage before an auditorium the greater part of which is uncovered—is divided into eighteen acts, and covers the time from Christ's entry into Jerusalem, at the time of His driving the money changers out of the temple, till His ascension. Before each act there are given tableaux of Old Testament events which are prophetic of the scenes in Christ's life which are depicted in the act following. In the second act is seen the high council of the Jewish Sanhedrim plotting measures for the ruin and death of Jesus. This is followed by His departure from Bethany, the Last Journey to Jerusalem, the Last Supper, the Final Interview between Judas and the Sanhedrim, the Betrayal in the Garden of Gethsemane.

The performance of the play up to this point consumes four hours; and as there is here a natural break in the action, an interval of an hour's rest is taken. It comes none too soon, either to actors or spectators, after so long a strain of unbroken attention and deep emotion.

The next act is the bringing of Jesus before the High Priest Annas; Annas orders Him taken before Caiaphas, and this is the ninth act of the play. Then follow: The Despair of Judas and his Bitter Reproaches to the Sanhedrim, The Interview between Jesus and Pilate, His Appearance before Herod, His Scourging and Crowning with Thorns, the Pronouncing of His Death Sentence by Pilate, the Ascent to Golgotha, the Crucifixion and Burial, the Resurrection and Ascension. The whole lesson of Christ's life, the whole lesson of Christ's death, are thus shown, taught, impressed with a vividness which one must be callous not to feel.

"On the morning of the play," says a descriptive writer, "the whole village is astir before light; in fact, the village proper can hardly be said to have slept at all, for 700 out of its 1,200 inhabitants are actors in the play, and are to be ready to attend a solemn mass at daylight.

"Before 8 o'clock every seat in the theater is filled. There is no confusion, no noise, the proportion of those who have come to the play with as solemn a feeling as they would have followed the steps of the living Christ in Judea is so large that the contagion of their devout atmosphere spreads even to the most indifferent spectators, commanding quiet and serious demeanor.

"The firing of a cannon announces the moment of beginning. Slow, swelling strains come from the orchestra; the stately chorus enters on the stage; the music stops; the leader gives a few words of prologue or argument, and immediately the chorus breaks into song.

"From this moment to the end, eight long hours with only one hour's rest at noon, the movement of the play is continuous.

"How incomparably the effects are, in sunny weather, heightened by this background of mountain and sky, fine distances and vistas of mountain and meadow, and the canopy of heaven overhead, it is impossible to express.

"When birds fly over they cast fluttering shadows of their wings on the front of Pilate's and Caiaphas' homes, as naturally as did Judean sparrows 2,000 years ago. Even butterflies flitting past cast their tiny shadows on the stage; one bird paused, hovered, as if pondering what it could all mean, circled two or three times over the heads of the multitude, and then alighted on one of the wall posts and watched for some time. Great banks of white cumulus clouds gathered and rested, dissolved and floated away, as the morning grew to noonday, and the noonday wore on toward night. This closeness of nature is an accessory of illimitable effect; the visible presence of the sky seems to witness to invisible presences beyond it, and a direct bond with them. There must be many a soul, I am sure, who has felt closer to the world of spiritual existences, while listening to the music of the Omerammergau Passion Play, than in any other hour of his life."

All over the world people are already planning to go to Omerammergau next summer—"the summer of the 10th year." The first performance will be given the third Sunday in May, and on every Sunday and feast day thereafter until the coming of fall, the play will be presented to great audiences. The "playhouse" now in use was erected eleven years ago at a cost of $86,000.

There are no hotels in Omerammergau, but the villagers seem to have no difficulty in looking after the comfort of the thousands who claim their hospitality every ten years. Every house becomes a hotel and it is said there are no more hospitable people in all the world than the Bavarians.

In the coming production, Anton Lang will portray the Christus. He took the part for the first time in 1900 and is said to be a truly wonderful actor. He is by trade a potter.

Whatever there may have been of theatrical show and fantastic conceit in the beginning of the Passion Play was long ago eliminated. Generation after generation of devout and holy men have looked upon it more and more as a vehicle for the profoundest truths of their religion, and have added to it, scene by scene, speech by speech, everything which in their esteem could enhance its solemnity and make clear its teaching. However much one may disagree with its doctrines, reject its assumptions or question its interpretations, that is no reason for overlooking its significance as a tangible and rounded presentation of that scheme of the redemption of the world in which to-day millions of men and women have full faith.

ART OF GLASS CUTTING

Delicate Work Which Accounts for the High Price of the Genuine Article.

PRESSED GOODS ARE DECEPTIVE

Some Simple Rules That Will Safeguard the Ordinary Purchaser at Retail—Closed-In Ware.

Buyers for large houses are sometimes deceived when buying cut glass, and find they have bought what is commercially known as pressed glass instead of the genuine article. Yet there are a few simple rules that will safeguard the ordinary buyer at retail, the Boston Globe says. The chief one is to pick out only what the manufacturer calls closed-in articles. By this he means vases, jugs, pitchers, bottles and the like. These cannot be duplicated in pressed glassware, which is first molded in patterns and the edges ground. This process gives it so close a resemblance to real cut glass that even experts may be deceived. The kind of cut glass that is counterfeited is called open work, such as plates, napples or any flat article through which the workman can readily see when finishing it. Another help in selecting cut glass is its weight. The genuine is made from pure lead glass, made chiefly in America, especially for cutting. This lead glass is very heavy.

The process of making cut glass is fascinating to watch. The first step toward cutting is to mark on the blank—that is, the dish in the clear glass—in red or other paint the design that has been selected for it. The most common designs are diamond shapes, stars or various points; crosses and squares, and other geometrical patterns. The design must be marked on the glass exactly to stand the test of compass and rule. When all lines are in perfect accordance with the pattern, and also fit the blank, the "roughing" begins. This is cutting the heavy work, such as the necks of vases and bottles, and the heavy lines on the stars.

This is done on a machine called the "mill," a big, wooden-framed affair, on top of which is a hopper holding about half a ton of Berkshire hills sand. This sand is the only kind in this country that has proved satisfactory for this work. The sand runs down through the hopper, is moistened with water and comes out of a large steel disk, the edge of which is sharp. This disk is turned by power at a very high speed. The wet sand of the disk gives it a "tooth," which, when the glass is held against the edge of the disk, cuts very rapidly.

After the design has been all cut comes one of the most difficult parts of the work, the polishing. This is done on the outside of the work with a very high-speeded brush wheel covered with moistened pumice stone, powdered. This stone is lava thrown off by a volcano. Large wooden disks, made to fit the cuts and fed with pumice and water, are used for polishing the fine work in and around the delicate tracery of the pattern. The hand of the glass-cutting expert must be steady, strong and accurate, for the least mistake spoils a whole pattern.

Way He Looked at It.

VISITING NURSES AND THEIR GOOD WORK

THE ANGEL OF THE POOR—THE VISITING NURSE.

"An early morning call brought us to a home where disease and poverty and despair were everywhere apparent. The young wife and four little ones were huddled about a kitchen stove, gray and chill; the unmistakable cough coming from a rear room told us where our patient was—the husband in the last stages of tuberculosis. The picture was a most hopeless one. Two things relieved its gloom—the winter sun pouring into the window and the young woman in nurse's dress rapidly absorbing the situation. With scarce a second of hesitation her coat was off. Another instant and the fire was burning brightly. The patient was brought from his dingy room and made comfortable on a chair beside the fire. As she worked the nurse spoke words of cheer to the mother, persuaded her to wash the children and send them to the window to play. Later the father was urged to enter the hospital, the children sent to a day nursery and the mother able to pursue her occupation as laundress."

This is the beginning of the tale of one who traveled the rounds of duty with a worker of the Visiting Nurse Association of Chicago. It was merely an incident, one of the hundreds of situations that face the visiting nurse, but it explains the work of the organization, which closed the twentieth year of its life recently. The four score members of the Visiting Nurse Association meet such conditions daily. Sacrificing their private clientele and comfort, they make a band of earnest workers against poverty, disease and vice whose labor will continue until there is no more work to do.

The Visiting Nurse Association had its inception in 1889, when a few women who became interested in the work of the charitable nurse met and organized. Four nurses were at first employed. At the end of the first year the annual report showed that 8,586 visits had been made by the nurses and 771 patients cared for. Such was the progress of the Visiting Nurse Association that physicians quickly volunteered to assist and charitable Chicago opened its purse. A fifth nurse was added during the second year.

The work of the visiting nurse during the suffering and trials of winter can only be equaled in effort by her work in the summer, when opposite conditions exist. In the evil-smelling, rickety congestion of tenement and slum she works year in and out, and always emerges at the end of her day's struggle the fresh, soothing, capable young woman she was when she entered. Her indefatigability makes the record of patients cared for this year 20,019 in a total of 99,514 visits. The nurses's first salary is $50 a month. After three months this increases to $60, and $80 is paid after five years of service. Visits to the homes as well as to the schools have done away to a large extent with truancy and the spread of infectious diseases among school children. For this the nurse is responsible and the city has appreciated this to the extent of placing her on its pay roll. Half of the Visiting Nurse Association staff is devoted to school work, and in the last year it made 14,502 public school visits and 334 calls at other schools, besides visiting 71,461 homes. Exactly 47,707 cases in need of medical attention were found. These were duly reported to school inspectors, dispensaries, hospitals, charitable organizations and private physicians.

WOLVES CHASE MEN IN SLED.

One of the most thrilling encounters ever experienced with wolves in the vicinity of Onamia, Minn., took place the other night shortly after dark. C. A. Frank and William Dawes had been out butchering a cow, half a mile from town, and were on their way home with the fresh-killed beef on the sled, when they were startled to hear the howls of several wolves some distance away. Other wolves took up the cry and in a few moments a pack of fully fifty wolves were in close pursuit. Frank put his horses to the run, but the wolves were fleeter, and when just a few rods from the city limits, seven or eight of the bloodthirsty animals leaped upon the sled. Dawes, who stood behind, killed three of them with a long butcher knife which he had used in the dressing of the cow. The knife was wrenched out of his hand, and he killed a fourth by throwing it off the sled so that it fell beneath the runners. By this time they were within the village limits and the wolves gave up the chase. The men immediately reported their adventure, and a large posse of citizens, armed with rifles and shotguns, went back to see if more of the animals could be killed. They found the pack engaged in devouring their dead comrades, but could not get close enough to make their shots effective, as the wolves took to the woods at once. Frank and Dawes consider themselves lucky as neither were hurt, except that Dawes was slightly scratched on the jaw by one of the wolves which leaped upon him.

HEMMED IN BY SNAKES.

Ralph Stocking, the operator in the Western Union office at Gouverneur, N. Y., had an experience that he will not forget for some time. Mr. Stocking with a friend journeyed to the vicinity of the storage tanks of the village water system on the high rocky hill a mile south of the village and prepared to cook dinner over a campfire. He was in the act of frying beefsteak, when he chanced to glance over his shoulder and was horrified to discover a huge snake of the adder species with head poised to strike. The serpent was fully four feet in length, and had approached to within four feet of the picnic party. Mr. Stocking cautiously secured a club, but the snake understood the game, and darted away among the rocks and the dinner preparations proceeded for a time. The odor of the frying beefsteak had stirred up a swarm of snakes and soon the picnickers were surrounded by a cordon numbering at least a half dozen of ugly looking reptiles, all of great length and in thorough fighting mood. Mr. Stocking did not hesitate this time, but opened the ball with his club and soon two of the adders were laid low, that is, flattened, while the rest sought safety in the rocks. The two dead snakes measured about four feet each in length and were of abnormal size.

Swiftly and gracefully an aeroplane descended, landing as lightly as a feather on the smooth roadway of the boulevard.

Forth stepped an elegantly attired man, wearing a mask.

"Snatching a purse from a richly apparelled dame who was passing, he stepped back into the aeroplane and was soaring aloft and disappearing in the distance before it occurred to the astonished victim to let loose a scream. —Chicago Tribune.

Rosin Rots Things.

Rosin is good for fiddle bows, but when it is put in a soap to give it weight and holds to together it gets into the clothes and rots them. It holds the dirt there, too. Get a good, clean, pure soap—get Easy Task soap. It's made of cocoanut oil, borax, naptha and clean tallow, and it takes the boiling and the rubbing and the all-day labor out of washday. And it doesn't make the hands red and sore and ugly. A cake costs only five cents; there's no economy in using the old-fashioned kinds.

FARMERS' CORNER

A Post Driver.

A homemade arrangement for driving piles or posts is shown in the sketch. I consider a post driver one of the most useful implements that I have on the farm, writes J. L. Macomber in Farm and Home. This device is of very simple construction, and aside from the few pieces of iron, pulleys and the rope, any farmer can make it at home.

The runners, a, are 9 ft. long, made of good solid oak 6x4 in. thick. The crosspieces, b, are of 4x4 oak, placed about 3 ft. apart. Firm braces, c, of 2x6 scantling, will strengthen the frame. The uprights, d, are 14 or 16 ft. long, as desired, of 4x4 oak. The braces, e, may be 2x4. For the weight, f, a wooden block may be used, which is either square or round. It should be about 18 inches in diameter and 2½ ft. long, of solid oak or hickory. Some wood that will not split readily is best. Grooves should be made in the side of the weight to take in the full width of the uprights. It is a good plan to bore an inch hole through the rear end of each runner, through which a peg may be driven to hold the device in position while the post is being driven.

The working of this device is simple. The weight is drawn up by horses hitched to the end of a rope, and when it arrives at the top of the uprights it is released by the hook, 2, striking the block, 1, unhooking it from the ring, 3, which is attached to the driver block. Four or five blows will usually drive a pointed post to the required depth. Two men and a team will drive one-half to three-quarters of a mile of posts in a day. The cost of such an implement is about $5, and will pay for itself in a short time.

PLAN OF STABLE.

The accompanying plan is a very convenient stable arrangement and economical of room. Rolling doors are shown on almost all the openings, but swing doors can be substituted if desired. Corrugated iron is recommended for the roof, as the wood covering to which roofing is attached may be only 1½x3 inch strips spaced 20 to 24 inches on centers. About forty-one squares will cover roof and to give nicely proportioned building the rafters exclusive of projections should be the same length on both roofs and the slope of the lower should be 56 degrees from the horizontal, while that of the upper will be 34 degrees. To frame and inclose barn alone would cost about $200.

Killing Weeds.

A great deal is heard about chemical weed destroyers and improved methods for eradicating weeds. Some of the improved methods are worthy of consideration and if followed will be the means of destroying many of the weeds. Many of them, however, are not practical and should never be considered by the farmer.

Professor Beal of the Michigan station comes forward with an entirely new means of destroying weeds which, if followed, is certainly the most practical of all other methods, except the hoe. The professor says that where soils are reasonably rich as a result of the growth of legume, there are few weeds. Lands which have been in alfalfa or clover for a number of years have few weeds. For all weedy lands the professor suggests that the farmers seed the land down for either alfalfa or clover and to make sure that the seeding is sufficient to cover the ground. Keep the ground in legume for a number of years and the weeds will nearly all be destroyed. This sounds much more sensible than chemical destroyers.

Labor-Saving Log-Roller.

On every farm where there is timber of large size there ought to be a canthook, an implement shown in the picture from Farm World, for the purpose of moving heavy logs. It will save a tremendous amount of heavy lifting and one man with a canthook can do as much or even more than two without it. The handle should be about 5 feet long and the iron hook about 12 inches. Or if very large logs are to be used, 15 inches. The hook should work loosely on a bolt through the handle and the "business end" be slightly curved inward and always kept sharp.

Dairying and Price of Land.

Dairying in Holland is the principal occupation. The land is worth from $500 to $1,000 an acre, yet the people pay their rents or interest on the investment by producing butter and cheese, which they place on the European market in successful competition with that produced in America on land of less than one-fifth the value. The secret is—efficient cows, excellent care, co-operation and superiority of butter and cheese.

Small Farms.

The farm unit is gradually becoming smaller with the advance in the price of land. A well known real estate agent in a certain locality told us recently that he had ten times as many calls for 40 acres as for 160 acre farms. The small farm is the best farm, all things considered, and people are gradually coming to realize it and to look for small farms when purchasing. The farmer of to-day is beginning to learn that it is better to tramp over less ground and grow more to the acre. The taxes and fences on a large farm sometimes amount to more than the crops. There is great economy in all lines in the cultivation and management of a small farm. When the farmer knows that he has but a few acres to plant to corn, or any other crop he will use better seed, fertilize more heavily and cultivate better. If he grows seventy to eighty bushels to the acre, say on ten acres, he is much better off than the larger farmer who cultivates twice as much and gets only thirty to forty bushels of corn to the acre.—Chicago Weekly Inter Ocean.

Let Her Scratch.

The importance of exercise for poultry might well be placed subordinate only to good housing and feeding. But a writer in an agricultural monthly pertinently remarks that "scratching to get a minute's peace from mites and other pests is not the right kind of exercise." The truth is obvious.

Give the fowls plenty of encouragement to scratch for their grain feed by keeping a portion of each pen deeply bedded with leaves or straw. There is nothing like it for promoting thrift and contentment among a flock of fowls in the winter, and it is also a great aid toward getting fertile, hatchable eggs.

Swing for Loading Fodder.

There are a large number of contrivances made for loading shock fodder onto a wagon, some better than others. The illustration herewith shown is one that is in use in some localities where a good deal of fodder is cut up. The rear ladder is substituted with a stout post, well anchored to the jack, on top of which is a pole so adjusted as to be able to reach out to one side for the fodder and the other with proper leverage. A rope or a chain attached to the short end of pole is thrown around the shock about half way up, and a fork handle thrust through above it so it will stay there and the whole shock is lifted on the rack.—Farm and Home.

FOR LOADING FODDER.

Nutriment in Dry Fodder.

The Indiana agricultural experiment station has shown that dry fodder loses 25 to 85 per cent of its nutrition as compared with corn silage in feeding. That ought to commend the silage method of saving the corn fodder to any one. If one was losing that large a percentage in handling his wheat, corn or other cereals he would certainly change his methods to something better when shown to him. This is the plain truth about fodder and corn silage, and such facts ought to make any one feeding live stock take notice.

Farm Notes.

Pull and burn every weed you can reach.

Proper feed and care is the secret of healthy chickens.

Transplant shrubs and vines as soon as the foliage ripens.

Remove all dead stalks and dried leaves from the flower beds.

A ration of wheat and corn is beneficial to the fattening turkeys.

Do not feed poultry too much barley. A little will go a long way.

It is a great mistake to mark a hog by mutilating its ears. Butter use a metal tag.

It is a hard matter to overfeed the pullets at this time, for the extra nutrition is put into eggs.

Ashes sprinkled in the nests first and two or three moth balls put in the nests will keep lice away.

TACK THIS UP

Prescription that Breaks Up the Worst Cold in a Day.

Every winter this prescription is published here and thousands have been benefited by it. "Get two ounces of Glycerine and half an ounce of Concentrated Pine compound. Then get half a pint of good whiskey and put the other two ingredients into it. Take a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful of this mixture after each meal and at bed time. Shake the bottle well each time." But be sure to get only the genuine Concentrated Pine. Each half ounce bottle comes in a tin screw-top case. Any druggist has it on hand or will quickly get it from his wholesale house. Many other pine extracts are impure and cause nausea.

Not in Love.

The cashier of a French bank enters the private office of the president nervous and agitated.

"Sir," he says, "I have something on my mind which I feel myself compelled to disclose, though for months I have striven to conceal it." The president turns pale. "The fact is I love your daughter."

The president breathes more freely.

"Ah, you love my daughter. Do you ever make any errors in your books or in counting your cash; find yourself abstracted, eh?"

"Never, sir," with pride.

"Then, sir, I must decline to encourage your suit. You are not really in love."—Paris Journal.

In Agony with Eczema.

"No tongue can tell how I suffered for five years with itching and bleeding eczema, until I was cured by the Cuticura Remedies, and I am so grateful I want the world to know, for what helped me will help others. My body and face were covered with sores. One day it would seem to be better, and then break out again with the most terrible pain and itching. I have been sick several times, but never in my life did I experience such awful suffering as with this eczema. I had made up my mind that death was near at hand, and I longed for that time when I would be at rest. I had tried many different doctors and medicines without success, and my mother brought me the Cuticura Remedies, insisting that I try them. I began to feel better after the first bath with Cuticura Soap, and one application of Cuticura Ointment.

"I continued with the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, and have taken four bottles of Cuticura Resolvent, and consider myself well. This was nine years ago and I have had no return of the trouble since. Any person having any doubt about this wonderful cure by the Cuticura Remedies can write to my address. Peep Into the Future.

In the slow process of the ages a new type of urban man had been evolved.

In addition to the usual equipment of visual organs he had an eye on each side of his head and one on the back part of the same.

"But what does he need of all of 'em?" asked the stranger from the far interior.

"He has to have them," explained the resident, "so he can start across the street at the corner of State and Madison and reach the other side alive."—Chicago Tribune.

SALZER'S SEEDS ARE SOWN THE WORLD OVER

We Will Pay You $500 in Gold To Name Our New Corn

Shakespeare says there is nothing in a name, but John A. Salzer says A GOOD NAME IS WORTH A FORTUNE. He backs up his statement by offering you $500.00 in gold to name his wonderful, long-kerneled corn, pictured in life size at the left on this page.

Test Yield 304 Bus. Per Acre

REJUVENATED WHITE BONANZA OATS

A prominent Agricultural Expert, on seeing this new corn, exclaimed:

"Salzer, you have startled the Agricultural World in discovering this most remarkable breed of corn!"

Indeed, it is the most remarkable corn ever seen by mortal eye.

But not a bushel of it is for sale. For there is not one-tenth enough in existence to fill the tremendous orders that will pour in when this new corn goes on the market.

Next year we may have enough to sell. Right now the best anybody can do is to obtain a sample package—enough to grow ½ bushel of seed for 1911. You are mighty welcome to a sample. Please send 8c in stamps to pay mailing charges.

* * * * * *

The thing that puzzles us is, WHAT ARE WE GOING TO NAME OUR NAMELESS CORN?

Mr. Salzer will not be content with anything but a slashing, smashing good name. So he offers $500 in gold to the seed-buyer who hits upon the most suitable name.

We want you, reader, to help us out. Name this corn, won't you? It does not cost a penny to use the corn-naming coupon below. Fill it out, send it to-night and be a candidate for the $500 cash prize.

THE JUDGES

We are fortunate in securing three of the most capable and prominent men in Wisconsin to sit as Judges in our big corn-naming contest. They are Prof. R. A. Moore, Wisconsin State Agricultural College; Hon. J. J. Esch, Congressman from Wisconsin; Hon. Robt. Calvert, U. S. Customs, La Crosse.

These eminent men will weigh carefully the name you suggest, and, if it is most suitable, you will get the $500 prize. No matter who you are or where you live, you will be given a fair, square opportunity to land the money.

Fill out the free corn-naming coupon with pencil or pen as you please, but be sure to give your complete home address.

It's the most original seed book published, and is gladly mailed to intending purchasers free; or remit 10c and get lots of remarkable farm seed samples, including Billion $ Grass, Alfalfa, Speltz, etc., worth a little farm to get a start with, or send 18c and we add a package of Nameless Corn.

BILLION $ GRASS

Positively the greatest grass of the century. Sown when the ground is thoroughly warm, it will produce from two to four crops of hay the first season, yielding all the way from 10 to 15 tons per acre. It is prodigiously prolific.

It requires 20 lbs. seed per acre.

Price: Salzer's Superior, 20 lbs., $1.75; 50 lbs. $3.00; 100 lbs., $5.50.

Salzer's 20th Century, 20 lbs., $2.25; 50 lbs. $5.00; 100 lbs., $8.50.

We commend our 20th Century strain as the purest, we believe, on earth.

ALFALFA

Pronounced Absolutely Pure, No Weeds.

Largest growers of Clover, Timothy and Grasses, Oats, Barley and Potatoes in America.

EX-GOV. HOARD, OF WISCONSIN, from 30 acres sown to Salzer's 20th Century Alfalfa, harvested within 24 weeks after seeding $2500 worth of magnificent hay, or at the rate of $83.33 per acre.

Salzer's Alfalfa Clover will produce a crop on any farm in America where timothy will grow. It is famed for its stubborn hardiness and prodigal vigor.

Price, 20th Century (Pure Seed)—sow 20 lbs. per A.—20 lbs., $4.90; 100 lbs., $22.00.

POTATOES

100,000 Bus. Pedigree Seed Potatoes.

Largest Growers Seed Potatoes in America, yielding from 150 to 600 bushels per acre for each and every acre you plant. Price range from $2.00 to $4.00 per Barrel.

No other Seed House has kept in such close touch with State Agricultural Colleges as the John A. Salzer Seed Co. Announcements

A. W. Madden desires to announce his name as candidate for county auditor subject to the will of the democrats of DeKalb county.

TO THE EDITOR BUTLER HERALD:

You may announce my name as democratic candidate to the state legislature, subject to the will of the people, and if elected I will stand for and indorse the democratic platform, and for the best interest of all the people.

E. M. MCKENNAN.

MR. EDITOR:

I wish to announce through your paper, that I will be a candidate before the DeKalb county democratic primaries for the nomination of the office of county auditor, subject to the will and decision of the democratic voters of said county.

MILES BAXTER.

Cannon Not "Canned."

In the struggle just ended in the house against Cannonism the republican insurgents, when the final test came, proved their insincerity, or at least their lack of courage. It was only by overthrowing Cannon that "Cannonism" in the present congress could be wiped out. And yet when the democrats had shown that, with the aid of the insurgents, they had power to overthrow Cannon completely by ousting him from the speakership, all of the insurgents, but nine refused, to join them. The other insurgents voted to keep Cannon in the speakership.

In this way Cannonism was "left on the job," so to speak. It is to the credit of the democratic members that they voted to a man to depose Cannon. If all of the so-called republican insurgents had voted with them the country would have seen the end of Cannonism. But only nine had the courage to do it. Crumpacker and Barnard, the only two republican congressman from Indiana, voted to keep Cannon in the speaker's chair.

It should be borne in mind that the resolution to oust Cannon was offered by Burleson, a democratic congressman; that every democratic member supported the resolution; that only nine insurgents voted for it; that all of the other insurgents voted against it and for Cannon; and that in this way, over the protest of the democrats, both Cannon and Cannonism will, continue to dominate congress.

About the Herald.

The editor would like to somehow impress upon the memory of our readers the importance of co-operation between them and ourselves. We feel that we are not giving our readers a paper that measures up to the standard, which is our purpose to do. Surely we are not mistaken when we say that what is good for the people is also good for the publisher, and this being the case we feel that every person in the community ought to take a personal interest in the DEKALB COUNTY HERALD and help make it the brightest and best paper in northeastern Indiana.

The co-operation plan is simple, merely assist us whenever possible without discommoding yourselves. Hand or send any bit of news which you may happen to think of; do not think, oh well they have heard of this or that, but send it anyway. Then if there is some changes you think should be made in our paper tell us, but only us, and then you will be conferring a special favor, which will be appreciated by us. Speak a good word to your neighbors for the HERALD. Some have already done this, and we are thankful for it. Don't think any kindness thrown our way will be overlooked and lost, it will be heartily appreciated.

The DEKALB COUNTY HERALD is printed for the people. Of course it is run for the currency there is in it, and to a certain extent for a selfish motive. But if we succeed we must please the patrons, and that is what we are anxious to do, and that is why we are asking for your co operation.

The HERALD is for Butler and her people and stands as their willing defender in all that is right and just. The HERALD believes that home industry should be patronized, and that is the only way to build up a town and community. For instance, it is home industry that gives our boys and girls employment, supports the churches, public schools, etc. Why is land selling all around our sister city of Fort Wayne for one hundred dollar per acre? Suppose the people would all buy their goods from Chicago, would the farmers in Allen county be worth what they are to-day? Hardly. Fort Wayne is a market for the produce of these farms, and anything the farmer produces finds ready sale there, and that is why his land is worth more than as though it was lying in the midst of a mail order district. Here is where co-operation comes in again, and so we not only ask for co- operation with the HERALD but all other industries located in Butler and vicinity.

We are going to arrange to give the great Commoner a paper published by the great statesman, W. J. Bryan, as a premium with every year-in-advance subscriber. If you are not a subscriber now, or if you are thinking of paying up and discontinueing your home paper come in and talk it over and get the great Nebraska paper.

Some of the HERALD readers in faraway states have favored us with letters for publication which are interesting features. We expect to have still more of these special features during the coming year. This week we have a special feature from W. H. McIntosh of Auburn that is very intererting. Read it.

There are a number of good democrats in Indiana from among whom the delegates to the state convention can nominate a candidate for United States senator. In the list may be included such men as Ralston, Sims, Lamb, Slack, Warrum, Hoffman, Menzies and others. And then there are Taggart and Kern, either of whom might be induced to accept if drafted. The idea that hold-over senators would not feel duty bound to support the choice of the convention is rather absurd. It would require considerable nerve for them not to do so.—Columbia City Post.

Don't Break Down

Severe strains on the vital organs, ike strains on machinery, cause breakdowns. You can't over-tax stomach, liver, Kidneys, bowels, or nerves without serious danger to yourself. Use them and enjoy health and strength. Satisfaction positively guaranteed. 50c. at Stone's drug store. 9-1m

Democrats to Be Chosen

For the first time since the state board of pardons was provided for by the general assembly the democrats are to receive an opportunity to be represented thereon, says the Indianapolis News. The term of John J. Gillette, of LaGrange expires next month, and although the best of feeling exists between him and the governor, who has the appoinsing power, it is understood that Gillette will not be reappointed, in view of the governor's well known intention to appoint democrats wher ever it falls to his lot to do so. No provision in the law creating the board provides for the politics of the members, and it has always been composed of republicans. What seemed an opportunity to place a democrat on the board was thwarted by former Governor Hanly, who appointed Thomas A Daily, a republican of this city, to the place, immediately preceding his surrender of the gubernatorial chair to Goveruor Marshall.

It Saved His Leg

"All thought I'd lose my leg," writes J. A. Swensen, of Waterman, Wis. "Ten years of eczema, that 15 doctors could not cure, had at last laid me up. Then Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured it, sound and well." Infallible for skin Eruption Fezeme, Salt Rheum, Boils, Fever Sores, Burns, Scalds, Cuts and Piles. 25c. at Stone's drug store. 9-1m

Last Sunday a man named Nicholas was arrested at the Rich Hotel on complaint of Mrs. Victor Shortsgen, a highly respected married lady who charged him with criminal assault. Nicholas was held to answer to the charge in the circuit court. It is not so much the misdemeanor of the man as the business he is engaged in, that interests the Times-Herald. Nicholas is a salesman for a Detroit mail order furniture house and has a veritable horde of companions in the city who are annoying citizens by importuning them to buy their shoddy wares and putting in spare time insulting respectable women. The employing concern is the United Furniture company and it endorses the actions of its disreputable employes to the extent of furnishing bail for them when their brutal instincts get them into trouble. Times Herald is almost tempted to say it serves women right to be mortified by those bunco salesmen for even allowing them to set foot on their premises. They are always an irresponsible lot and not infrequently, as in the case of Nicholas, persons of bestilal proclivities. Persons who desire to purchase reliable furniture on the installment plan need not go to Detroit to do it. Fort Wayne has several such establishments, notably the Fort Wayne Outfitters and the Indiana. If you buy goods of your Fort Wayne merchant you need have no fear of insult from the saleman and you are never in danger of having your house invaded by licentious brutes in human form.—Times-Herald.

Edgerton

(Intended for last week)

There wasn't hitching room enough for all the teams, last Saturday.

A UNIQUE RECORD

Not Another Like It in Our Broad Republic

To give positive home testimony in every locality is of itself unanswerable proof of merit; but when we add to this the continued endorsement from people who testified years ago no evidence can be stronger. A Butler citizen gratefully acknowledges the good received from Doan's Kidney Pills, and when time has tested the cure we find the same hearty endorsement, with added enthusiasm and continued praise. Cases of this kind are plentiful in the work of Doan's Kidney Pills, and such a record is unique in the annals of medicine.

D. D. Melroy, of Butler, Ind., says: "I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Stone's drug store and they relieved me of a lame back and other symptoms of kidney trouble that had caused me much annoyance for several months. Shortly after, I publicly endorsed this remedy and at this time, I willingly confirm that statement. My trouble has never returned."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. 12-2

John Dodge Woodruff

The essential qualities in the work of a successful entertainer are; The artist in the man; the message in the entertainment; the man himself. In the emphasis placed upon the artistic qualities, the message and the man are sometimes owerlooked. In the platform work of John Dodge Woodruff these essentials of success are embodied. The perfection of his art need not be dwelt upon in this introduction. It is manifest in his work and reflected in the comments of the press and of the people. Each of his entertainments carries a helpful message. Speaking of the message in "Jean Valjean," Adrian M. Newens, Professor in the Deparnment of Public Speaking of Iowa State College, in which Mr Woodruff was for four years a student and one year an instructor, says: "The message in 'Jean Valjean' is always good, better, or best, depending for the most part on the other two considerations—the artist and the man. In his own particular interpretation of this great story, Mr. Woodruff does the particular thing which he, the particular man, might be expected to do, viz: present those scenes in the life of Hugo's hero that represents particularly the human side of life. To say that John Dodge Woodruff is an artist, is not enough. To say that he has a message in his entertainment, is not enough. It must also be said that he is a good man, giving value receivud in personality." The unusual success of Mr. Woodruff's entertainments in Lyceum courses and on Chantauqua programs attracted widespread attention, and he has been persuaded to give up his work as a teacher and devote his entire time to the great art of public entertaining, which will afford multitudes of people an opportunity to come in contact with a most pleasing personality, on fire with a helpful message, which he presents with the finished art of the experienced entertainer. At the opera house, March 30th.

Itching Eczema Washed Away

Is it worth 25 cents to you to stop that awful, agonizing itch? Surely you will spend 25 cents on your druggist's recommendation, to cool and heal and soothe that terrible itching eruption?

By arrangement with the D. D. D. Laboratories of Chicago, we are able to make a special offer of a 25 cent bottle of their oil of wintergreen compound, known as D. D. D. Prescription. Call, or write, or telephone to Stone's drug store, Butler, Ind.

We absolutely know that the itch is stopped AT ONCE by D D. D. Prescription, and the cures all seem to be permanent.

For His Sake

"My husband begged me to take Cardui," writes Mattie L. Bishop, of Waverly, Va., "and for his sake I agreed to try it. Before I had taken 1 bottle, I felt better.

"Before taking Cardui I suffered miserably every month and had to go to bed until it wore off, but now I am all right."

Everything for Easter!

You are cordially invited to inspect our showing of Easter Apparel and Accessories

EASTER, when mankind and nature doff the dull garments of Winter for Spring's bright dress, now waits at the threshold. Custom has long associated Easter morning with a parade of the fashionably attired, and for many weeks we have been making preparations to enable you to take your place in that throng suitably attired.

Here are gathered from the style marts a complete array of those bewitching creations that are a fitting setting to Milady's charm. Spring has breathed her glory into every model. We can say sincerely that this good store has never shown such a galaxy of dainty modes.

The whole store blossoms with exquisite spring styles; show cases, counters and racks are overflowing with manufacturers' most pleasing products in fashionable garments, fabrics and accessories. And though it may be out of place to mention such rare beauty and its price in the same breath, we cannot refrain from saying a word or two regarding the extremely moderate prices that prevail. Not only will the display further our reputation as a style center of this city, but our reputation for value giving will be greatly enhanced.

The New Spring Suit

American adaptations in suits are shorter and a trifle less radical. There are very few frills; the models are, generally speaking, plain tailored, Skirts are pleated and the Russian tendency is emphasized. But words are really so inadequate, the suits themselves are eloquent.

$15, $20, $25, $30

Separate Skirts

Separate skirts are, as ever, greatly in vogue. The neatness and comfort of a separate skirt and dainty waist can hardly be denied, and accordingly we have assembled a showing so comprehensive as to satisfy every preference.

$4 to $14

The New Waists

A few really beautiful waists are almost a necessary adjunct to a complete wardrobe. And really beautiful waists are the only kind our showing embodies. Lingerie styles are the unquestionable leaders, but all the approved styles are shown here.

$1 to $5

Laces and Embroideries

The light effects prevail, including dozens of dainty new patterns. Our stock is so extensive we are sure to please you.

The New Undermuslins

Undergarments that fit well and wear well, in plain and elaborate trimmed styles, are offered in most exteusive assortments.

New Wash Goods

Loom workers have outdone themselves in an effort to spread before you a peerless showing. And after you have examined the fabrics you'll agree with us when we say they've succeeded.

10c to 50c

Dress Fabrics for the Easter Gown

Here are all the new fabrics in every desirable coloring and weave. Plain cloths and mixtures, plain and fancy colorings are included in our showing.

50c to $1.50

Gloves for Easter

Our showing comprises a complete assortment of correct gloves, in the newest styles and colorings, at prices you will be pleased to pay.

50c to $1.50

The New White Goods

Linens are to be especially strong; the extensive showing of linen suits and dresses forecast this unmistakably. But the popularity of the Batistes, Lawns, Mulls and Madrasses will not wane, their exquisite beauty prevents that.

10c to 35c

Knit Underwear and Hosiery

There hasn't been any particular innovation in Underwear, but in Hosiery we have all tones to match gowns and suits.

Tuesday while Frank Gaff was burning dead grass and weeds in the same field where he was also dragging plowed ground, the fire crept under his drag setting fire to the drag and burning his lines in two. He came to town in the evening and purchased a new set of lines.

Three men whose truth and veracity is beyond question, laid claim to us Wednesday of having made a discovery. It wasn't gold, silver or precious stones, neither was it a wild and ferocious animal or Halley's comet which is scaring some of our friends out of six years enjoyment. It was a grasshopper. If that doesn't prove the groundhog story a farce then we give up.

The HERALD is in receipt of a newspaper of Covina, Calif., where Prof. J. E. Sturgis of this place is engaged in a series of meetings with Evangelist Yewell. According to the paper the meeting is a very enthusiastic one. The paper contains a half-tone of Mr. Sturgis which is accompanied with the following compliment: Mr. J. E. Sturgis, the special soloist, arrived Wednesday instead of last Friday, he having been detained by the washout on the Union Pacific line. Mr. Sturgis at once caught the large crowd with his marvelous voice and graceful manner. His concert work has fitted him for almost every style of music, and his violin, used at all times in the services, is an instrument of peculiar sweetness.

John Krontz was in Maysville, Saturday, on business.

Geo. Greenwood, who has been working in Toledo, has returned home.

Miss Worden, who sings for the Star theater, visited at Columbia City Monday.

Ed VanFleit, of Garrett, was here a few hours Tuesday. He will be a candidate for county assessor.

Miles Baxter of Auburn, who is seeking the nomination for county auditor on the democrat ticket, was in the city Monday looking after his political interests. Mr. Baxter is perhaps known by most of the HERALD readers, having been born and reared on a farm in this county. For the past ten years he has been engaged in the real estate and loan business in the city of Auburn. He is well qualified for the office he seeks, and has always been a true democrat. In this party he held the office of county chairman for four years, during which time he covered himself with honors. He would make a splendid official.

SOME people have an idea that a paint that's right for indoor work is not as good for outside painting; and vice versa.

It's a mistaken idea; Devoe Lead-and-Zinc Paint is right for any sort of painting; it covers more surface per gallon and does it better than ordinary paint.

Hand-mixed paint doesn't begin to do the work so well, no matter how good the painter.

For all painting, use and insist on having Devoe Lead-and-Zinc Paint. Geo. W. Geddes, Agent.

Boston has lately held an exhibition devoted to the future—a display of what the city is now and what it is hoped to make it in 1915. One of the most notable portions of it was contributed by the churches. Catholics, Protestants and Jews worked together in the production of it, and those who question the vitality of the Christian religion in present times found therein an answer to their queries. The exhibit included a model of the tent system of treating tuberculosis, maintained by Emmanuel Church, the Salvation Army rescue work, the looms of the Morgan Memorial, methods of relieving conditions in the slums, the history of the development of charities and educational work carried on by churches. The most vigorous critics of the churches, unfortunately, do not attend church services, and therefore do not know how eminently practical is a great deal of the work which religious organizations are now doing.

Will the Bird-Man drive the birds from their kingdom of the air? It is reported from France that wherever the aeroplane soared, there occurred an exodus of feathered life. Wild ducks, discovering the huge Bird-Men, manifested terror and disappeared from the region. The possibility that wild fowl will grow accustomed to aeroplanes as do horses to motorcars, may be dismissed. They do not grow accustomed to eagles and hawks. Nor will they see aeroplanes every day, as horses do motorcars, since wild fowl cross the temperate zone only in their annual migrations. Nor can it be expected that bird-intelligence ever will learn that aeroplanes and airships are machines. Whale and shark fight boats on the surface of the water, and if submersibles become numerous, perhaps there will be more encounters in the deeps. Nothing whatever has sufficed to modify the routes of the birds in their migrations south and north. Traps and guns have not changed those flights. They continue, until the species is exterminated. But will not aerial navies, when they become numerous, chase the songsters and the wild fowl from the sky? As observed, the appearances of the aeroplanes alarm bird-life as nothing else done by man ever did. If a duck, hit by shot, drops from the flock, that is an accident of life, the duck intelligence considers. But the advent of a creature with the wings of a dragon the duck holds to be a supernatural and devilish event. Will our skies be depopulated by flying machines? Is man to have the kingdom of the air to himself, as he has that of the land?

Our grandmothers could have related the biography of every garment they habitually wore. From the stockings knitted by their own hands to the homespun from their own looms, or the silk gown made up by the visiting seamstress, each piece of clothing had its own domestic history. To-day all that is changed. Scarcely any farmer's wife could give account of her various garments. Where were her stockings woven or her corsets stitched? In what garret were the buttons sewed on her percale wrapper? In what great factory was her shirtwaist cut out? In what distant city was the machinery which shaped her shoes? What New York tailor determined the lines of her serviceable ready-made suit? These questions and a score of similar ones would be posers for the average woman the country over. Since women have escaped responsibility for the making of many of the family garments, they have ceased to be interested workers on those garments. These have become mere impersonal "hands," and their weariness or hunger or cold, their insufficient wages or unhealthful conditions, are too remote for the imagination to deal with. But the conscientious woman is beginning to realize that her own ease must not be purchased by indifference to another's pain. She must find new ways to establish the personal sympathy between worker and buyer which ought to be one of the most fundamental and helpful of human relations. Unless she does so, some truth-telling poet will fling out another scathing arraignment which, like Hood's "Song of the Shirt," shall rouse the reader to the misery of the underpaid and overworked, by the toil of whose fingers we to-day are comfortably clothed.

GAINS FROM "WHITE COAL."

Switzerland's Advantages Through Water Power Are Innumerable.

The freeing of the little republic from dependence upon the coal fields of Germany, the reduction in the operating costs of the state-owned railroads and the city-owned street railways, the placing of Switzerland in a position of industrial advantage, are not the greatest gains which are to follow the development of its water power, says Frederic C. Howe in the Outlook. Possibly these are but the spectacular exhibits of what a country can do when it consciously aims to use its resources for the benefit of the people. These gains do not include the dreams which men have of the life and civilization which are to follow from this revolution in light, power and possibly heat as well. They do not include the freedom from drudgery, the opportunity for culture and enlightenment, the brightening of farm life, of the woman as well as the man. Nor do they suggest the possibilities of a cheap rapid transportation, by means of which the farmer may become a city dweller and the clerk and the mechanic obtain a country home and both remain in close contact with work. For the problem of energy is the production of civilization and, with its costs reduced to a minimum, there are no limits to the visions which men may have of the society of tomorrow.

Compare this achievement of Switzerland with the prodigal waste of the resources of America. Niagara has been abandoned to private exploitation without compensation to the state or nation and with no idea of service to the people. Only profits have fattened and monopoly made that much more secure. The Susquehanna, upper Mississippi, the mountain streams of Colorado, Wyoming and the middle west, as well as of the entire Pacific slope, have been inclosed with fraudulent claims or confirmed by grants in perpetuity to the electric-power trust. There has been no reservation of control over prices, no right to purchase by the state and no appreciable gain to the community.

We, too, could boycott coal and light the nation and fire its boilers with the water power with which nature has endowed us; but the sovereignty of the state and the well being of the people have been abandoned at the behests of the powerful interests whose demands have been voiced in Congress and the Legislatures of our states by those who were sent there to represent the community.

PHONOGRAPHIC CASH REGISTER.

SAYS "THANK YOU."

A cash register that announces the amount of a sale in human voice, as well as registering the figures, has been devised by a Minnesota inventor. When the keys are touched for a sale of, say, $1.65, certain phonographic reproducers are released and the machine sings out, "One-six-five." Such expressions as "Thank you," or "I think you will find these goods satisfactory," may be added to the announcement of the sale.—Popular Mechanics.

RULES THE FINANCIAL WORLD.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND, LONDON.

The grim granite structure that houses the Bank of England eloquently bespeaks the financial power which that institution exercises throughout the civilized world. Its edicts carry greater influence than those of Rome, and its power is farther reaching than that of the throne itself. By arbitrary fixing the rate of discount it can stem the ebb-tide of gold and cause it again to flow into its coffers. On its presentation of the financial needs of the kingdom it can dictate legislation of almost any kind. It has been well said that the Bank of England is the most powerful financial institution in the world. In the very heart of London stands this low-browed, massive structure, streaked with soot and without even a window in its outer walls. This absence of windows is supposed to give greater security to its valuable contents, the light within being received from interior courts and skylights. The structure looks therefore like a gigantic strong-box, covering four acres of territory. Below the surface of the ground there are more rooms in this structure than on the ground floor. Architecturally it has nothing to attract, but it stands as a representative of a wealthy and influential empire.

WHAT IS GOOD?

"What is the real good?"
I asked in musing mood.
Order, said the law court;
Knowledge, said the school;
Truth, said the wise man;
Pleasure, said the fool;
Love, said the maiden;
Beauty, said the page;
Freedom, said the dreamer.
Home, said the sage;
Fame, said the soldier;
Equity, the seer.
Spake my heart full sadly,
"The answyer is not here."
Then within my bosom
Softly this I heard:
"Each heart holds the secret; Kindness is the word."
—John Boyle O'Reilly.

The Fateful Miss Douglas

Mrs. Ransom surveyed her tall brother meditatively, while he returned the scrutiny with smiling cheerfulness. John MacPherson was enjoying to the utmost the little visit to his sister, whom he had not seen since her marriage a couple of years previous, so he did not in the least understand why she should sigh and remark seriously: "It's too bad; yes, it is!"

"What?" he asked, lazily.

"Why, that you got here just the day after Isabel Douglas left town," responded pretty little Mrs. Ransom. "She's the dearest girl! She's—"

"Lives in Kentucky, beautiful as a dream, glorious brown eyes, most charming disposition on earth, is—"

"Where'd you meet her?" broke in Mrs. Ransom, breathlessly.

"I never had the pleasure," laughed her brother. "Only I had to sit one whole evening during my visit in Toledo and hear my hostess recount the charms of this most evasive Isabel. She had left there just the week before my arrival. I seem to cast a blighting shadow over her enjoyment; at any rate, she runs at my approach."

* * * * *

But if he had not seen her the fame of Miss Isabel Douglas was destined to haunt his ears. During his visit at his sister's he heard Miss Douglas' name so frequently on the lips of visitors that he grew half irritated. It was impossible that any girl could be such a paragon—and if she was he had no desire to know her.

When he reached Chicago on his homeward way he stopped to transact some business. Phillips, his lawyer, was most cordial in pressing his New York client to come out to his house and MacPherson was half induced to accept. His frame of mind experienced an instantaneous change, however, when Phillips added:

"We've a visitor coming to-morrow you'd like to meet, I know—Miss Isabel Douglas of Kentucky. She—"

"Sorry," said Mr. MacPherson, decidedly, "but I can't wait over a day on any account, my dear man."

Even in New York he was not left in peace. One of the newspapers printed a page of pictures and gossip about beautiful women and, idly glancing it over, the name of Douglas caught his eye. He groaned as he looked closer—yes, the first name was Isabel. Then he searched for the picture of her and stared at it half indignantly. It was a very lovely face, more than that, it was high-bred and thoughtful, as well as perfect in line and form. In a few weeks she had passed out of his mind entirely.

But John MacPherson was not to slip out of the clutches of determined fate in this easy fashion. With no warning whatever, no premonitions of the trap before him, he climbed the steps of a Fifth avenue house one night to fulfill a dinner engagement.

His hostess was a charming woman, and her dinner was famous. He was in a very pleasant frame of mind. As he opened the little envelope containing the name of his dinner partner he exclaimed to sharply that the well-trained footman could not forbear a glance of astonishment. On the card was the name of Isabel Douglas.

MacPherson, instantly in revolt, meditated flight for an instant, then realized how impossible that was and that there was nothing to do but go downstairs and meet her.

At any rate, she should not add him to the list of victims report said strewed her path.

He entered the big drawing room and greeted his hostess.

"I've favored you to-night," that lady said, smiling. "I've given you the prettiest and nicest girl here to take out to dinner. Do you know Miss Douglas of Kentucky?"

"I do not," said the helpless John MacPherson, crisply, and mentally set his teeth. In two minutes it was all over and he was properly introduced to her. Just what he had expected Miss Douglas to do was hard to say—he had braced himself for resistance. But to his bewilderment, like a dash of cool water in his face, he realized there was absolutely nothing to resist.

Miss Douglas, far lovelier than her picture, had given him one rare, cordial smile which revealed the secret of her power; for it was a smile speaking a sympathetic interest in the individual addressed, and then had not paid very much more attention to him, being interested in the conversation of a returned arctic explorer.

MacPherson studied her at his leisure and as the moments passed found himself grasping wildly at all his ingrained prejudices against her. He had wits enough to reflect in a panic-stricken way that if the mere sight of her was so charming, acquaintance with her might work marvelous changes in a man's feelings. When they passed out to the dining room MacPherson found himself halting for something to say, a new exercise for him.

THE GIRL HERSELF BROKE THE ICE.

The girl herself broke the ice by remarking that she thought she knew his sister—was not Nan Ransom out West that relative? She had mentioned her brother so often.

"She certainly got in her special brand of hypnotic work on me, all right," he told his reflection grimly that night as he took off his cravat before the mirror. "But, then, she's an exception!"

John MacPherson was a man who went out after what he wanted when he got his mind made up. He never really made up his mind about Isabel Douglas, however—that is, deliberately. He did not have time. It was a fatal attack from the very first sight of her. And when he asked her to marry him, after she had been in New York two weeks only, and she very properly protested his haste, it plunged him into despair so deep that he made life unbearable for his servants.

But Miss Douglas knew her own heart, too; after several years of experience in refusing numerous suitors, and she did not keep the man she found she really cared for waiting too long before she promised to marry him.

"I don't understand it in the least," she laughed, blushing and shaking her head when she had said "yes."

"Neither do I," agreed John MacPherson, promptly. "And I intend to marry you as soon as I wheedle you into naming the day, for fear you'll change your mind."

Then he telegraphed his sister out West, who knew nothing of what had been going on in New York. Mrs. Ransom laughed and cried alternately when she got the laconic message. It said:

"I have at last met Isabel. You can buy your gown to wear to the wedding."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

CACTUS IN MICHIGAN.

Supposed to Have Been Taken There by Migrating Zunis.

In the northern part of Muskegon county, Michigan, in the township of Blue Lake, is an extraordinary vegetable growth whose origin is a puzzle to scientists and has been the basis of many stories and legends that are familiar to every one in that region. This strange phenomenon, a writer in Harper's Weekly says, is a large patch of cactus, of the prickly-pear variety, and covers an area of several acres. The plant is a native of a warm climate and grows naturally in the southwestern part of the United States, making its presence in northern Michigan all the more remarkable.

The cactus patch is not of recent origin, but probably has been there for several centuries, according to the Indian legends. Some forty years ago a member of the Agricultural Department, while driving through Muskegon county, came across the strange prickly-pear growth. After a thorough examination he stated that undoubtedly the plant was a native of Arizona and had been introduced into the north by Indians in their migrations. This supposition has been borne out by the tales which the Indians living in the Blue Lake region were accustomed to tell the early settlers.

In a general way these stories all recorded the wanderings of a band of Zuni Indians who were driven from their home in Arizona by another tribe, and were forced to settle in what is now the state of Michigan. The year 1400 is approximately the date of this migration. These Indians, it is said, brought with them some of the cactus plants which were so plentiful in the southern deserts, and, although the Michigan climate was very different from that in Arizona, this strange form of vegetation flourished. In proof of this story the Michigan Indians would make palatable dishes from the tender shoots of the cactus, according to recipes handed down from their ancestors.

The Art of Overlooking.

Nobody can live in the world and not admit that the words "Nothing for nothing" contain a sad amount of truth. He is of course a fool who does not count the cost so far as the future is concerned; but scarcely less a fool is he who does not overlook past costs. If we have any good or delightful thing in this life, at all hazards let us not taint our enjoyment by considering what we gave for it. Was it more than we could afford? Never mind; we have afforded it, we have made our purchase. Let us take off the ticket with the price and burn the receipt. There are items in life's ledger which must be overlooked unless we would spend all our days in balancing closed accounts.

Lawyer's Instinct.

A barrister noted for absence of mind was once witnessing a representation of "Macbeth," and on the witches replying to the Thane's inquiry that they were "doing a deed without a name," catching the sound of the words, he started up, exclaiming, to the astonishment of the audience:

"A deed without a name? Why, it's void; it's not worth sixpence."—Tit-Bits.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

How Tariff Increases Prices.

Increase in food prices all over the United States has served to impress a little lesson in tariff on the people of Detroit, says a New York Herald correspondent. While commodities of all sorts, most of which are heavily protected, have become more and more expensive on this side of the river, in Windsor, just across the river, in Canada, the cost of living has not yet departed from the normal. It is 25 per cent cheaper to live in Canada than in the United States, and the tariff, the pressure of which has been more keenly felt since the Payne-Aldrich "revision," is declared largely responsible.

Here is a table of specimen prices in Windsor and Detroit:

	Windsor.	Detroit.
Butter, best, lb.	$ .28	$ .36
Eggs, dozen	.34	.42
Beef, cheapest cut, lb.	.06½	.10
Pork, chops, lb.	.15	.20
Lard, prime, lb.	.11	.12
Bacon, breakfast, lb.	.19	.24
Wheat, No. 2 red, bu.	1.00	1.11
Corn, No. 2 mixed, bu.	.60	.78
Potatoes, bu.	.70	.65
Cabbage, head	.05@.07	.08@.15
Turnips, bu.	.40	.60
Carrots, bu.	.50	.60
Beets, bu.	.25	.60
Rutabagas, bu.	.35	.40
Parsnips, bu.	.50	.60
Turkeys, dressed, lb.	.20	.25
Chickens, dressed, lb.	.11	.15
Milk, quart	.07	.08@.09
Cheese, lb.	.11½	.16½
Plug tobacco, lb.	1.00	2.00@3.00

A practical demonstration of what the tariff on all-wool clothing means was given to Mrs. Joseph Lamarre, of 362 La Salle street, Detroit, who was obliged to go to Windsor to make some purchases. Mrs. Lamarre's son had been suffering for some time with inflammatory rheumatism and flannel underwear was prescribed for him by the attending physician. After making a tour of the Detroit stores Mrs. Lamarre was unable to find what she wanted and went to Windsor Tuesday afternoon, where she purchased the underwear and two pairs of socks, at a total cost of just $3. She showed her purchases to H. Stringer, United States customs officer, and found that she was obliged to pay a tariff of 60 per cent of the value of the articles, or $1.80, in addition to 44 cents a pound, or $1.32, making a total of $3.12 duty, in addition to the cost of the articles.

Is Mr. Taft Orientalized?

Berlin Vorwaerts insists that President Taft, like celebrated British administrators who have spent years in the far East, has imbibed the ideas of the orient, and believes in benevolent despotism as the ideal form of government.

Lord Curzon and Lord Cromer, for example, says the Vorwaerts, have lost all idea of popular suffrage, and regard the masses of the people as material to be experimented upon. This losing touch with democratic ideas of popular sovereignty is peculiar to those who have held positions of authority in the far East.

Therefore, argues the writer, the years which Mr. Taft spent as the despotic administrator of the Philippines, where he demonstrated his ability and achieved great results, have undoubtedly unfitted him to conduct public office as it would be conducted by a statesman elected to represent the wishes of a constituency.

It is true that the Taft corporation tax plan, the Taft central bank plan, the Taft postal savings plan are all directed toward concentration of authority at Washington. And the $500,000,000 Panama canal job is to be put entirely into Mr. Taft's hands.

Are all these things signs that the President is orientalized?

At least the suggestion is interesting purely in its scientific aspect, if for no other reason.

The evident desire of the national administration to exercise many functions that trespass on State rights and the tendency to substitute executive for legislative power are unfortunate. The Journal believes they should be curbed.

But, if these things are the result of the orientalization of Judge Taft, what sort of an oriental potentate must Theodore Roosevelt have been in some former incarnation?—Chicago Journal.

The Fact About Ship Subsidies.

The statement that "the foreign commerce of the United States is stifled for lack of ships" is sheer nonsense, and nobody knows its nonsensicality better than the newspapers and public speakers that make it.

Less than 5 per cent of American manufactures is exported. The American tariff baron does not desire export trade. He makes no effort to get it. Our vast consular service, with its costly and intricate system of trade reports from all over the world, is of little service to anyone outside of the steel trust, the harvester trust and a limited few other monopolies that export heavily.

All the rest of our manufacturers prefer to sell ten dollars' worth of goods for home consumption rather than twenty dollars' worth for export. The ridiculous tariff enables them to obtain higher prices at home than abroad. And as long as the tariff offers its big bonus for trading at home, export business will not develop.

What is the use of subsidizing ships which will have nothing to carry, when idle freighters are lying in every seaport, and ocean freights are so scarce that such steamers as Senator Lodge sold to the Panama Canal Commission for $750,000 are to be picked up for less than one-tenth that sum?

Income Tax Publicity.

President Taft has taken pains to officially advise the Secretary of the Treasury that the new law of the United States levying a tax on the incomes of corporations contemplates publicity in respect to all the returns made under the law, both original and corrected, and he is entirely right.

No one familiar with the text of the Federal statute nor informed in regard to the discussion which preceded its enactment can doubt the correctness of the President's opinion. The law means publicity and the Republic made editorial comment upon that fact at the time the income tax law was pending in Congress. The intent is that full data as to the gross income, the total expenses and the net income of every corporation in the United States shall be open to public inspection.

The fact that Congress so worded the appropriation for the enforcement of the statute as not to provide for the expenses involved in a classification of this interesting information will not contribute to complete secrecy even if a deficiency appropriation is denied. All that will result will be that the returns of any particular corporation will be obtainable for the information of favorite individuals who have the right sort of pull at the Treasury Department, while the inquirer who hasn't any pull will discover that it is impossible to get at what he wants.

Under the conditions Congress would do well either to modify the law so as to repeal the provision providing for publicity or grant an additional appropriation which will make it possible for every inquirer to have an equal chance in obtaining desired information.—St. Louis Republic.

Where Whitewash Fails.

The United States Senate has undertaken to prove that the sudden and abnormal increase in the cost of living has other causes than the Aldrich-Taft tariff law.

It does not matter whether Senator Elkins, the near-insurgent, or any one of the standpat Senators guides the investigating committee. The end of the investigation is fore-ordained from its beginning. The Senate will find plenty of scapegoats.

There is gold, for instance. It will be easy to claim, from the quoted authority of old-school political economists, that the rapid increase in the world's production of gold is responsible for high prices. Becoming more plentiful, the purchasing power of a gold dollar becomes less, and so on.

American consumers would like to know why the purchasing power of wages and earnings took another sudden drop as soon as the Aldrich-Taft tariff law went into force. You cannot convince the average middle-class consumer that the world's supply of gold had anything to do with it. Especially so, when the dividends of robber trusts, like those of eastern cotton manufacturers, are higher under the new law than ever before.

The dignified Senators are mixing their coat of whitewash to no purpose.

Stopping the "Fire Wagon."

When the first railroad was laid over the Western plains and the cars began running to San Francisco the Indians viewed the locomotive from the hilltops at a distance, not daring to come nearer the "fire wagon." A train of cars was to them "heap wagon, no hoss." An Apache chief gathered a party of warriors in Arizona and went several hundred miles to see the terrible fire wagon that whistled louder then the eagle's scream and poured out dense black smoke. W. M. Thayer says in his "Marvels of the New West" that the redskins grew bolder and once attacked a fire wagon, expecting to capture it. When they failed and many were injured, they said, "Fire wagon bad medicine!"

The Indians stretched a lariat across the track, breast high, each end being held by thirty braves.

"When the engineer first saw it he didn't know what on earth was the matter," said a narrator, "but in a minute more he burst out laughing. He caught hold of that throttle, and he opened her out.

"He struck that lariat going about forty miles an hour, and he just piled those braves up everlasting promiscuous."

TRICKS OF PARIS BURGLARS.

Dramatic Rescue from Seine with Participants Sharing Profits.

Parisian beggars have been known to go far beyond a sham fight with a dog in the gutter for a crust, the London Chronicle says. Maxime du Camp has recorded how, on an August Sunday in 1887, at an hour when the quais were crowded, a shabby man uttered a cry of despair, and threw himself into the Seine near the Pont de l'Alma. He had sunk twice when a man in workmen's clothes plunged in, swam after him and effected an apparently difficult rescue. As the crowd surrounded the two on the bank the rescued one slowly came to, reproached the rescuer for saving a hopeless, workless man, who had not eaten for three days, and tried to rush off again, crying, "Let me die!" The rescuer pulled out half a franc, saying, "Take this; I shall only have to go without dinner to-day," and, of course, the crowd liberally followed suit. But the skeptical police shadowed the two, saw them count up the spoils in a tavern and presently arrested the two ex-convicts, dead drunk.

Berlin "Newsboys."

"The up-to-date newsboy of New York can learn something in Berlin," writes a New Yorker from that city. "One of the popular sellers of newspapers in this town is a gray-bearded, tall, soldierly looking man, who has the papers attached—one copy of each publication—to a long fishing rod, on the top of which there is a little pocket for coins. People on omnibuses and at upper windows may be served by means of the rod. They help themselves to the paper they desire, deposit their money in the little bag and the sold paper is replaced by another from the stock which the old man carries in a bag slung over his shoulder. The children in the district where he does business call him the "nickel fisher."

"Will it hurt?" asked the precise person as he sat down in the big chair.

"Don't you know that I advertise myself as the painless dentist?"

"Yes. But what I want to know is whether you can guarantee me as a painless patient."—Houston Post.

"I shall miss my train," she said, petulantly.

"Oh, no, you won't," the dressmaker assured her. "You will soon get used to these gowns which haven't any."—New York Journal.

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER X.

Great was the dismay throughout the country side when it became known that Maurice Aylmer had been murdered. There was hardly a person of consequence in the county who could not claim at least a bowing acquaintance with him. Moreover, Maurice was one of those men who are always popular, and much sympathy was manifested for his untimely death. Also the mysterious way in which he had come to his end, the absence of any known motive, and the knowledge that the deceased had no enemies—all these things combined to raise public curiosity to the highest pitch.

Crowds of people came from all parts of the country to view the scene of the crime, and, if possible, to gain a glimpse of Jen and David, who as relatives of the deceased were notorious for the time being; but, thanks to the presence of the police and the vigilance of Jaggard, the morbid crowd of sightseers were unable to gratify their curiosity. The two men remained in seclusion, and saw no one save Dr. Etwald. A sympathetic message arrived from Mrs. Dallas, which, considering the way she had behaved towards Maurice, the Major regarded as a gratuitous insult.

"Can't she let the poor man rest in his grave?" said Jen, wrathfully. "It is all through her opposition to the match that this has come about!"

"Oh, you can't say that, Uncle Jen," remonstrated David.

"Yes, I can, sir. If Maurice had not been prevented from seeing Isabella, there would have been no necessity for him to call on Etwald; and if he had not done that, he would not have been on the high-road in the night to meet with his death. Mrs. Dallas and her infernal negress are at the bottom of this whole accursed business."

Of course this was mere raving on the part of Jen, but the poor man was beside himself with grief at the loss of Maurice, and hardly knew what he was saying. Being in this frame of mind, he was by no means pleased when shortly after the delivery of Mrs. Dallas' message Dido made her appearance with a request for a personal interview.

"I shan't see that black witch," cried the poor Major. "David—Etwald, send her away."

"I wouldn't if I were you, Major!" said Etwald, judiciously; "she might be the bearer of valuable information, likely to lead to the detection of Aylmer's assassin."

David left the room and remained absent for some time. On his return he stated that Dido had come with a message from Isabella, and that she refused to deliver it to anyone save the Major. Seeing that the negress was thus insistent, and wondering what Miss Dallas might want with him at so painful a time, Jen yielded, and Dido was admitted into the library. She looked taller, more massive, and more sullen than ever, and though she trembled at the sight of Dr. Etwald—who, by the way, kept his dark eyes studiously fixed on her—she was fairly composed when she addressed the Major.

"My lil missy want you, sar," said Dido, going straight to the point. "She weep! She ill! She make terrible bobbery, dat poo' girl. Massa come an' see my lil missy dis day!"

"I can't at present! The police are in the house; there is a lot to be attended to. Tell your mistress, Dido, that I'll see her to-morrow."

"She wants you to-day!" insisted Dido, obstinately.

"I have given you the message," said Jen, sharply. "Tell her I'll see her to-morrow. And now, Dido, I want to know what you have to do with this crime?"

"I, massa! Ole Dido she do nuffin. Massa Maurice he die Voodoo! Oh, yes!"

"By that devil-stick poison?"

"Me don't know what debble-stick is!—I no touch him!"

It was clearly impossible to learn anything from so obstinate a creature, so Jen repeated that he would call upon Isabella on the morrow, and dismissed the negress. As she left the room Dr. Etwald followed her, and on his return mentioned casually that he had been giving Dido some instructions as to what was to be done with Isabella.

"The girl is nervously excited," he explained; "and now that she has sustained this shock of Mr. Aylmer's death there is no knowing what complications may ensue."

"You are a prophet of evil, Etwald! First, my poor Maurice, now Miss Dallas!"

"As to that," replied Etwald, with deliberation, "I foretell that Miss Dallas may get ill from perfectly natural signs. She was in love with Aylmer; she is of a highly excitable and nervous character, so it is easy to know that unless great care is exercised, her brain may be affected."

"But with regard to Maurice?"

"Quite a different thing. I read in his hand that he would be subject to a state of Life in Death."

"Which, as we guessed, meant paralysis or catalepsy," said David. "But, as you see, poor Maurice is dead. Your prophesy was false."

"It would seem so. Mr. Aylmer is dead, as you say; so the term Life in Death cannot be applied to his present state of non-existence. But you will admit that I foretold that evil would happen to him if he decided to marry Miss Dallas. It has turned out as I thought."

"True, doctor," remarked Jen, keeping his eyes fixed upon the swart face of the other. "And is that all you have to say?"

"All? What else do you expect me to say?" demanded Etwald, coldly.

"Say who you think killed Maurice? Who stole the devil-stick?"

"I can't answer," said the doctor, taking up his hat. "A detective may be able to assist you on these points. Engage one!"

"No," said Jen, taking David by the arm. "We don't need aid from the law to learn who killed Maurice, and avenge his death. David and myself will find the guilty person?"

"Really. I hope you will succeed. But a case like this requires a trained intelligence such as you may find in a detective. Of course, you may command my services, Major, but I'm afraid you will not succeed."

When the doctor had taken himself off, and was walking past the library windows towards the curve of the avenue where it ran into the woods, Jen looked after him with a lowering face, and laid an inquiring finger on David's arm.

"Do you trust that man, my boy?" he asked, gravely.

"No," returned Sarby, after a pause. "I think he is a bad lot."

"I am sure of it; and what's more," added Jen, nodding, "it is my opinion that he knows who killed Maurice, if indeed he did not do it himself."

The hours dragged heavily along in that house of mourning. The body of the dead man lay in the little chamber which looked out upon the laurel-encircled lawn. It was covered with a white sheet, the hands were folded upon the breast, and flowers had been laid thereon by the Major. Over the face a handkerchief had been thrown, as the once handsome features were so discolored as to be absolutely repulsive to the sight. There was something terrible in the rigidity of the long form, stretched out so stiffly under the sheet. In the chamber, candles were burning, and Jaggard was watching near the corpse. He was to watch throughout the night.

David retired early to bed, as he was quite wornout with the anxieties of the day; but Jen was too grieved to sleep. He remained in the library, thinking over his great loss, and wondering what wretch could have taken that young life. Towards 12 o'clock he went to the kitchen, and had a short conversation with the policeman, who was a stupid bucolic youth with no more brains than a pumpkin. Afterwards he sought the chamber of death, to see that Jaggard was not sleeping at his post. Finally, like the old soldier he was, Jen went round the house, to satisfy himself that the windows and doors were bolted and barred. All these things done, he returned to the library.

At first he read and then paced up and down, thinking of his dead lad, and finally as the hands of the clock drew to midnight, he threw himself into a chair, and worn out in body and in mind, the old man slept profoundly. Hour after hour passed in silence; the moon set, and the night grew darker, as the mind rose and moaned through the woods round the house. Save the muttering of the breeze and the ticking of the clock, not a sound was to be heard in that silent room wherein Jen slept heavily.

Suddenly he woke with a start. Someone was rapping gently on the shutters of the middle window. Glancing at the clock, Jen saw that it was 3 in the morning, and wondering who could be outside at so untimely an hour, he rose to open the window. With care, begotten of old experience, he picked up his revolver, and held it ready while unbolting the window shutters. When they were thrown open, he saw a white figure with outstretched hands standing before the window.

"Miss Dallas! You here? At this hour?"

"Yes, yes," whispered the girl, stepping into the room. "I got out of my bedroom window and escaped from my mother and Dido. I want to see Maurice. Take me to the death-chamber."

Seeing from her looks that she was too distraught to be argued with, Jen led her out of the library and into the dead man's room. Then he uttered a cry, which was echoed by a wild shriek from the girl.

The bed was empty—the corpse was gone.

CHAPTER XI.

Astounded and horrified, the Major, with Isabella Dallas clinging to his arm, stood staring at the empty bed. The candles were still burning, but Jaggard had fallen from his chair, and was lying, a huddled heap upon the floor. The one window of the room was wide open, and the wind was shaking a loose shutter to and fro. The shock of the discovery was so terrific that Jen, for once in his life, lost his presence of mind. He was recalled to his senses by the wild voice of Isabella.

"Maurice! Maurice! Where is he?" she cried, leaving the Major and rushing towards the empty bed. "You said he was here—my poor dead love; but I can't see him. Where is he? Where is he?"

Jen turned his horrified gaze on the poor girl. He did not know what to do. Isabella was in a dangerous state of hysteria. She had little on but a loose white dressing-gown, and her presence in the house at 3 o'clock in the morning was enough to overpower Jen's sense of the reasonable. Independent of the crowning horror of the missing corpse. At this juncture the much-needed aid came from without. David Sarby rushed into the room.

He was half-clothed, pale as the white dress of Isabella Dallas, and evidently, from the wild look in his eyes and quivering of his nether dip, badly scared. Stopping short a few paces from the door, he held up the lamp which he carried, to survey the astonishing scene before him. The sight of Jen tongue-tied and immovable, of Isabella weeping on her knees by the bedside, of the bed itself vacant of its dead occupant—all these things were calculated to shock even stronger nerves than those of David Sarby. Nevertheless, after a pause of sheer astonishment, he managed to stammer out a question.

"Did—did she cry out?" he asked, nodding towards the girl. "I heard a shriek."

His presence and question unlocked the Major's tongue.

"Yes," he replied, in a hesitating manner, as of one unused to speech. "She came to the library window ten minutes ago, having escaped from the custody of her mother and Dido. Quite hysterical, as you see, and bent upon seeing our poor dead lad. To pacify her I brought her here, but, as you see——"

"The body is gone!" cried David, hurrying towards the bed.

"Gone! gone?" moaned Isabella, rising. "Oh, my dear dead lover!"

"Jaggard!"

"There!" said Jen, pointing to the inanimate form of his old servant.

"We must alarm the house," cried Sarby, in a horrified tone, and thereupon walked swiftly towards the door. Before he could reach it the Major, having recovered his presence of mind, seized him by the arm.

"No, no!" said Jen, hastily. "Do not bring anyone here as yet. We must think of this poor girl, David. Take her home at once. When you are both out of the house I shall give the alarm. You understand; no one must know that Miss Dallas has been in my house at this hour."

"I quite agree with you," said David, simply; and turning to Isabella, he took her gently by the hand. "Come, Miss Dallas. This is no place for you."

"Maurice," muttered Isabella, looking piteously at him.

"Maurice is not here. Come, Miss Dallas; let me take you back to your mother."

"My mother is so cruel," said Isabella, in a low tone, "and I feel so ill," she continued, raising her hand to her loose hair. "Yes, yes; I must go home. But Maurice—my dear Maurice."

"I shall tell you all about it to-morrow," answered Jen, soothingly, and led her out of the room. "At the present moment you must go home with Mr. Sarby. David, there is a loose cloak of mine in the hall. Wrap it round her and come in the library. It is best that she should leave in the way she came."

David did as he was told, and snatched up his old ulster after wrapping up Isabella. In the library they found the Major reopening the shutters of the window, which he had closed on the girl's entry. When he flung them wide, a gust of mind blew inward, sprinkling him with moisture.

"Rain," said Jen, drawing back. "All the better; there will be no spies about, and you can take Miss Dallas home without being observed."

Taking the girl by the hand, David led her towards the window. She was in a half-dazed condition, the result of the strong excitement which had impelled her to make this midnight visit, and her nerves being thus dulled, she surrendered herself passively to the guidance of David. Only at the window did she pause, and look steadfastly at the Major.

"You must find out what has become of my dear Maurice's body," she said, quietly.

"I promise you," replied Jen, with a look of stern determination in his face.

COFFEE MADE IN CAN.

Elaborate Utensils Could Not Compete With Leaf Lard Holder.

Who ever went into any restaurant but he has heard the angry remark, made to the head waiter, if he be anywhere about, "This is the worst cup of coffee I ever tasted!" No matter how expensive the brand or how careful its transformation into fragrant stimulant, it is sure to displease some one and call forth heated argument as to what coffee should be and how best to make a decent cup of it. I happened into such a party a week or so ago, says a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer, and when the argument was at its highest point each one of the four declared that he could make a good cup of coffee as easily as he could drink a poor one. A bet was made and two nights later the four coffee cranks appeared for the contest. One of them had an expensive copper contrivance of French design that looked like a distilling apparatus; another an equally elaborate German coffee pot; the third was patriotic, clinging to one of American invention, while the fourth raised a peal of laughter when he displayed an ordinary gallon tin can, whose label indicated that it had once held leaf lard.

"You may laugh if you like," said the man with this primitive looking utensil, "but I can make better coffee with this can than any of you fellows with your fancy things." After another laugh of derision from the three adherents of the "fancy things," the alcohol lamps were lighted; soon the room was filled with the fragrance of the stimulating bean, and within half an hour or so the four separate products were submitted to an unbiased committee of three.

The decision was unanimously in favor of the coffee made in the ex-lard can, and even the other contestants did not appeal from the committee's judgment. As a proof that good coffee can be made in this way the recipe is given here, so that all doubters may try it.

Punch a few holes in the cover of the can, so as to avoid explosion from steam pressure.

Pour into the can as many cups of cold water as is likely to be required, using the cups to be drunk from, and then add half a cup to allow for evaporation.

Put into the cold water one heaping tablespoonful of good ground coffee for each cup required, half a tablespoonful additional for good measure and one heaping teaspoonful of chicory, if you like chicory, and stir the grounds into the cold water until they are thoroughly soaked.

Cover the can, put it over the fire, and when the water has come to a hard boil leave it there for fifteen seconds, then lay it aside until the boiling has ceased.

Repeat this operation three times; that is to say, move the can from the fire until it has boiled and simmered down four times; pour into it one tablespoonful of cold water; lay aside for five minutes until the grounds have settled to the bottom, and then serve. I am assured that this recipe never fails to produce coffee that will satisfy any palate.

Demeanor Analyzed.

"Your chauffeur seems very respectful," said the guest.

"That air of deferential solicitude," replied Mr. Chuggins, "is not respect. It is sympathy."—Washington Star.

THE HOME AND ITS MISTRESS

Ma's Mean Way.

Pa has no use for suffragettes, he says that home's the place
Where woman has the chance to do most for the human race.
"Why should she want to vote?" says pa, "or stand around the polls,
And let her children go to school with stockin's full of holes?

"I've got no use for women who get out and fuss and tear
Forgettin' that they've homes to run and solemn duties there.
How many of these suffragettes who say they'll vote or die
Know how to bake a loaf of bread or make a decent pie?

"They'd better learn to stitch and hem,
and let the votin' go;
The wife that wants to be a gem ain't
makin' speeches—no.
She's busy where she ought to be,
without no time to gad,
Content to do the things she knows'll make her loved ones glad."

Ma sat and darned away awhile and then she spoke at last:
"I guess you're right," she said; "at least I want no vote to cast;
As long as I can give you joy by humbly slavin' here,
I'll gladly scrub and cook and darn to make you happy, dear."

Then pa got up and walked around,
and kicked a chair aside—
"Yes, there you go again," he said, so mad he nearly cried;
"Nag just because I can't afford to keep you like a queen—
And stop that darnin', darn it all. You just darn to be mean.

SNAP SHOTS AT WOMEN

Mrs. Annie Crawford is traction manager of the United Verde Copper Company.

Miss Caroline McGill of the University of Missouri faculty has been made a scholar of a Naples association for promoting scientific research by women.

As specimens of "heroic womanhood," the Rev. Dr. Aked names Katherine Breshkovsky, Elizabeth Kovalsky and Hope Sigider, because of what they have accomplished for the Russian cause.

Miss Lida Stokes Adams is instituting a house-to-house campaign in the East in the interests of the suffrage movement. Miss Adams' assistants will distribute a folder devoted to the interests of suffrage, and other suffrage literature as well.

Care of Laces.

Always iron lace on the right side first, and then on the wrong side to throw up the pattern.

When ironing laces, cover them with clean white tissue paper. This prevents the shiny look seen on washed laces.

When putting laces away, fold as little as possible. A good plan is to wind them round a card, as they do in the drapers' shops.

Use cornflour instead of ordinary starch for stiffening laces. This makes them firm, and does not destract from the "lacey" appearance.

Laces and other delicate trifles should be placed in a muslin bag before being boiled. This prevents their getting lost and torn in the wash.

Lace on collars, handkerchiefs, etc., should always be mended before being washed. In these cases it is very true that "a stitch in time saves nine."

All laces, before being ironed, should be carefully pulled out, each point being attended to. The lace will look twice as well for this and will stay clean a much longer time.

Chiffon as an Overdrapery.

There is a certain charm in the very mystery of the new penchant for draping a gown in chiffon of a contrasting or harmonizing shade. Permo material, in a wonderful new shade of golden ochre, forms the foundation of this model. The bodice and upper portions of sleeves and skirt have been draped with chiffon cloth just a tone darker than the gown proper. This elusive material is laid in deep pleats on the shoulders, the same pleated effect appearing again in the arrangement of the overskirt. Rat-tail embroidery in self color ornaments the bodice in bolero effect.

Lowering the Vitality.

All kinds of ailments are engendered and developed by keeping the body too warm or too cold. Whichever way one does it lowers the vitality so that the body cannot resist disease in a vigorous manner. The doctors agree that clothing of any appreciable weight is not good, and the manufacturers have met this dictum by making excellent fabrics and undergarments that have warmth without weight.

Union suits from knee to chest are considered more healthful than flannel of any kind. They protect the body because they cling closely. They are made of Swiss cotton and linen mesh. Wool is not allowable. Those without sleeves and low in the neck are right, because they are kept on in the house, which is too warm for a heavier garment. When one goes out into very cold air it is better to put on a Shetland wool undervest, which is thin enough to run through a bracelet and warm enough to keep out icy winds. The vital thing is to keep the body from getting moist and making it a victim to every breath of air.

TRIO OF CHILDREN'S HATS.

Here is a group of good looking millinery fashionable in childland, and all of them smart and serviceable. At top of cut we show a large pink beaver, with brim slightly rolling front, and faced with black velvet. The crown is trimmed with black velvet ribbon, pale yellow roses and foliage in natural tone. Lower left figure is wearing a modish dish-shaped hat of dark green velvet, trimmed with puffed rings of pale green silk. The remaining model is light smoke velvet, faced with blue silk. Crown band and rosette on top are of same silk.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

The shawl is now one of the most important articles of dress in Paris.

Long, tight, severely plain sleeves are rapidly giving way to the elaborate models.

Fine frills of hemstitched lawn brighten up a woolen or dark silk waist wonderfully.

Unfinished fabrics, such as homespun and hopsack basket weaves, are popular as novelties.

Sleeves made up in a series of flounces are among the prettiest conceits in dancing frocks.

While skirts may be plaited, they do not express fullness. In Paris there are under tapes to hold them down.

Instead of a single fancy button as a finish to the front of a coat, a tassel more or less elaborate is often used.

Bishop sleeves are in the height of fashion, and they are often trimmed with bands, forming the sleeve into puffs.

The kilted plaid skirt with the plain cloth bodice, with tight sleeves, is among the fashionable delights of the season.

Many of the new skirts show plaits introduced in great variety, side and box plaits mounted on hip yoke or side yokes, or laid in full length.

A tie worn on waists which go under a jumper is a long, narrow cravat, caught at the neck with an ornament, the untied ends being finished with pendants.

The sharp-pointed waist is seen now and then in ultra-fashionable costumes, but it is still too radical to be exploited freely. Whether it is to come back to its own remains to be seen.

Cashmere cloth is one of the most popular of the season's fabrics, and nothing is better for practical hard wear. It is to be had in nearly any design and color. Black and blue are popular.

How Fabrics Got Their Names.

Calico comes from Calicut, India.
Satin came from Zaytown, China.
Serge is named after Xerga, Spain.
Mosul, which is in Asia, is the namesake of muslin.
The ancient city of Damascus is responsible for damask.
Cambric gets its name from Cambrai, and gauze from Gaza.
Taffeta is named after a Bagdad street, where the material was at one time sold.
Alpaca derives its name from the Peruvian animal, from whose wool it was originally made.
Cashmere was originally made in Thibet, in the vale of Cashmere, where sheep growing a peculiarly fine grade of wool grazed.
Thomas Blanket, a celebrated cothier who is said to have introduced wool into England in the fourteenth century, is responsible for the name given to our bed covering.

Care of a Canary.

"So many people think a window the best place for a canary, while, on the contrary, it is the very worst!" said a bird fancier. "If it is a sunny window the poor little mite's brains are cooked by the heat. There is always a draft in an open window and a canary's body is too delicate to endure draft. I'm always telling my customers that a bird mustn't be put in a draft, but, dear me! it's little use talking."

Woman's Rights and Religion.

An eminent theologian propounds the prophecy that the religion of tomorrow will be founded upon the freedom of woman, who, he seems to think, has hitherto been the mistreated and downtrodden victim of the church.

It does not appear that woman has been thus ill-used. In fact, the pages of history teach us that the place of woman in the home and in the social order has been vastly improved by the church, to which she is indebted for her removal from a condition little better than slavery to be the equal and, later, the idol of man.

The sort of freedom for woman advocated by George Sand is not likely to find wide advocacy among decent women or thoughtful men. But necessity of providing for children and properly defining clearly the laws of inheritance and property renders such freedom impossible even if it were not otherwise repugnant.—Chicago Journal.

Wedding Invitations.

They need not be answered, unless the recipient is an intimate friend. Then a congratulatory note may be sent. An announcement demands no reply. The matter of wedding gifts is of course an unsettled question. There are a number of well-bred persons who do not respond to an invitation with a gift, believing that it is poor taste to send gifts to them whom they scarcely know, but to whose wedding they may have been invited for some reason of courtesy.

Of course, the fact that one knows the groom rather than the bride makes no difference one way or another. It is to the bride that the gift is sent. An "at home" card inclosed in the invitation necessitates a call within the time named, or, if one lives in a distant city, a card sent by post.

Correct and Incorrect Carriage.

To Remove Finger Marks.

The finger marks so frequently left on painted doors by children or careless maids may be removed by rubbing with a perfectly clean cloth dipped in a little paraffin. The place should be afterward carefully rinsed in cold water and given a final polish with a clean, soft cloth. There is no real remedy for finger marks on light wall paper, but sometimes simply rubbing with a clean cloth will help.

Ink Stains.

To remove ink stains from a colored tablecloth, dissolve a teaspoonful of oxalic acid in a teacupful of hot water. Rub this solution well into the stain until it disappears. If applied at once before the ink has had time to dry in this will quite remove it.

Overheard on the Honeymoon.

The Bride—But why look so blue, Freddy? You know pap has promised he will still buy all my frocks.

The Groom (gloomily)—Yes—but I'm wondering what the dickens we shall have to eat!—Throne and Country.

"How's your wife?" asked the sparrow.

"Oh, she's pickin' up," replied the bluejay.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Civil War Stories

True Story of the War.

It was a quiet afternoon in May, 1865, at the Marine Hospital, Mobile, Ala. The ward doctor had finished his round. The nurses had cleaned up the long room and everything was quiet and restful. There had been brought into our ward just after the doctor had made his morning prescriptions a soldier from an Illinois regiment—I think it was the Forty-first; however, that is immaterial—and placed on a cot next to us. He was pitiable to look at; emaciated, hollow-eyed, sunken, distorted, helpless. Yet the heroic spirit within him was grand. We were not long in becoming acquainted. He talked about going home, that his three years were almost completed; that his brother would be here in a few days and that they would go home together; that the war was ended and soon all the soldiers would be discharged and sent home. He continued in this strain for some time, then fell asleep. But his sleep was fitful, fevered, disturbed, restless. His mind wandered, his fevered brain would not let the body rest. Sometimes he would bolt right up in bed, looking wildly about him, and then fall back on his cot limp and exhausted. In his fevered revelry he would sometimes stretch out his bony hands towards us, staring wildly, gesticulating vehemently. These strange antics from a fellow soldier made our blood run chill. However, he soon became more quiet and still.

The afternoon was slowly waning away; the dark magnolia trees that stood close by the hospital were lengthening out their shadows; the spring zephyrs were sighing and soughing among their branches; the sun was dipping, dipping into the pine forests that girded the western horizon. Now and then could be heard the clear notes of the mocking bird. Everything seemed quiet and peaceful. It was at this opportune moment that a thrilling incident occurred, and which all who saw and heard could never forget, and which was the cause of this writing.

A young lady of exquisite beauty, grace and loveliness of person entered the ward, chaperoned by the head steward. She walked slowly down the aisle, between the long rows of narrow cots, looking first on one side and then on the other, until she came opposite to where we were lying, and then sat down on a low stool in the aisle between the cot occupied by my soldier brother from Illinois and our own. She sat there for a moment or two, looking smilingly yet pityingly upon us. Then in a voice that seemed to us the very essence of music she exclaimed, "Soldiers, is there anything I can do for you?" After waiting a moment, we ventured to say that for our part we would be pleased to hear her sing. Responses came quickly from their cots, "Aye, aye; yes, good lady, do sing for us."

She hesitated a moment, a faint, soft flush suffused and heightened the loveliness of a face which we shall never forget—and have no desire to even if we could. Without further ado she commenced to sing softly and sweetly that immortal hymn of Charles Wesley:

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the nearer waters roll,
While the tempest still is high;
Hide me, O my Saviour, hide,
Till the storm of life is past;
Safe into the haven guide,
Oh, receive my soul at last:

"Other refuge have I none,
Hangs my helpless soul on thee,
Leave, oh leave me not alone,
Still support and comfort me.
All my trust on thee is stayed,
All my help from thee I bring,
Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing.

"Thou, O Christ, art all I want,
More than all in thee I find;
Raise the fallen, cheer the faint,
Heal the sick, and lead the blind.
Just and holy is thy name,
I am all unrighteousness,
False and full of sin I am,
Thou art full of truth and grace."

As the last words of the third verse were falling from the lips of that beautiful singer in sweet cadence on our enraptured sense, suddenly the dying soldier on my right sprang up in his bed, and looking wildly about him exclaimed, "What, did I not hear my mother's sweet voice singing for her boy like she used to do in the long ago? Nay, nay, it cannot be. She's been dead and gone these many years. Ah, now I know," and a heavenly smile flitted across his deathly face. A momentary pause, and again he exclaimed, "Ah, now I know. She's coming with the angels in glory to welcome her boy, to guide her boy safely home at last. Home at last." His hands were stretched out heavenward. His pale, wan face shone with a radiance that was heaven born, and with the whispered words on his lips, "Home at last," he fell back on his couch dead. There were no dry eyes among the soldiers in that upper ward in Marine Hospital on that May afternoon. Our lady visitor was much affected. We never saw her fair face again, only in the picture gallery of memory. Her voice, her song, her face with their thrilling environments are indelibly photographed in memory's mystic halls.

The poor soldier was carried to the deadhouse. It was a heartrending spectacle to behold next day the sorrow-stricken brother who came to the hospital to take his brother home, not knowing that he was dead. The poor fellow returned to his regiment with a saddened heart. But this was only one instance out of thousands to illustrate that the great war wasn't all fun; that the comic, the ludicrous, the funny was only one phase of the war. There was a sadder side to it, the pathetic, the tragic, the cruel, the sickening, the bloody. Forty-four years of peace have failed to obliterate the results of this latter phase of the great Civil War, and probably many more years will have passed away before they are entirely eliminated, after which, perhaps, they will only be known as the future historian may record them on the pages of history.

Raphael Semmes.

Colonel Capers tells the following graphic story of the makeshifts and expedients resorted to by the Confederate effort at government to get a place among the nations of the earth, in a recent issue of the New York World:

The first to report for duty was Raphael Semmes, afterward commander of the Alabama. He was on hand before they had a deck for him to stand on, and worked for a short time in the Treasury Department at Montgomery. A merchant vessel was soon bought, and Semmes, after inspecting her, returned to Montgomery and announced to his fellow clerk, Colonel Caper:

"She is a good craft, sir; a good craft. When I have strengthened her timbers and cut her down to fighting trim, my word for it she will do brave work, sir."

She was accordingly altered and armed, and, with Semmes on her quarter-deck, made good his prediction to the dire cost of such as went down to the sea in ships under the stars and stripes in those days. The vessel was the Sumter.

But when she was ready to sail and her register made out, it was discovered at the last moment that the Treasury Department of the Confederate States had no seal. There wasn't an engraver to be found in Montgomery, and Semmes was impatient to get his papers and be off. So he and Colonel Capers, aided by a handy young army surgeon, and at the expense of two or three pen-knives, carved a rude seal upon a piece of boxwood which met the immediate need. Semmes got his register, and the Sumter set sail under the stars and bars. There was quite a time over the adoption of the flag. A considerable number were in favor of sticking to the old flag, with slight modifications, but Mr. Miles, of South Carolina, chairman of the Congressional Flag Committee, argued at length in his report against this sentimental idea, and added, by way of a clincher, that Liberia and the Sandwich Islands had flags very similar to ours, and the committee was not disposed, therefore, if for no other reason, "to keep, copy, or imitate it. They have no inclination to borrow second-hand what has already been pilfered or appropriated by a free negro community and a race of savages."

The very first Confederate flag that the sun ever saw, Colonel Capers testifies, was hoisted by Judge Clitheral at Montgomery. He was in the confidence of the flag committee, and as soon as they told him the design selected he got his lady friends together and had one made. On the day the committee was to report to Congress he mounted the roof of the Capitol, fixed his flag to the halyards of the staff and waited.

The recommendation of the committee was approved. He got his signal from below, and in the twinkling of an eye the new ensign of the South was floating proudly in the caresses of the gentle March wind. The news spread quickly through the city, and when Judge Clitheral shouted down from his lofty perch, "Three cheers for the Confederate flag!" the crowd answered with a mighty greeting that it was thought at the time, must have given an earache to the bronze statue on the dome of the far Northern Capitol.

Frightened on Picket.

Our command lay six miles from Nashville, on the Nolansville turnpike. The story had been circulated through camp and throughout the brigade that in front of my regiment a picket had been killed every night for two weeks. It was my lot to go on that watch one night.

It was dark when we relieved the preceding watch and mine began—10 p. m. How still everything was. It was a corn field where I stood, while in front was a large meadow. I could not keep my mind free from thinking of the fate of that picket post for the past two weeks. In a little while it seemed as if I had been on that post about forty-eight hours and no relief had come. You see, my heart and my thoughts were both on the double-quick, and I measured time by them.

Hark! A puff of wind rattles those serried ranks of spookish sentinel cornstalks standing like grim guardians of the grave. It was a spookish place, I can assure you—what with those dead lines of cornstalks and the aforementioned story.

I wheeled to confront the noise. As I wheeled I felt my hat rising on my head and my heart rising in my mouth, trying its best to get out and see what was going on. Fact is, I was ghostly scared. I expected the same fate which had befallen my predecessors. I was on the lookout to prevent it; and now when I heard the noise of the coming enemy I was too badly scared to accomplish anything like good work.

I looked from whence the sound had come. I involuntarily raised my gun. Yes, there he came. I had the drop on him. He evidently had not yet caught sight of me, but was on the watch. He was not two rods distant. What stealthy movements. Such were the thoughts that coursed through my mind as I then stood at ready arms. I was ahead of him, that was evident. Influenced by such feelings how my heart cooled down—my hair, too, had lost its stiffness. I was a man again.

The more I looked at that fellow in the corn the plainer I saw him. It was too dark for anything but outlines, but these were painfully distinct—man and gun. How glad I was it was dark.

I advanced. I was within a rod of my enemy, ready to fire on the instant, when the moon struggling through a rift of the cloud revealed my man. His head was a great ear of smut corn, while in the darkness husks and stalks outlined the man with a gun so that I could see him plainly.

Advice Concerning Stomach Troubles and How to Remedy Them

Do not neglect indigestion which leads to all sorts of ills and complications. An eminent doctor once said that ninety five per cent of all the ills of the human body have their origin in a discorded stomach.

A physician who made a specialty of stomach troubles, particularly dyspepsia, after years of study perfected the formula from which Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are made.

Our experience with Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets leads us to believe them to be the greatest remedy known for the relief of acute indigestion and chronic dyspepsia. Their ingredients are soothing and healing to the inflamed membranes of the stomach. They are rich in pepsin, one of the greatest digestive aids known to medicine. The relief they afford is almost immediate. Their use with persistency and regularity for a short time brings about a cessation of the pains caused by stomach disorders.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets will insure healthy appetite, aid digestion and promote nutrition. As evidence of our sincere faith in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, we ask you to try them at our risk. If they do not give you entire satisfaction, we will return you the money you paid us for them, without question or formality. They come in three sizes, prices 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain them only at our store—The Rexall Store. Geo. W. Geddes. 1t

Notice to Contractors

Inviting proposals for paving, improving and maintaining Broadway street in the city of Butler, Indiana, from a point sixty feet north of the north line of Monroe street in Lingenfelter's addition to said city, south to south corporation line of said city of Butler, a total distance of forty-four hundred nineteen and one-tenth feet; also Main street in said city from the east corporation line of said city to the west curb line of West street (south) on east side of Packer's addition to said city, a distance of fifty-three hundred forty-one and seventy-six-one-hundreths feet.

Sealed proposals will be received by the common council of the city of Butler, DeKalb county, Indiana, at the office of said common council and city clerk of said city until two-thirty o'clock in the afternoon on the 5th day of April, 1910, at which time and place said bids will be publicly opened and duly considered, for the construction of the following described improvements, to wit:

Grading, curbing and paving Broadway street from a point sixty feet north of the north line of Monroe street in Lingenfelter's addition to said city, south to the south corporation line of said city of Butler, a total distance of four thousand four hundred nineteen and one-tenth feet; also Main street in said city from the east corporation line of said city to west curb line of West street (south) on east side of Packer's addition to said city a distance of fifty-three hundred forty-one and seventy-six-one hundredths feet, with vitrified brick, sheet asphalt, creosote block, bitulithic or saxite, laid on a concrete foundation, from curb line to curb line, placing the necessary marginal curbing, and curbing said roadway with cement or stone curbing, all as shown on plans and specifications on file in the office of the city clerk, in said city of Butler, as authorized by Preliminary Improvement Ordinance Number Sixty-eight, passed and adopted by the common council of said city on the 10th day of February, 1910.

The cost of the street and alley intersections shall be paid from a fund created by special assessment to be levied against all of the lands and lots situated in said city, or in cash, out of the general fund of said city, if said city shall be able to do so.

It is estimated that there will be about thirty-three thousand square yards of improvement, more or less.

In case the specifications permit the use of either, or any, one of two or more materials, the bidder must state specifically on which his bid is based.

Samples of the paving material bid upon, properly labeled, must be deposited in the office or council room of the city council before the time the bids are received or the bids will not be considered, and materials used in the formation of the wearing surface of the pavement will be strictly held to conform to such samples and to the contract and specifications.

All bids filed by those to whom contracts may be awarded, must be made upon the printed blanks provided therefor by the common council, and the price must be stated in words and figures, and in compliance with the instructions hereto attached—which blanks can be had on application to the city clerk, and must be accompanied by the usual statutory affidavit of non-collusion.

Each bidder is required to name in his proposal the following:

(a) A price for constructing catch basins complete, each.

(b) A price for constructing inlets to catch basins complete, each.

(c) A price for constructing manholes complete, each.

(d) A price per lineal foot for the combined curb and gutter.

(e) A price per lineal foot for concrete curb.

(f) A price per lineal foot for stone curb.

(g) A price per lineal foot for the necessary marginal stone curbing.

(h) A price per square yard for the particular kind or kinds of pavement bid upon, which price shall be for the improvement complete, including excavating, filling, grading, paving and concrete foundation, and maintenance of such improvement for a period of five years from completion thereof.

Each proposal shall be endorsed with the title of the work, the name of the bidder, and the date of its presentation. All bids shall be filed with the city clerk on or before the day and hour mentioned above, and stated in the advertisement, and no proposal presented after this time will be accepted by the common council.

Permission will not be given for the withdrawal, modification or explanation of any bid or proposal, after same has been filed.

The city civic engineer's estimate on most expensive kind of improvement provided for, is $89,954.00, and each bidder is required to deposit with his bid, a certified check for an amount not less than two and one-half per cent (2½ per cent) of the engineer's estimate of the cost of such work bid upon, but in no case shall any such check be less than the sum of one hundred dollars ($100 00), said check to be certified by a reputable bank doing buiness in the state of Indiana. In case the bid is not accepted, this check will be returned to the bidder, but if the bid is accepted, and the bidder shall refuse or neglect to enter into a contract with the city of Butler, Indiana, within ten (10) days from the time he shall have been notified of the acceptance of the same, said check shall be forfeited to the city of Butler, Indiana, as ascertained and liquidated damages for failure so to do.

Persons, firms or corporations submitting propositions shall demonstrate to the satisfaction of the common council that they have the proper facilities, expert workmen and experience to execute the contract in a proper manner, otherwise their bids will not be considered.

Plans and profiles are on file in the office of the city clerk and bidders are expected to examine them before submitting their bids. Bidders must satisfy themselves by personal examination of the location of the proposed work, and by such other means as they may choose, as to the accuracy of the estimates of the work to be done, and shall not at any time after the opening of the bids, dispute or complain of the statement or estimate of the city civil engineer, nor assert that there was any misunderstanding as to the nature or amount of the work to be done. The estimate is believed to be correct, and the city of Butler, Indiana, will not be responsible for any errors in the same or for any errors or inaccuracies in the plans, profiles or specifications. Such work of improvement to be fully completed on or before November 1, 1910.

The contractor will be required to make and execute a bond to the satisfaction of the common council for the faithful performance of his contract in a sum equal to fifty per cent (50 per cent) of the amount of such bid and contract, and a maintenance bond in the sum of twenty thousand dollars ($20,000.00) guaranteeing that such improvement will endure without need of repair for a period of five years from and after completion thereof.

Upon completion of the work the contractor shall pay to the city, as provided in section nine (9) of General Specifications, the cost of all inspection, which cost shall be computed by the city engineer at the rate of $2 00 per day for each day (Sunday excepted) from commencement of the work until its completion. No deduction will be made for time lost by the contractor when not working unless notice that work will suspend has been given to the city engineer before five (5) p. m. of the preceding day. When work is suspended during the forenoon, or before ten o'clock of the same day, or when work is suspended during the afternoon, no deduction will be made for less than one-half of a day.

The common council reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

L. C. BUEHRER,
City Clerk.

Mrs. McCosh was ill and under the care of a physician the first of the week.

In the passing away of Mr. Frank Ocker the neighborhood mourns the loss of a good man and highly respected citizen.

Miss Olive Fifer spent Saturday night with Mrs. Charles Keller.

Wm. Ball lost a valuable brood mare Sunday night.

Willis Tarbox is home from a several months stay in Texas. He reports his son Fred very much improved in health, which his many friends are very glad to hear.

The funeral of Frank Ocker was largely attended. The pall bearers were Jonathan Haverstock, John Huyck, John Penick, William Ashby, William Deems and William Ball.

Mayme Huyck dismissed school Tuesday to attend Mr. Ocker's funeral Next Saturday is the last day.

A few friends of Charles Ball and family met at their home last Wednesday evening for the purpose of surprising them, but—well, that treacherous telephone let the secret out. Nevertheless, they had a good time, and Mrs. McCosh and Mrs. Ball were each presented a nice piece of silver by the L. A. S. of Memorial Chapel, for which they give the Aid a very hearty "thank you." The Aid served doughnuts, pickles and coffee.

A Good Beginning

Everything in later life depends upon how we began it. You cannot be successful in life if you haven't good health. To insure good health in later life it is necessary to start right. Many of life's serious ills are caused by constipation, indigestion and liver trouble. The best way to cure them in old or young is by the use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what we claim, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 9-1m

Mr. Yates, wife and daughter of near Hamilton were the guests of Rev. Thomas' Friday.

Harry Smith was in Toledo Friday and Saturday.

The meeting at the Christian church closed Friday evening with a reception for the new members and helpers. Ice cream, cake and coffee were served in the basement. O. E. Hamilton, the evangelist, is now conducting meeting at St Joe Mrs F. A. Thomas and children Sundayed in Hamilton.

Mrs H. B. Akins is home from Wartenbees' where she has been sewing the past two weeks.

Wes Shafer and wife have gone to South Bend where they expect to make their future home.

Some one wanted to do Newville a good turn when they wrote in the Record that two boys of Newville were entering the reform school together What a christain act it is to always run down your neighbor or neighboring town. Now we wish the writer to understand this, neither of those boys are from Newville. As to Hugh Rex, he was born here but left this place when a little tot, his raising has been wholly in Butler and while he has been here these few months he was still under the care of the trustee of Wilmington township And as to the Hensinger boy visiting his grandmother Mrs. Crom her residence is other than Newville township. He has never lived in this place at any time. So after all Newville is not so bad as pictured by the writer for the Record.

Edgerton

Mrs. Wilkinson, of Toledo, was the guest of Mrs William Fisher last week.

W. E Walling, of Kendallville, has a job at the Oak Mfg. Co. and moved his family to this town last Monday.

C. E. Everhart will return from Waverly, Virginia, in a short time with his family. He will work for Jakip Zeeb on his patch. There is no place like Edgerton.

George Bulbeck, of Elkhart, was in Edgerton last Saturday, shaking hands with his many friends

William Nihart, of Melburn, has moved his family to Edgerton and occupies the Kaiser property on East Linn street.

Thomas Brooks Fletcher, the last lecture on the course, spoke at the men's meeting Sunday afternoon, to a large crowd of men only, and in the evening he spoke to a mass meeting at the opera house; the theatre was crowded. He spoke for about an hour and left the platform, but the crowd applauded until he returned and spoke twenty minutes more. His subject was "Judas Iscarlot." His lecture Monday evening was, "Unprepared for Emergencies" and lasted two and a half hours; and there was the best of attention from start to finish. Every one who heard him at any of the three meetings speaks of him in glowing terms. Should he ever come to Edgerton again he will have packed houses.

Franklin

Cyrus Rosenberry was on the sick list Tuesday.

Mr Walter's sale was well attended considering the busy time for the farmers.

Roscoe Yarlot and wife, of Dillon, spent Sunday with the latter's parents, F. A. Huntington and wife.

Rev. Davis was calling on friends in this neighborhood last week.

A surprise was given George Walters and wife Wednesday night by their neighbors and friends. They expect to leave for Tennessee in a short time.

Freeman Fifer and wife were at Auburn Monday forenoon.

Mrs George King is again able to ride out.

Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell and Miss Mamie spent Sunday evening with Grover Klinkel and wife.

Freeman Fifer was at Hamilton Sunday.

The little son of Sim Spake was quite sick a few days the last of the week.

The people on this street are well supplied with peddling wagons, as we have one on Monday, two on Tuesday and another one on Friday. No need of going hungry.

Mr. Lowe, the assessor, is busy at his work and seems to give good satisfaction.

THE DEKALB COUNTY HERALD

VOLUME XLI — BUTLER, DEKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, FRIDAY, APRIL 1, 1910 — NUMBER 13

FACTS!

Tennyson or Longfellow could take a worthless piece of paper, write a poem on it and make it worth $5,000---that's genius. Morgan can write a few words on a sheet of paper and make it worth $5,000,000.00---that's capital. Your wife can buy a coat for $12.50, but prefers one that will cost $50.00---that's natural. Anyone can write a check for $90,000,000.00, but it wouldn't be worth a dime---that's rough. There are bankers who will tell you that they are better than we are---that's gall. As bankers, we are not too modest to say we are as good as the BEST---that's the truth.

Hard Coal

During the past severe winter coal dealers all over the country were unable to supply the demand for hard coal, and anyone familiar with the situation in Butler will know that a great many hard coal burners were forced to go out on this account. This was brought about for several reasons, but the principal one is that hard coal is only mined in one state, Pennsylvania, and the supply is limited especially during the winter months. In order to keep the mines busy during the summer we are able to buy hard coal at a discount, and we likewise give the consumers the benefit of the low price. The only way to be absolutely sure that you have hard coal to burn next winter is to buy it early. We are now prepared to deliver coal at spring prices, and during the month of April will sell at $6 80 per ton, delivered. Coal that has to be carried from wagon to bin will be charged at 50 cents per ton additional and coal delivered at car or bin at $6 50. These prices are for cash, as we are obliged to pay spot cash and we cannot sell it otherwise.

Hard coal will not deteriorate in quality when kept under cover, and we advise everyone to get their coal early and be sure of having fuel for next winter.

TOLEDO & INDIANA REORGANIZED

Will Build Through Butler Says Toledo Blade

Reorganization of the Toledo & Indiana railroad was completed late yesterday afternoon, when the new corporation to be known as the Toledo & Indiana Traction Co. elected the following officers and directors:

President, S. C. Schenck; vice president, S. D. Carr; secretary, C. F Chapman, Jr.; treasurer, D. D. Schenck; directors, S. C. Schenck, S. D. Carr, Thomas H. Tracy, D. D. Schenck and C. F. Chapman, Jr.

All the officers and directors are Toledo men. S. C. Schenck was president of the road for several years previous to the receivership.

Following the election, H. C. Warren was reappointed general manager and C. B. Kleinhans as auditor.

Just previous to the meeting of the stockholders the committee of the majority bondholders paid to C. F. M. Niles, former receiver for the Toledo & Indiana Railroad Co., the amount of the committee's bid, $1,556,000. In return Mr. Niles executed a deed to the Toledo & Indiana Traction Co., which is now in full control of the property.

One of the important features of the deal is that the road will be extended from Bryan to Fort Wayne, Indiana, in the near future. In making the improvement the company will follow the right-of-way paralleling the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern and passing through Butler, Indiana. The route was laid out and the right-of-way obtained under the direction of former General Manager E. Darrow.

The company will purchase some new rolling stock and make important improvements in the schedule.

Methodist Church Notes

The minister will preach at 10:30 and 7. Reports will be made for the year. A large choir will sing. We desire to make these meetings evangelistic in character. Members may be received and baptized.

The Sunday school will observe this as Home Missionary day. Prizes will be given to the children having the largest offering. All are cordially invited to these meetings.

The Ladies' Aid will meet with Mrs. O. T. Knisely. Let all be present.

THIRD ANNUAL ICE CREAM OPENING AT SI.'S

Wednesday Evening, April 6th

In making this, my third annual opening, I wish to call special attention to QUALITY—having contracted for the entire product of both milk and cream from the Jersey herd belonging to Mr. Frank Reynolds, whose farm adjoins the city on the east, which insures uniformity together with quality. The cream will be of my own manufacture and strictly a Butler home product, having purchased adequate machinery for the complete manufacture, and a trial or sample will, I trust, please the most particular of my patrons. A visit to the Reynolds dairy will further convince you of the quality and cleanliness of the cream I am using.

Prof. Parker's Orchestra will be in attendance, together with Master Clare Mast, of Edgerton, the 13-year-old boy piano arsist.

Thanking you for past favors, and asking for my share of patronage the coming season, I am,

Yours truly,
SI.

GEORGE CUMMINS BURNED TO DEATH

From Explosion Caused By Pouring Kerosene on Coals in Cook Stove

George W. Cummins, the man who was burned last night by an explosion in his home on Montgomery street, died this morning shortly after 2 o'clock at St. Joshep's hospital. He lost consciousness early in the evening and was unconscious until his death.

The accident occurred at 6:30 last evening, when Mr. Cummins was alone in the house. Mrs. Anna Gary heard the explosion and ran into the house only to see Cummins enveloped in flames, fighting desperately to get out of the burning building.

The neighbors called the fire department and the police ambulance and the injured man was rushed to St. Joseph's hospital, where Dr. McArdie attended him. It could be seen from the first that his burns were serious.

An examination of the rooms this morning revealed the fact that he had been in the act of pouring kerosene on the fire in the kitchen stove preparatory to lighting it. There had been no fire in the stove all day and he had laid it up with coke.

The oil can was torn in two and the burning oil was thrown over a gasoline stove, which exploded. Cummins ran out into the back yard and was climbing the fence when neighbors smothered the flames with a rug. The clothes were burned off his back, however, and one of his arms was burned so severely that the flesh dropped off.

Mr. Cummins had just returned home from work and had called the people who live around the corner and asked them for his keys, which they kept for him. He returned to the house, saying he had brought some meat home for his cat, "Teddy." The next thing the neighbors knew he was calling for help and rushing around in the house.

Mrs. Gary heard the screams and ran into the burning building in time to see him make a dive for the hallway yelling for her to get his "box," which he kept locked up in a cupboard. He then turned and ran out of the back door.

Mrs. Gary grabbed the box which Cummins had been so anxious to save and followed the unfortunate man out of the house. She, with the aid of several neighbors, extinguished the flames and called the fire department.

The box which Mr. Cummins tried to save is twelve inches square and is locked with a heavy padlock. No one knows what it contains and the woman to whom he entrusted it refuses to allow anyone to open it. She says he had told her to allow no one but his daughter, Georgia, to see what was in it. It may be that it contains valuable papers or family relics, but the neighbors cannot understand why it may not be opened now. It is causing a great deal of excitement in the vicinity of the Cummins home.

Mr. Cummins is survived by a son and two daughters, two brothers and a half-brother. The son is James Cummins, of Baker street, and the daughters are Georgia, with whom he made his home, and Mrs. Maude Van Benfeisen, of Toledo, whom Georgia was visiting at the time of the accident. The brothers are Charles, of Detroit, and John, of this city. R B. Slentz is a half brother. The funeral arrangements will not be made until after the relatives from Toledo arrive.

A curious circumstance connected with the case is that R. B. Slentz, the half-brother, was the victim of an explosion of much the same kind several years ago. No one, however, was seriously hurt then, but the inside of the house was badly burned. Cummins lived on the second floor of the Slentz house at the time.—Saturday's Fort Wayne News.

The funeral was held in Fort Wayne Sunday, and the remains were brought here over the Wabash, Monday, and conveyed to Edgerton for interment. Several of the citizens met the friends at the depot as a token of respect for the deceased.

Mr. Cummins was a resident of Butler for a number of years. He was a member in good standing of the Maccabee order and carried $1,000 life insurance. He is survived by three children, James the son, and daughters Maude and Georgia.

Cline Nominated

At the congressional convention held in Fort Wayne, Wednesday, the honors were given to Cyrus Cline, having received the unanimous vote of the convention.

The distinguished congressman was present, and at the close of the nomination made a short speech and expressed his appreciations of the honors tendered him by the party. In his nominating address, S. A. Powers, of Angola, said that he had been a friend and neighbor of Cyrus Cline for many years and had never known him to take advantage of anyone or to shrink from his duty at any time. Fred Fike, F. J. Dunten and other distinguished democrats expressed their confidence of a victory unparalleled on next November.

In Honor of Mrs. Thomas

In honor of Mrs. Mary Thomas a six o'clock dinner was given at the home of Mrs. S. G. Stone on Wednesday evening by Sunday school class No. 12, of the M. E. church. Mrs. Thomas is one of the faithful members of the class being held in high esteem owing to her loyalty and sincere christian character and will be greatly missed. As an expression of their appreciation the members of the class presented her a beautiful book in which was inscribed the names of each member. Our best wishes follow her and her family to their new home.

Cupid Gets the Teachers.

In an effort to ascertain why so many of Seattle's 783 school teachers are resigning weekly the fact was developed that Cupid has claimed 132 from the number since September 7. The School Board is gloomy over the outlook and the public is clamoring for men teachers, because if they should get married during the school year they would remain at their posts. The women teachers marry and depart.

SUNSHINE NOT GOOD FOR ALL.

Blonde Races Fail to Thrive in Climate Like American Northwest.

Charles E. Woodruff, of Manila, P. I., discusses in the Medical Record the physical degeneration what is found to occur in north European races when they settle in the dry, bright atmosphere of the American northwest. Although the first generation does well, the second one is feeble, easily attacked by tuberculosis and other chronic diseases and the families die out in a few generations. The brunette races do well in bright sunshine because they are accustomed to it, while the blondes are made nervous by it. But it is the northern blonde races that give us the strong brains that we need to perpetuate our nation, and these do not come from the brunette races of the south. It is important for us to preserve these blonde types, and to that end it is necessary that physicians should advise them to keep from the influences that injure them. The best Aryan blood is being wasted from our nation at present. Scandinavian colonization is impossible in the tropics. The average brain weight and intelligence increase as we go north in Europe, and this brain weight does count. We should favor the emigration of these northern races and preserve them as far as possible. Western and southern Alaska furnish a climate that is congenial to them. As a health resort for neurasthenics it is also of value, the cool, damp air being helpful and quieting to the nervous system.

CHANGE THE VIBRATION.

It Makes for Health.

A man tried leaving off meat, potatoes, coffee, and etc., and adopted a breakfast of fruit, Grape-Nuts with cream, some crisp toast and a cup of Postum.

His health began to improve at once for the reason that a meat eater will reach a place once in a while where his system seems to become clogged and the machinery doesn't work smoothly.

A change of this kind puts aside food of low nutritive value and takes up food and drink of the highest value, already partly digested and capable of being quickly changed into good, rich blood and strong tissue.

A most valuable feature of Grape-Nuts is the natural phosphate of potash grown in the grains from which it is made. This is the element which transforms albumen in the body into the soft gray substance which fills brain and nerve centres.

A few days' use of Grape-Nuts will give one a degree of nervous strength well worth the trial.

Look in pkgs. for the little book, "The Road to Wellville." "There's a Reason."

THE STORY OF CORN. KING OF KINGS

If all the corn raised in Missouri in 1909 had been shipped to market it would have made 21,924 trains of twenty-eight freight cars each, extending in one unbroken line from Portland, Me., to San Francisco. If all the corn raised in Missouri in 1909 had been marketed at the price prevailing in December it would have brought $118,265,400, an amount sufficient to pay the public debt of fourteen of the largest cities in America: St. Louis, Kansas City, Louisville, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Galveston, Detroit, Indianapolis, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, San Francisco and Seattle. If all the corn raised in Missouri in 1909 had been exported it would have supplied the European trade for four years. Had the European export for one year only been taken from the Missouri output, there would have remained enough corn to allow fifty bushels for every man, woman and child in the State, or two bushels for every man, woman and child in the 80,000,000 in the United States to-day. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat exultingly presents the above figures.

Yet Missouri is by no means alone; there are twenty-four other states, each of which produce more than 15,000,000 bushels of corn each year, eight others whose individual output each year is in excess of 100,000,000 bushels. No wonder that corn has been crowned king, particularly in view of the fact, as Secretary Wilson has figured it, that the 1909 crop, of the value of 1,720,000,000 (nearly equal to the value of the clothing and personal adornments of 76,500,000 people) "has grown up from the soil and out of the air in 120 days, $15,000,000 a day for one crop; nearly enough for two Dreadnaughts daily for peace or war." The gold and silver coin and bullion of the United States are not of greater value. The best ear of corn growing in Iowa last year sold for $160. The best yield reported was 153 bushels to the acre. Had the man who grew the record yield grown corn as good as the best ear his acre would have been worth $1,836,000.

The farmers of the corn belt have been slow to learn the lesson of these yields. The awakening did not come until a half dozen years ago. Thanks to the splendid work of Prof. P. G. Holden and his famous corn gospel trains to the various farmers' institutes, to the State and county fairs, and to the sterling work of the progressive farm journals, the average production in Iowa has been increased from 25 bushels in 1901 to 32.2 in 1908. Now that the corn growers have had visual, tangible evidence of increased profits by using care in selecting and breeding seed corn, they are ready to adopt what were the untried theories of a few years ago, but are the proven facts of to-day. They have discovered that the State average need not stop at 32.2 bushels per acre, any more than it needed to stop at 25 a half dozen years ago.

Taking the 153-bushel yield of 1909 and averaging it with the smallest yield of the thirteen growers who, with yields in excess of 71 bushels to the acre, competed for the Iowa record last year, an average yield of 112 bushels to the acre is had. This is three and one-half times the average production of corn fields the State over. If this ratio could be maintained Iowa would yield each year an average of 1,088,000,000 bushels of corn, worth approximately $600,000,000 on the December market.

The metropolitan editor who emblazoned the motto, "Soak your seed corn," at the top of his editorial column regularly as the planting season approached finally became the sport of his confreres. But Iowa, being the largest agricultural State in the country, has at last learned that seed corn must be selected and bred as carefully and as scientifically as the fine live stock for which it is famous. Corn germination has become a study, corn growing is rapidly becoming a scientific achievement rather than a haphazard means of livelihood. Yet even with the delayed agronomic awakening the results already attained are simply astounding.

Four-fifths of all the billions of bushels of corn raised in the United States is used in live stock feeding. David Rankin of Tarkio, Mo., the largest farmer in America, raises a million bushels of corn each year, yet never has an ear to sell. On the other hand, he is constantly in the market to buy all his neighbors' corn. Other farmers do not go in for stock feeding on such an extensive scale, but the prodigal prosperity of the corn belt to-day is due to the fact that the farmers have learned to raise more corn, to feed the corn to stock, and through the manure to return to the soil the elements of fertility of which it had been robbed in growing the crop. Farming has thus become a sort of "On again, off again, Flanagan" proceeding with the bank accounts of the corn belt growing more plethoric as the success of this procedure has become generally realized.

But not all the corn is fed to stock or eaten in the form of hominy, bread or cakes. Of the total crop of 2,666,000,000 bushels raised in 1908, it is computed that 241,000,000 bushels were consumed in flour and grist mill products, 8,000,000 bushels in the manufacture of starch, 9,000,000 bushels for malt liquors, 40,000,000 bushels for glucose, 190,000,000 bushels for export and 13,000,000 bushels for seed; a total of 501,000,000 bushels, or 19 per cent of the entire crop. The remaining 81 per cent, or 2,165,000,000 bushels, was used almost entirely for feeding.

The crop king provides its subjects with bread, meat and sugar, to say nothing of whisky. Done into pones and hoecake, it brings "the smile that won't come off" to the faces of millions of darkies, and is rapidly becoming a more popular dish on the menu of prosperous white folks. A few years ago an exclusive corn barbecue was served in the capital city of Iowa, the occasion being known as the Feast of Fuos Eziam, which is maize soup spelled backwards. Everything on the bill of fare was a concoction of corn, and that the menu was by no means monotonous thousands who were hungry but were fed can testify. Fed to steers, corn supplies mankind with the best beef in the world, while annually the amount of corn converted into sugar and sugar products is rapidly increasing.

The average person has little or no idea of the extent to which corn starches, sirups, sugars, oils and dextrines are used. Corn starches are used in laundries, for food (jellies and puddings), for candies (gumdrops and lozenges), as sizes for stiffening and finishing warp and cop yarns and fabrics in textile industries; in paper manufacture as a filler and finisher; for cosmetics and asbestos; in brewing beer and ale and by alcohol manufacturers. Corn sirups are used for mixing with cane sirup and molasses in the preparation of mixed sirups for confectionery, baking, jams, jellies and preserves; for the manufacture of vinegar, brewing of beers; in the manufacture of chewing tobacco, food sauces; canning of meats, pastes and sizes; tanning of leather, blacking, printers' rollers, shoe polishes; for finishing molds in iron foundries, in extracts, such as logwood, etc., and in silvering glass for mirrors. Corn sugars are used in the manufacture of caramel or sugar coloring and lactic acid for tanning, in the brewing of beers, ales, porters, etc., and in vinegar. The uses of corn oil are the manufacture of soap, soft soap and soap powders, oilcloth and leather, paragol or rubber substitute; for edible purposes, shortening for bread and cakes, for frying and cooking and salad oil, for cup greases and screw-cutting oil, paints and varnishes and for sizing in textile industries. Dextrines are used in sizes for lowing lines of business; In the textile industry they are used in sizes for strengthening the fiber and finishing the fabric; for cloth, carpet, twine, etc.; for thickening colors for calico, and other printing; leather dressings, pastes; for food sauces, gums and glues and ink mucilage.

American ingenuity has made corn even more useful than the hog. There is no "squeal" loss to corn, as the thrifty farmers know who use the cobs as fertilizers (because of the potash they contain), or as winter fuel (three tons of cobs having a fuel value equal to one ton of hardwood), the cornstalks and leaves for dairy food, the husks for mattresses and the entire plant (root, ears, stalk and all) for silage. But the commercial uses of the plant itself are many and inventive genius is coming each year to find new corn possibilities.

From the husks are made a cheap grade of hats, used to a large extent in the southern States. In the northern States they make a coarse doormat out of the husks. They are also used as a packing in the manufacture of horse collars.

The woody part of the corn plant, such as the outer shell, is composed largely of cellulose. Cellulose is used in the manufacture of explosives. It is treated with chemical compounds, such as nitric and sulphuric acids. Gun cotton is the result. Nitro glycerine, a very powerful explosive, can be very readily made from the hard, woody portions of the corn plant. From this cellulose is also made what is called pyroxylin varnish.

After an ear of corn has been shelled there is a soft, fuzzy coat upon the cob. This is called "corn down." It is used to a large extent in padding mattresses.

COLD-STORAGE FIGURES.

Three Billion Dollars' Worth of Food on Ice Each Year.

While the housewives are being driven by the high prices to boycott meat, here is what the ice and refrigeration blue book says is being held in cold storage, says the Philadelphia Record:

Six million calves.
Fourteen million cattle.
Twenty-five million sheep and lambs.
Fifty million hogs.

According to these figures from the official guide book, circulated only among the cold storage men, there is in storage one entire animal for each adult in the United States, with enough whole animals left over to give two to each family.

This meat is being held in 558 cold storage plants. In addition it may interest the worried housekeepers to know that in seventy-eight fish-freezing plants in the country there are fish waiting to be doled out that are valued at $25,000,000.

In other cold-storage plants during any year now, acording to the storage men's own statistics, the struggling wage-earner will find:

One billion eight hundred million eggs.

One hundred thirty million pounds of poultry.

Fruits valued at $50,000,000.

Then, besides, there are millions of pounds of potatoes, onions, thousands of turtles, eels, cases of canned goods, and milk, butter and cheese valued at nearly $100,000,000.

The total value of meat and foodstuffs placed in cold storage during a year at present is, according to the figures of the storage concerns, close to $3,000,000,000.

THE lobster is one of the most peculiar fish in the seas, says a writer in the Williamsport (Pa.) Grit. It passes through several stages of life before it reaches adult development, encountering new perils in each one. In the first three stages the lobster is a helpless little swimming speck with the instinct of a rounder and as regardless of his welfare. His greatest joy is in pouncing upon and grasping the speck of fish which he gets outside of before another little lobster appears to test the claim. Even while he is eating this he may be himself pounced upon by a larger specimen of his species and devoured in the same way.

Fishing for lobsters is a very simple operation. The fisherman takes his traps in an open boat, rows to the fishing ground, which is usually in some sheltered bay or cove, drops the traps already baited overboard and fastens them to an outline. There is nothing more for him to do except to go along the line at stated intervals and raise the traps. Occasionally a trap will hold a half dozen good sized lobsters. Usually a number of smaller ones are caught with each of the larger ones, and if he is a law abiding fisherman these are dumped back into the sea. If he is not, they make a tit bit for some epicure if the fisherman can get them ashore unnoticed.

Lobsters are found all along the Atlantic coast, but are chiefly sought from Maine to New Jersey. The best of lobsters comes from the north coast and it is there, of course, that the fishing is most vigorously prosecuted.

"Anybody who looks at that picture'ud know Smith's by himself. They ain't no one in the paintin' with him."—Denver Post.

BOYS WHO ARE TRUSTED

Millions of Dollars Carried by Youngsters of New York's Financial District.

THEY VERY SELDOM GO ASTRAY

Bearers of Large Sums of Money Occasionally Play "Craps" on Their Way.

The disappearance of a $10,000 bill from the pocket of Benson Lang, a 17-year-old messenger boy, while on his way from the brokerage house of Hornblower & Weeks to the National City Bank, was but an instance in a traffic of millions that is being carried on daily in the financial district below the "dead line" at Fulton street, with no more security than the hands or pockets of youngsters who ages range from 15 to 24 years.

Yet with all the temptation put before the youths instances of misappropriation are exceedingly rare, the New York World says. Wall street trusts them as implicitly as it does its bonded express companies, its highly paid bank presidents and cashiers and insurance presidents and directors, who go astray with much more frequency than the small boy custodians of great wealth. One boy will frequently handle a million dollars in checks, cash and security.

One day a prominent Wall street house sent a boy to a bank with coupons calling for $10,000 in currency. Three hours later he was found playing craps in a hallway. He had won 33 cents. He had obtained the currency on the coupons and it reposed in his inside pocket. A crap game was raided on the sidewalk in New York two months ago and in the pocket of John Connor, a district messenger, the police found $8,960. It was brought out in court that he had been sent by a broker to deposit the money in a bank.

Messengers carrying thousands of dollars in securities also travel every weekday up and down town in the elevated and subway. Boys are even sent to Philadelphia. Boston and Chicago with large sums. A boy will take a million dollars in bonds to Philadelphia at an expense of about $6, whereas an express company's charges would be about $40.

The boys regularly employed as messengers by banks and firms get from $4 to $15 a week. They are known as "runners." Each down town messenger office has a number of boys who are called "trusties" by their companies. They are the ones who regularly carry funds. Great care is taken in their selection, so that none but those of absolute respectability and good character are ever engaged. No boy is given this work who lives in a lodging house. He must live with his parents or responsible guardians. Their pay is no greater than that of the boy who delivers a letter, and not nearly as remunerative as that of the youth who escorts Adamless Eves to the theater.

BAPTIZES FOUR THROUGH ICE.

Nothwithstanding the thermometer registered 7 degrees above zero here the Rev. George Yost, pastor of the Mennonite church, at Shamokin, Pa., broke the ice, which was eight inches thick, and baptized four persons. A man, woman, girl and boy underwent the icy plunge. Arriving at the lake an enthusiastic number of Mennonites surrounded the Rev. Mr. Yost and those who ventured into the water. The pastor prayed, the congregation sang, after which the baptisms occurred, the Rev. Mr. Yost ducking each convert under the water.

CHOKE ELEPHANT TO DEATH.

Fargo, the largest elephant in a circus at Evansville, Ind., became insane and it was determined to kill him, as veterinarians said he would never be well. He had been suffering from rheumatism for more than a year and the intense pain crazed him. A noose was tied in the middle of a large rope and the ends were run through pulleys and each was fastened to a trace chain that dangled from a harnessed horse. When the noose had been adjusted the horse was started, thus choking the elephant to death. Fargo fell to the ground and died in a few minutes.

ONE YEAR'S TOLL of DEATH on the GREAT LAKES

With the foundering of two ships, the burning of another and the loss of fifty-two lives in the bitter cold and storm of the first weeks in December, the 1909 season of great lakes navigation closed a season in serious disasters, loss of life and property and tragic incident one of the most remarkable in the history of shipping on the lakes. Storm and wrecks claimed more than a hundred lives in the eight months of navigation. Property of value estimated to be greater than $2,000,000 was destroyed. Channels were blocked by the hulks of lost ships and the shores were hardly ever free from wreckage after the middle of April.

The season of 1909 was the most disastrous to shipping of any with the exception of 1905. The property loss in that year was placed at $2,341,500. Fifty-one ships were wrecked representing a net tonnage of 98,095. The following table for the six years prior to 1906 gives some idea of the tribute shippers must pay.

Year.	Vessels lost.	Net Tonnage Capacity.	Value.
1905	51	98,095	$2,341,500
1904	31	27,857	843,600
1903	41	28,977	185,370
1902	28	39,455	870,400
1901	54	28,301	745,500
1900	47	27,700	534,000

The season of 1906 was disastrous above the average. Sixty-two vessels of various sorts passed out of existence. Their value was $1,212,000. In 1907, forty-eight ships were lost, of an estimate value of $700,000. In 1908 fifty-three were total wrecks, representing a property loss of $634,000.

The mystery which has attended the loss of so many vessels was illustrated in the case of the Adella Shores. Apparently in perfect condition and manned by a crew of experienced sailors, she passed the Soo into Lake Superior, on April 29. No man ever saw her again. Days afterward a few pieces of wreckage were found floating in the vicinity of Whitefish Point. They were the last signs of the Adella Shores.

Even more mysterious was the loss of the big freighter D. M. Cleminson, on Lake Superior, Dec. 5, 1898. This boat carried a crew of twenty-four men. How or why she foundered is one of the unexplained tragedies of lake navigation. The bodies of two of the crew were found, but they bore no evidence to explain the disaster.

The climax came with the loss of the Beasemer and Marquette car ferry No. 2, plying between Conneaut and Port Stanley. The car ferry was a large and very seaworthy boat, valued at nearly half a million dollars with cargo. It left Conneaut for its regular trip Dec. 7. It carried a crew of thirty-one men and one passenger.

The loss of the car ferry will go down in lake history as another unexplained tragedy. At first no alarm was felt for the big craft. It was thought she had sheltered until the violence of the storm should be past. Two days went by, then three and four. Anxiety gave way to fear and finally to the conviction that hope was futile. Five days after the car ferry disappeared mute evidence was found which proved the wreck beyond all doubt.

The heavy loss of life on the Great Lakes last season has aroused strong opposition to prolonging the season of navigation into the storms and gales of the early winter. Most of the sacrifice of life and loss of property comes at the beginning or close of the season. The Pittsburg Steamship Company, the lake branch of the United States Steel Corporation, has announced that it will no longer needlessly imperil the lives of its men for the sake of bringing a few more tons of ore to the lower lake ports. Hereafter, it is announced, navigation will close on Nov. 30, no matter what conditions may be.

The disasters of the year have called attention to the necessity for wireless telegraph outfits on lake vessels. It is said that at the present time hardly more than fifty of the 2,500 boats on the lakes are equipped with wireless. Practically all the loss of life and property on the lakes is confined to freight boats. It has been many years since a passenger boat was wrecked or a passenger lost in a disaster of any kind.

For Pain in Chest

For sore throat, sharp pain in lungs, tightness across the chest, hoarseness or cough, lave the parts with Sloan's Liniment. You don't need to rub, just lay it on lightly. It penetrates instantly to the seat of the trouble, relieves congestion and stops the pain.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. A. W. Price, Fredonia, Kans., says: "We have used Sloan's Liniment for a year, and find it an excellent thing for sore throat, chest pains, colds, and hay fever attacks. A few drops taken on sugar stops coughing and sneezing instantly."

Sloan's Liniment

is easier to use than porous plasters, acts quicker and does not clog up the pores of the skin. It is an excellent antiseptic remedy for asthma, bronchitis, and all inflammatory diseases of the throat and chest; will break up the deadly membrane in an attack of croup, and will kill any kind of neuralgia or rheumatic pains.

All druggists keep Sloan's Liniment. Prices 25c., 50c., & $1.00.

A Pepper Duel.

A certain literary and diplomatic friend of ours once took part in a pepper duel at a foreign restaurant. He was provoked to the contention by the quantity of stimulating condiment that a stranger across the table indulged in. The stranger sprinkled an unconscionable quantity of red pepper upon his food and proceeded to devour it, to the wonder and admiration of onlookers. Thereupon, with studied nonchalance, the American swallowed an immense piece of chili pepper. Then the stranger added more red pepper then the American another larger slice, covered with cayenne, and so on till it seemed as if both would explode, while the other diners looked on aghast, the American finally winning out with a prodigious dose defying all emulation.—Century.

Too Much for His Faith.

"The late Bishop Hare," said a Sioux Falls physician, "used, very reasonably, to impute skepticism to misunderstanding. He once told me about a Philadelphia business man of skeptical tendencies who said to him:

"'My dear Mr. Hare, I do not refuse to believe in the story of the ark. I can accept the ark's enormous size, its odd shape, and the vast number of animals it contained. But when I am asked, my dear doctor, to believe that the Children of Israel carried this unwieldy thing for 40 years in the wilderness—well, there, I'm bound to say, my faith breaks down.'"

P. T. Barnum, the famous circus man, once wrote: "I have had the Cuticura Remedies among the contents of my medicine chest with my shows for the last three seasons, and I can cheerfully certify that they were very effective in every case which called for their use."

The Prose Translation.

The difficulty of forcing the door of the understanding is amusingly illustrated in a story related by Mrs. Roger A. Pryor in her recent book, "My Day: Reminiscences of a Long Life." Mrs. Pryor's daughter, Mrs. Rice, once attempted to introduce William Cullen Bryant to a class of poor white boys she was teaching at a night-school in her home on a plantation in Virginia.

She had taught them to read and write, had given them some arithmetic and geography; even some Latin, and was then minded to awaken the esthetic instincts which she believed must exist in the poor fellows. She read the beautiful poem "To a Water-Fowl."

"Now, boys," she eagerly said, "tell me how you would feel if you had seen this"

There was dead silence. Appealing to the most hopeful of her pupils, she received an enlightening response:

"I wouldn't think nuthin'."

"What would you say?" she persisted.

"Wal, I reckon I'd say, 'Thar goes a duck!'"

But he added this inaudibly.

COUNTS PRICE OF PROGRESS.

Race Has Paid Highly for Development of Past Century.

What, then, let us ask, has been the price of this century of unprecedented progress? To begin with, we have grown distrustful of enthusiasm, and have become somewhat cynical and superficial withal. We skim the surface of life, without time to make our impressions our own. We are on the way to become a spiritually impoverished people, somewhat lacking in the generous qualities which can sustain a great friendship or a splendid dream. We are ultra-sophisticated, yet easily deluded. In the place of rest, appreciation, we have acquired unrest. We are like men who, while following the chase, have forgotten what is the quarry. If it is happiness we are pursuing, who knows but what she has doubled on her tracks and is now behind us? Yet we strain breathlessly forward, never pausing to ask, "To what purpose?"

Having become cogs in the great machine that we ourselves have builded, how are we to snatch opportunity for thought, for contemplation, for the leisurely savoring of life, amid the ceaseless whirring of the wheels? Is mediocrity to be the price the race must pay for its civilization? The modern schedule leaves no time for the secretion of those by-products of the soul which give joy and distinction to life. If the race continues to cut itself off more and more from this sustaining communion, where at last will we turn for leaders, or even for men?—W. C. Roberts, in Craftsman.

The Hypocrite a Genius.

Really to be a hypocrite must require a horrible strength of character. An ordinary man such as you or I generally fails at last because he has not enough energy to be a man. But the hypocrite must have enough energy to be two men. It is said that a liar should have a good memory. But a hypocrite must have not only a good memory of the past, but a consistent and creative vision of the future; his unreal self must be so far real to him. The perfect hypocrite should be a trinity of artistic talent. He must be a novelist like Dickens to create a false character. He must be an actor like Garrick to act it. And he must be a business man like Carnegie to profit by it. Such a genius would not be easy to find in any country.—G. K. Chesterton.

What Might Have Been.

"That man Bliffin lacks courage and energy."

"Yes, confound him!"

"Why do you say that?"

"Because he was courting my wife long before I met her. If he had had a little more courage and energy—But what's the use of talking about it now?"

FARM AND GARDEN

Coal Ashes Are Worth Saving.

In many sections of the country coal is the principal winter fuel used by farmers and a large quantity of ashes result which are usually looked on as waste, but an authority says there is more value in coal ashes than is generally realized by the farmer. For the amelioration of heavy clay land they are exceptionally valuable. This is particularly so with the ashes of soft coal, as such usually are reduced almost to a dust. Coal ashes have a fertilizer value. This opinion, however, is not held generally. The coal beds contain phosphorus, potash, nitrogen and lime, as well as the other less important ingredients. When the original trees out of which were formed the coal beds were reduced to coal the mineral elements remained in them, and consequently those same elements go with the ashes.

One reason why people have formed an idea that coal ashes contain no fertility is that the trees now grown have in them less carbon than those in the old days and thus the percentage of other elements to carbon is probably greater now than then, which gives a larger value to our wood ashes, but does not annihilate the value in the coal ashes. Ashes can be used to advantage without sifting, but large quantities of half-burned coal are by some considered a detriment to the soil.—Rural World.

Dipping Sheep Effectively.

To rid sheep of external parasites or the scab mite they should be dipped in some effective dip. Coal tar dips are effective, nonpoisonous and do not ordinarily injure the wool. They are therefore considered among the best. Before using all dips should be tested. Mix one teaspoonful of dip with fifty to seventy-five of water, according to directions. Wrap a few ticks or bedbugs in a gauze and dip them in this mixture for thirty seconds. Then place them under a tumbler, and if they are not dead in six hours the dip is not strong enough. It should be made strong enough to make a thirty-second dip effective. Sheep are to be kept in the dip one minute. Place the dip in the tank before the water, so the mixture will be uniform.

The best time to dip is when the wool is one-fourth to one-half inch long, so that the dip will adhere to the fleece. If the ticks are present at shearing time the whole flock should be dipped at once to prevent the ticks from getting to the lambs.

Heavy Seeds Give Best Plants.

To obtain a good stand of grain it is necessary to use the largest and plumpest grain for seed. Small or shrunken grain gives weak plants, many of which will fail to mature in an unfavorable season. A sudden change in temperature, a prolonged drought or a slight frost is more likely to destroy the weak plants than the strong. The increased yield at harvesting time is quite a consideration. In the illustration the heavy and light samples of barley A B C and D produced plants as indicated with corresponding letters above.

Keeping Farm Accounts.

Farmers who visited the Ohio State University were interested in the system of accounts used on the farm. While the land is not tilled for the same experimental purposes as the fields at the Agricultural Experiment Station at Wooster, a certain amount of experimentation has to be done in order to determine the most profitable methods of handling the land. These experiments are the same in kind as would be conducted by farmers generally. The accounts are kept in such form as to show the results of the different methods employed on the different fields.

Potash Content of Clay Soils.

According to a recent bulletin of the New Hampshire Station, the clay and clay loam soils carry sufficient potash for the production of maxium yields of hay, and that a large part of the potash applied in fertilizers is lost so far as the crop is concerned. In other words, the addition of commercial potash to such soils is unnecessary. When barnyard manure, which contains a large amount of potash, is added, the value lies, not in the potash, but in the other fertilizing elements, and in large part in the improvement of the physical condition of the soil.

Importance of Reading Matter.

The up-to-date farmer needs a good library as well as any other professional man. The progressive man reads some at all seasons of the year, but there is more time for reading in winter than in summer, especially of long evenings. Get good books of all kinds and read them. Every dollar spent in good books will bring $10 actual return, not counting the pleasure and general information derived from the reading.

Good Hog Sense.

It is not a good plan to take all the pigs from the sow, unless one or two of them can be turned with her some hours after, to draw the milk she will have at that time, and again, say after a lapse of twenty-four hours. The preferred way is to leave about two of the smallest with her for several days, and after that leave only one for two or three days more, by which time the flow of milk will have been so gradually diminished that no injury will result to the sow by keeping them entirely away from her. This extra supply of milk helps also to push the smaller pigs along in growth and put them more nearly on an equality in size with their thriftier mates.—Coburn's "Swine in America."

A Convenient Calf Trough.

A farmer near Paullina, Iowa, has been using an ingenious method for feeding his calves. It was suggested to him by the fact that he used a manure spreader in his sheds and consequently all obstructions that extended out a foot from the wall were in the way. As calves require a low manger, one can be hung on hinges so that when it is turned up it will not occupy more than five or six inches of space out from the wall. It may be any length, but it is better to have it made in sections about six feet long. The accompanying illustrations show the trough when it is all ready for feeding purposes, and also when it is hooked up close against the wall.

Cultivation for Forest Trees.

The young farmer forester should be experienced in the art of stimulating the growth of trees in natural groves by cultivation. When we come to think how hard the ground is in some woods it is really strange that trees get enough moisture to support themselves. The difference in the amount of rainfall absorbed by a level-plowed field and hard-baked hillside is very great, and it is wonderful how an oak or hickory growing on a hillside ever attains to great height and size.

Difference in Types.

The man who has been accustomed all his life to raising the lard type of hog will have his troubles when he comes to shift over to the bacon breeds. This has nothing to do with the merits of the breeds in question, but the feeding habits, the general character and make-up of the two types are different, and some time and possibly some expense is necessary before the experienced feeder of the one type can shift over and became a successful feeder of the other.

Selling Value of Cows.

The North Carolina experiment station proposes a plan to place a buying and selling value on cows on a basis of the yield and quality of their milk. According to the brief account of the plan it lays down a rule to fix a price for a cow at the rate of $12 per gallon of milk given per day that shows 3.5 per cent fat. To this add or subtract $1 for every one-fourth on 1 per cent fat which is above or below the 3.5 per cent.

Keeping Onions Frozen.

Most fruits and vegetables are injured more or less by freezing, but the onion may be kept all winter in a frozen condition without its eating qualities being affected. To keep them in a frozen condition, first let them freeze solid and then place them in a cold loft of the barn or other building protected on both sides with a heavy covering of hay or straw, to maintain an even temperature.

Protecting Tree Trunks.

The trunks of fruit trees may be wrapped with paper to protect them from mice and rabbits, the paper being tied on with a cord to hold it in place. Old newspapers may be used for the purpose, the care necessary being to see that the paper entirely covers the trunk of the tree high enough to prevent the rabbits reaching the exposed portion above the paper.

Cowpeas Enrich Soil.

Not only have cowpeas been found valuable as a soil-enriching crop, but they have proved to be most excellent feed for live stock used as a forage and cured hay. The hay used is comparatively rich in protein and makes good dairy feed, and is likewise good for young stock and work horses, fed in limited amounts.

Ventilation and Egg Fertility.

A common cause of the failure of fertile eggs to hatch is lack of sufficient ventilation The fresh air supply depends to a greater extent than is generally known on the difference in the temperature of the air inside the machine and that of the room in which the incubator stands.

Potato Bug Destroyer.

There appeared in some parts of Indiana last season a small bug with variegated wings which destroyed thousands of potato bugs. A half dozen bugs will quickly kill 100 or more of the potato bugs on a single plant. Specimens have been sent to the government for examination.

Lesson of the Boll Weevil.

Agricultural teachers have urged diversified farming for many years, but with little effect until the appearance of the boll weevil. This insect made cotton farming very precarious and has led to radical modifications in the systems of farming prevailing in that section.

Raising Chicks First Principle.

The feeding and growing of little chicks is an art which everyone must learn before they can wish for success in poultry raising. However, it is worth the trouble.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Creamed Crab Meat.

Cut the crab meat into dice. To a pint of the meat allow two tablespoonfuls of butter. Melt this in the saucepan, add two tablespoonfuls of flour and stir until smooth, then stir in a pint of milk, half cream, if you have it, season well with salt, paprika and pinch of nutmeg and stir to a smooth sauce. Now turn in the crab meat and a green pepper minced. Cook, stirring all the time, until very hot, then turn into a hot dish. Garnish with rings made of green peppers sliced crosswise.

White Cake Filling.

Heat two-thirds of a cupful of milk in a granite saucepan, add a piece of butter the size of an egg and two cupfuls of sugar. Stir constantly. Let the mixture come to a boil and add two squares of chocolate and a pinch of salt and cook until the mixture forms a soft ball, when tried in cold water. Remove from the stove, allow to cool for a few minutes, and add two teaspoonfuls of vanilla. Stir until it begins to thicken, then spread on the cake layers or loaf.

Salt Codfish, Boiled.

Soak over night before using, changing water at least once. Place it on the back of the stove, never allow it to boil—just simmer, until soft enough to pick apart very fine with a fork. For codfish cakes, have the potatoes nicely mashed, with milk and a little butter, proportion of one cupful of fish to three of potatoes, a little pepper, red or black. Dip in egg or not, as you prefer, before frying brown. To be made in cakes of a thickness to please.

Lamb Stew.

Take the neck or breast of lamb, parboil and cut in pieces, then put on in cold water, enough to cover it, adding a large onion, cut fine, a large slice of bacon cut fine, black and red pepper and salt. After cooking until all bones can be extracted, add canned tomatoes and corn and half a pound of butter. Before serving add stale bread crumbs. Serve in a tureen.

Ginger Drops.

One-half cup sugar, one-half cup butter, one cup molasses, one cup boiling water, with two teaspoons soda dissolved in it, one teaspoon each of cinnamon, ginger and cloves; two and one-half cups of flour, two eggs beaten well and added last thing. Don't add more flour because they may look thin. They are very dainty with but the amount mentioned. Bake in gem tins.

Orange Marmalade Icing.

One cup of granulated sugar, one-quarter cup orange marmalade. Moisten this with boiling water until it is a thin paste, cook until it forms a soft ball in cold water. Remove from fire and beat as you would fudge, until creamy. Spread on with warm knife.

Squash Fritters.

To two cups of mashed, dry winter squash add one cup of milk, two well-beaten eggs, one teaspoon of salt, a little pepper, and one heaping teaspoon of baking powder. Beat well, and drop by spoonfuls into hot butter or cooking oil, and fry.

Baked Codfish.

Soak fish a dozen hours, gently simmer until nearly done; remove bones and bruise fine; mixed mashed potatoes, two parts potato to one of fish. Place before fire or in oven until rich brown. Serve with egg sauce.

Creamed Pineapple.

Whip one-half pint of cream; drain one can of shredded pineapple and stir the pulp into the cream. Chill and serve in sherbet cups.

Hints for the Housewife.

Mix starch with soapy water and the linen will have a good gloss and be easy to iron.

Graham bread and brown bread are both excellent for sandwich purposes and raisin bread, "with lots of raisins in it," is a welcome change.

A teaspoonful of lemon juice in a cupful of tepid water will remove all stains from nails and skin and loosen the cuticle better than a sharp instrument.

Round jelly cake pans make excellent pot covers by turning upside down and placing in center a small wooden knob, obtainable of any grocer. Two can be bought for 5 cents.

New linen for working upon should be rubbed over with a dry cake of soap. This will render the fabric soft, so that drawing threads of embroidery upon it will be much facilitated.

The objectionable sputtering and flying of the hot fat when eggs, hominy, apples and like things are dropped into it to fry may be prevented if a little flour is sifted into fat just before they are added.

Carrots will make delicious preserves. Take three-quarters of a pound of sugar to a pound of carrots and sufficient water to make a sirup, and boil until the preserves are thick. A little ginger or lemon should be added to flavor.

For those who find maple sirup beyond their means try this: Five cups of light brown sugar, three to four cups of granulated sugar, and about one-quarter to one-half pound of maple sugar; add water and boil to consistency of sirup.

While it is advisable to pack a water bag flat, occasionally there is necessity for rolling it. If so, it is well to lay a piece of cloth or paper over the bag first, then there will be no possible danger of the sides of the bag sticking together.

To ascertain if cake is done press lightly with finger. If the surface rebounds without making a hissing sound, and if toothpick comes out clean if inserted in center of cake, it is done. Another precaution is, never have anything else in the oven while baking cake or try to bake more than one kind of cake at the same time.

WORTH KNOWING

Simple but Powerful Prescription for Rheumatism and Lame Backs.

This was previously published here and cured hundreds, "Get one ounce of syrup of Sarsaparilla compound and one ounce Toris Compound. Then get half a pint of good whiskey and put the other two ingredients into it. Take a tablespoonful of this mixture before each meal and at bed time. Shake the bottle each time." Good effects are felt the first day. Any druggist has these ingredients on hand or will quickly get them from his wholesale house.

Payment in Advance.

It takes imagination and courage to make a squelching reply to a "fresh" young man. In this case he was from out of town, says a writer in Tit-Bits, and adorned with a big green necktie and accompanied by his "best girl," he sat down at a restaurant table to order a meal. "Waiter," he said, when that individual came up, "I want you to bring me a grilled crocodile."

"Yessir," replied the waiter, perfectly unmoved.

"And, waiter, bring it with butter."

"Yessir."

Then he stood there like a statue for a minute.

"Well," said the young man, "aren't you going to bring it?"

"Yessir."

"Why don't you, then?"

"Orders is, sir, that we get pay in advance for crocodiles, sir. Crocodiles with butter, sir, are fifteen hundred pounds and twopence. If you take it without butter, sir, it is only fifteen hundred pounds, sir."

The waiter did not smile, but the girl did, and the young man climbed down.

How a Doctor Cured Scalp Disease.

"When I was ten or twelve years old I had a scalp disease, something like scald head, though it wasn't that. I suffered for several months, and most of my hair came out. Finally they had a doctor to see me and he recommended the Cuticura Remedies. They cured me in a few weeks. I have used the Cuticura Remedies, also, for a breaking out on my hands and was benefited a great deal. I haven't had any more trouble with the scalp disease. Miss Jessie F. Buchanan, R. F. D. 3, Hamilton, Ga., Jan. 7, 1909."

Another Joshua.

It is always a temptation to air one's special knowledge. A county judge down in a Southern State, who was proud of his familiarity with Scripture, was weak enough to yield occasionally to this temptation. The story of one such occasion is told in the National Magazine.

One day an old negro was brought in from the mountain district under suspicion of maintaining an illicit still. There was no real evidence against him.

"What's your name, prisoner?" asked the judge, as he peered at the shambling black man.

"Mah name's Joshua, jedge," was the reply.

"Joshua, eh?" said the judge, as he rubbed his hands. "Joshua, you say? Are you that same Joshua spoken of in Holy Writ—the Joshua who made the sun stand still?"

"No, jedge," was the hasty answer, "'twan't me, Ah'm de Joshua dat made de moon shine."

Do You Dread Mondays?

Most women do, when Monday means to them a hot, steaming, smelly house because it is washday. If they would use Easy Task laundry soap they would find that the clothing and linen were cleaner and sweeter when finished, and that the work is done in half the time, with no fretting and fussing and bad temper. Easy Task soap takes the dirt out and doesn't drive it in. It's a white, pure soap; not a dingy yellow soap that smells bad in the cake and worse in the tub.

Has Anybody Found Him?

"You wish to advertise for a lost dog, madam?"

"Yes, sir."

"What's the description?"

"Well, he's just an ordinary dog, you know, kind of brown color."

"That isn't definite enough."

"And his name is Prince."

"That won't help to find him."

"I should think it would. He's the only dog I know of with that name."

"But, madam, hasn't he some distinguishing peculiarity or mark about him?"

"Y-yes, sir; he likes limburger cheese."—Chicago Tribune.

Distinctly Bad Form.

"Bryonia," impetuously began the young man, "I have come to say something to you this evening, and I am going to say it! You shall not put me off any longer. It is no joke to trifle with the feelings of an earnest man who knows what he wants. Every time I try to be serious you change the subject. It isn't fair to me, Bryonia, and I am not going to stand it any more. You'll have to listen to me this time. I am determined——"

"Orlando," she interrupted, smothering a yawn, "you are doing too much thundering in your index."—Chicago Tribune.

Constipation causes and seriously aggravates many diseases. It is thoroughly cured by Dr. Pierce's Pellets. Tiny sugar-coated granules.

Mortifying the Flesh.

"No," said Mrs. Lapsling, "we are not eating any meat at our house now, except on Sundays. It's frightfully expensive. Besides, during Lent one ought to practice as much self-exasperation as one possibly can."—Chicago Tribune.

CONVINCING PROOF

OF THE VIRTUE OF

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

What is the use of procrastinating in the face of such evidence as the following letters represent? If you are a sick woman or know one who is, what sensible reason have you for not giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial? For 30 years we have been publishing such testimonial letters as these—thousands of them—they are genuine and honest, too, every one of them.

Mrs. S. J. Barber says:

"I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine in the world for women—and I feel it my duty to let others know the good it has done for me. Three years ago I had a tumor which the doctor said would have to be removed by an operation or I could not live more than a year, or two, at most. I wrote Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for advice, and took 14 bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and to-day the tumor is gone and I am a perfectly well woman. I hope my testimonial will be of benefit to others."—Mrs. S. J. Barber, Scott, N. Y.

Mrs. George May says:

"No one knows what I have suffered from female troubles, neuralgia pains, and backache. My doctor said he could not give me anything to cure it. Through the advice of a friend I began to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and the pain soon disappeared. I continued its use and am now in perfect health. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been a God-send to me as I believe I should have been in my grave if it had not been for Mrs. Pinkham's advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. George May, 86 4th Ave., Paterson, N. J.

Mrs. E. F. Hayes says:

"I was under the doctor's treatment for a fibroid tumor. I suffered with pain, soreness, bloating, and could not walk or stand on my feet any length of time. I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice, followed her directions and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. To-day I am a well woman, the tumor was expelled and my whole system strengthened. I advise all women who are afflicted with tumors or female troubles to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. E. F. Hayes, 1890 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Mrs. W. K. Housh says:

"I have been completely cured of a severe female trouble by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and want to recommend it to all suffering women."—Mrs. W. K. Housh, 7 Eastview Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, etc.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

An Easter Carol

While on the air the bells are sweetly pealing,
Upon this bright and gladsome Easter day,
A thrill divine is o'er my spirit stealing,
And Lo! the stone of grief is rolled away,
And joy and peace are with me for I know
When time at last shall end my earthly woes,
I'll live again with Him, who long ago,
Triumphant from the dead and grave arose.

Angels are joyfully singing,
Singing in Glory to-day,
And sweetest echoes are ringing
Down from their beautiful lay:
And all the Earth joins the chorus—
O the glad hearts that it shows,
For that first bright Easter morning.—
When Christ arose.

Alas! alas. if on that Easter morning,
The Angel had not rolled the stone away,
And had he not came forth the dread grave scorning
O sad would be this mortal heart to day,
No hopes beyond this gloomy world of sighs;—
But hark the song the Herald Angels sing:
"The Lord arose and lived that ye might rise,
O be ye glad and let your praises ring."

Angels are joyfully singing,
Singing in Glory to-day,
And sweetest echoes are ringing
Down from their beautiful lay:
And all the earth joins the chorus—
O the glad hearts that it shows,
For that first bright Easter morning.—
When Christ arose.

Edward Schwartz of Kendallville, was run over and instantly killed Saturday night by a T. & C. I. car in that city, his body being badly mutilated. In rounding a curve Moterman Keller saw Schwartz lying upon the track but could not stop his car until it got in its work. The victim was lying with his feet across one rail and his head across the other. From the man's habit and from his apparent down and out condition it is supposed he was intoxicated. Very Nicely English

This curious Bengali English was used to advertise a circcs in India: "Some horse will make very good tricks. The klown will com and talk with that horses therefore audience will itself very much. She lady will walk on horses back and horse is jumping very much also. The klown will make a joking words and lady will become too angry therefore klown will run himself away. One man will make so tricks of trapeze audience will fraid himself very much. One lady will make himself so bend, then everybody he will think, he is the rubber lady. This is the very grand display. This is the very better gymnastics. One man will walk on wire tight, he is doing very nicely because he is a professor of that.

For Catarrh

Medicine Free in Every Case Where It Fails to Relieve

Neglect or pessimism, we believe, is the greatest enemy the public has to contend with when applied to the loss or recovery of health. Practically every case of consumption might have been cured if hope had been maintained and proper treatment had been resorted to at the first symptom of the disease. Until the advanced stage is reached consumption is curable. Catarrh is responsible, we believe, for many cases of consumption. It is about catarrh we want to talk to you today, incidentally consumption, since the two are so closely allied.

We have a medicine made from a prescription of one of the most successful catarrh specialists known. We believe it is positively without an equal. We are so satisfied that we are right, that we will supply the medicine free in every instance where it is used according to directions for a reasonable length of time, should it fail to give satisfaction in every particular. We want every one to try this medicine at our risk. There are no conditions attached to our offer. We put the user under no obligation to us whatever.

The medicine we want you to try is Rexall Mucu-Tone. It is a catarrh remedy that goes direct to the seat of trouble. It is carried by the blood to every part of the system. It purifies and enriches the blood, tones up the mucous cells, and brings about a condition of health and strength that tends to prevent the germs of consumption from getting a start. Besides this, Rexall Mucu-Tone is a wonderful appetizer, digestive aid and flesh builder. Its good effects are often felt from the very first dose. It is one of the largest and most satisfactory selling medicines that we have ever had anything to do with.

We know so much of the great good that it has done that we personally back it up with our reputation and money, which fact should be ample guarantee to satisfy anybody. Rexall Mucu-Tone comes in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. We urge you to try it. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Butler at our store—The Rexall Store. Geo. W. Geddes. 1t

A UNIQUE RECORD

Not Another Like It in Our Broad Republic

To give positive home testimony in every locality is of itself unanswerable proof of merit; but when we add to this the continued endorsement from people who testified years ago no evidence can be stronger. A Butler citizen gratefully acknowledges the good received from Doan's Kidney Pills, and when time has tested the cure we find the same hearty endorsement, with added enthusiasm and continued praise. Cases of this kind are plentiful in the work of Doan's Kidney Pills, and such a record is unique in the annals of medicine.

D. D. Melroy, of Butler, Ind., says: "I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Stone's drug store and they relieved me of a lame back and other symptoms of kidney trouble that had caused me much annoyance for several months. Shortly after, I publicly endorsed this remedy and at this time, I willingly confirm that statement. My trouble has never returned."

THE QUEEN OF CHURCH FESTIVALS

An Easter Sermon By Rev. Edmund Fremont Albertson

Matt. 28:5, 6, 7:

"And the angel answered and said to unto the women, Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here; for He is risen as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay. And go quickly, and tell His disciples that He is risen from the dead."

In the ancient church the celebration of Easter lasted eight days. After the eleventh century it was limited to two days. Modern churches observe but one day. The early church considered this a favorite time for administering the rite of baptism. The courts adjourned, alms were dispensed, and many slaves received their freedom. During the whole week before Easter—Passion week—daily religious services were held. The proper time for the celebration of Easter was a matter of controversy till the council of Nice in 325 A. D. decided the case. Easter is the first Sunday after the full moon, which falls upon or after the 21st of March. Therefore Easter occurs between March 22 and April 25.

There is no uncertain tone regarding the significance of this Queen of Festivals. Through all the centuries it has proclaimed with trumpet voice, with silvery bells, with augmented joyfulness the Resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. That first Easter morn was freighted with a message to all people. Those devoted women who came early in the morning to the sepulcher at the rising of the sun heard with gladness the message of the angel, "He is risen." That glorious message was heard in heaven and in all the earth. The sound went forth from that garden sepulchre and has been reverberating through all the corridors of time. It rolls on sweeter than the music of the spheres, gathering force and volume and richness; it comes with new radiance and greater glory as each Easter sun rises to scatter earth's darkness and mist and cloud, that heaven's light—the light that lighteth the sun, may appear.

This crowning miracle of gospel record has been regarded by friend and enemy as the climax of all credentials to the divinity of Jesus Christ. Christians exalt it and place it highest in the pantheon of evidences. Enemies have assailed it with the heaviest artillery that human and satanic ingenuity could devise, knowing that if they can show that Christ did not arise from the dead, all other claims to a divine nature are worthless. St. Paul asserts, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain and your faith is also vain."

After the revolution in France at the close of the eighteenth century, when society was in a state of panic and excitement, there were some people even in that terror stricken land who believed that what they needed most was religion. One of these persons came to Tallyrand, a priest and shrewd diplomat and said to him: "I have formulated a system of religion, just such as we need and must have. It is perfect and must be acceptd. How shall I proceed to have this adopted by our citizens?" Tallyrand made a masterly answer: "I think the best plan is for you to be crucified on the cross, and on the third day rise again, and then your system of religion will be a competing religion with that of Jesus Christ."

What, then, is the message of Easter tide to all the sons of men? It asserts the power and divinity of our Savior. "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth," said He. When we see the healing of the blind, and the deaf, and the leper; when we enter the house of Jairus and behold the little maid come back to life at the Master's call; when we pause by the gate at Nain and as the funeral procession waits, see the young man brought back to life, or go to Bethany and hear Him say, Lazarus, come forth, we are ready to believe in His claim of infinite power. He feeds the thousands, He discerns the thoughts of men, He casts out the evil spirits, He stills the raging waves of dark Galilee, and we readily admit that His claim is just. He wrought many mighty works. He taught as never man taught. He said he was the Son of Man. He claimed to be the Messiah, the Christ, the Son of God. What majesty! What greatness! What God-like assertions of power! Above all else He said He would rise from the dead on the third day.

Almost nineteen hundred Easters have given cumulative testimony to this fact. He is not without witnesses. From the early hour on that first Easter morn when the angelic visitor announced to the women who were first at the garden sepulchre, in words more exquisite than poetry, that the occupant of that rock hewn tomb had arisen from the dead, until now, wise and holy men have accepted this as a well authenticated fact. And this testimony will still continue to increase and enlarge till earth's night shall give place to heaven's immortal dawn, and the innumerable voices of redeemed spirits join forever in the music of angel choirs.

The historical proofs of the resurrection are unanswerable. The apostles did not fully understand the repeated declarations Jesus had made regarding His resurrection, and so we find they did not expect a literal and real resurrection. They did not invent the story, for they were incredulous until full proofs were given them. His first appearance was to Mary Magdalene, and when she went and told the apostles that had been with Him as they mourned and wept they believed not. On the afternoon of that Easter day the risen Lord appeared to the two disciples as they walked to Emmaus, and at the conclusion of the eight mile journey He made Himself known to them. Their hearts had burned within them as He talked by the way, and opened the scriptures to their understanding, but they knew not that it was their risen Lord until He made it plain to them as he sat down to break bread at the evening meal. The same hour these two glad hearted ones arose and returned to Jerusalem and told all the other apostles that Jesus had arisen, but they believed not. All of the close followers of Jesus believed only after plain and repeated proofs had been placed before them.

These evidences are sufficient to convince any intelligent and serious inquirer. After the resurrection our Lord appeared first to Mary Magdalene; then to the women returning from the sepulchre; to Simon Peter; to the two going to Emmaus; to the apostles except Thomas; to the apostles, Thomas being present; to seven disciples fishing near the shore of the sea of Galilee in the early morning; to the eleven disciples on a mountain; to over five hundred persons; to James alone; to all the apostles at His ascension. The apostles had the most absolute faith in this fact, and based their preaching upon it, and declared it everywhere. They had opportunity to satisfy themselves in reference to it. They preached it and induced many thousand to accept it at the very place where it occurred. A significant testimony to the truth of the resurrection is afforded by the change in the Sabbath day. This change was made by the expressed wish of the early church—a wish to observe as a day of gladness and to mark as a weekly festival that day on which He arose. The existence of the Christian church, the mightiest institution on the earth, is proof of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Dr. Arnold thus testifies: "I have been used for many years to study the history of other times and to examine and weigh the evidences of those who have written about them; and I know of no one fact in the history of mankind which is proved by better and fuller evidence of every sort, to the mind of a fair inquirer, than that Christ died, and rose again from the dead."

History, reason, faith, classical learning, and God's Holy Word give their combined testimony to the resurrected, exalted and glorified Christ.

The Bethlehem Christ, His teachings, sermons, miracles; His example, precepts; the Calvary Christ would have no promise for us, were it not for the resurrected Christ. In this we glory. In this we hope. For this we give thanks. Because Jesus showed this power over death and the grave mankind have hope of the resurrection of the body. He arose from the dead and became the first fruits of them that slept. Our resurrection is assured because of His triumph and resurrection. We say in our creed, "I believe in the resurrection of the body." We cannot explan it, we cannot comprehend it, but we do know that because He is alive and has all power in heaven and earth. He will watch over our sleeping dust and in the morning of the great day will call it forth from the tomb.

The Easter message also teaches our Lord's real, infinite personal care for His people. He died for our sins and rose for our justification. He comforted His disciples and spoke with them frequently of His death and resurrection. When the little band of chosen ones expressed their great sorrow at separation from the Master, He spoke of the coming of the Holy Spirit as their Comforter, Teacher and Guide. But ere the day of Pentecost their hearts were made to rejoice by the news of His resurrection. Then we see how tenderly He spoke to Peter and to Thomas, and indeed to all the apostles. By his resurrection He crowned and completed His mission as our Mediator and forever sealed His declarations of love for us.

Therefore evermore at Easter time joy shall chase away gloom. To the afflicted and bereaved this joyful hope is given. He who died and arose from the tomb draws near to the couch upon which His suffering saints lie and his smile, like the radiant sun, brightens every heart.

"The healing of His seamless robe,
Is by our beds of pain;
We touch Him in life's throng and press,
And we are whole again."

Blessed day is this, full of cheer and promise to all mankind. "He will give beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." O, how true it is, that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us.

What radiant glory and joy dawn upon us this Easter morn. Angels come to earth and whisper of hope and peace and rest and heaven. No other festival of the church except the Christmas tide has equal significance. Sacred memories and hallowed emotions and loving associations cluster around the holy Easter day bringing their sweet incense from heavenly places. The Easter lilies bloom and exhale their sweetness. The songster carols forth his praise to his Maker, the soft zephyrs blow and waft our songs of gratitude to heaven. This is the "Sabbath of joy," the peace of the earth, the hope of the nations.

Let the angel whisper it to the four winds of heaven, and the winds shall whisper it to the fountain, and the fountain to the brooklet, and the brooklet to the river, and the river to the great infinite sea. Let all nature blend her myriad voices with the innumerable voices of the heavenly world, in continuous, loud acclaim.

The resurrection of Christ assures us of a resurrection from the tomb, and of an immortal life. Herder said when near the end of life, "Give me a great thought that I may quicken myself with it." The thought of our immortal life comes with its treasury of God given truth to make us passing rich. Mr. Fiske says: "I believe in the immortality of the soul, as a supreme act of faith in the reasonableness of God's work." "Man is a bi-world creature." "Life's withheld completions" point to another life beyond the tomb. Jesus everywhere and always assumed immortality. Plato reasoned that "this fond desire, this pleasing hope, this longing after immortality" are the prophecies of a life beyond. Nature does not deceive the lower animals by giving them instincts. The migratory bird finds the warm climate ere the frosts of winter come. God will not mock the creatures He has made in His own image, but will give the truer, richer life of satisfaction for which they long. Through Jesus Christ, His life, teaching, death and resurrection, life and immortality are brought to light.

Life was formerly represented by the image of the hour glass, and death by the scythe, darkened windows, weeping willows and "plumes from the wings of midnight." On one side of a room in the Vatician are fifteen hundred inscriptions taken from the tombs of pagan Rome. In all these there is not found a ray of light or hope. Darkness, despair, death, reign in hopeless night. On the opposite side of that room are fifteen hundred inscriptions taken from the catacombs of Rome. (These are the Christian tombs) They are echoes of Easter joy, and resurrection hope. The resurrected Christ transforms the grave, robs it of gloom and causes us to approach it as a conquering hero. The South Cape of Africa was long known as the "Cape of Tempests." But a sailor discovered a safe passage around it, and gave it the name Cape of Good Hope. Thus has our Lord Jesus Christ discovered for us a safe passage through the gates of death into the heavenly harbor.

A tradition says that when Lazarus came forth from the tomb, the first words he spoke were, "Will I have to die again." That was before the resurrection of his Lord. Those who are without a saving faith in the gospel may possess this fear, but we who are instructed in the better way should meet the Pale Archer with, "Death, I salute thee."

Faithful friends, if you possess this priceless treasure of the indwelling Christ, your joy is full. If you have it not, you may be made glad on this Easter day. Swing the heart's door widely open, and bid the risen, living, glorified Lord come in as an abiding guest. Then each returning Easter will bring its precious burden of joy to your life, until you are called to the great eternal Easter day in the paradise of God.

A Peculiar Characteristic of This Terrible Explosive.

Many and odd are the materials entering into the manufacture of modern explosives, but perhaps the most interesting of all these elements of destruction as well as the simplest is gun cotton. The gun cotton manufacturing industry is large, as enormous quantities are used in the charging of torpedoes and for similar purposes.

The base of gun cotton is pure raw cotton or even cotton waste, such as is used to clean machinery. This is steeped in a solution of one part of nitric and three parts of sulphuric acid. It is the former ingredient that renders the mass explosive, the sulphuric acid being used merely to absorb all moisture, thus permitting the nitric acid to combine more readily with the cellulose of the cotton.

After being soaked for several hours in the solution described the cotton is passed between rollers to expel all nonabsorbed acid, a process carried to completion by washing the cotton in clear water. This washing process is a long one, requiring machinery which reduces the cotton to a mass resembling paper pulp. Should any nonabsorbed acid be allowed to remain it would decompose the cotton.

If the explosive is to be used after the manner of powder it is still further pulverized and then thoroughly dried, but if intended for torpedoes it is pressed into cakes of various shapes and sizes—disk shaped, cylindrical, flat squares and cubes. When not compressed gun cotton is very light, as light as ordinary batting.

A peculiar characteristic of this terrible explosive is that a brick of it when wet may be placed on a bed of hot coals, and as the moisture dries out the cotton will flake and burn quietly. If dry originally, however, the gun cotton will explode with terrible force at about 320 degrees of heat.

In general it is the custom to explode gun cotton by detonation or an intense shock instead of by heat. In a torpedo the explosive charge is wet, this wet cotton being exploded by means of dry cotton in a tube, this having been fired by a cap of fulminate of mercury, the cap itself having been fired by the impact of the torpedo against the target.—Harper's Weekly.

THE WELL DRESSED WOMAN

IS ALWAYS

BEAUTIFUL!

Good dressing is not so much a matter of money as of knowledge, attention, care, good taste.

To-day the manufacture of ready-made garments for women has been brought to such a state of perfection that there is no reason for any woman not being suitably dressed, prettily dressed, always dressed in the manner best suited to her figure, style, character.

The manufacture of women's ready-to-wear clothing is conducted on such a gigantic scale that the makers are able to employ cutters, designers who are master craftsmen, artists in every sense of the term, men to whom the cutting and designing of garments is a science.

These men have trained the public to appreciate and demand clothes that conform to art and good taste in dress, garments that express and develop the wearer's personality, her individuality, and this at a money outlay of very little more than the bare cost of materials.

This money economy is not the only saving afforded by the purchase of ready-made garments. The time-saving element is of almost more importance to the busy modern woman with her multiplied time consuming interests of home, club, society.

It takes no more time to purchase a tailor-made suit—that backbone of woman's wardrobe—than it does to match buttons, or buy findings, or search out the particular shade of spool silk needed.

Practical jokes usually come home to roost.

Men who claim to own the air above their premises will have to fight it out with the comets.

The price of Bibles may go up, but the higher criticism is not going much higher than at present.

The question is how did the Pope discover that Fairbanks had been Vice President of the United States?

A southern man wants a divorce because his wife threw a glass of jelly at him. Reports do not say she hit him.

"Let children eat what they want," says one of the medical experts. Perhaps he is interested in the sugar trust.

Members of the Black Hand are in the penitentiary, where they belong. They are no better than defaulting bankers.

Statements as to the size of King Leopold's fortune do not agree. But however large it was he didn't take any of it with him.

When Nordica told a Havana audience that Cuba is God's country, she probably meant that it needed more than merely human help.

"I crave not gold in yellow heaps," says one of the bards. Perhaps he is too busy yearning for a pound or two of bacon to have time for the lust of gold.

Carrie Nation recently received an offer of marriage, but ex-Queen Lil has not been able to find anyone who seems to wish to talk to her privately in the front parlor.

Mrs. Peary has just exchanged two nice Arctic meteorites for $50,000. They leave a vacant place on the parlor what-not, but $50,000 will help a lot with the new spring hat to buy.

It is reported that a Pennsylvania clergyman has refused to marry a loving couple because the young man's income is less than $2,000 a year. Where is the evil of the high cost of living to end?

An advance of 20 per cent in the price of Bibles is announced for March 1. There is, however, no threat of an additional advance of 10 per cent a month after that. Evidently George F. Baer is not behind the Bible business.

The czar's brother has caused trouble by marrying a lady who has a string of divorces. His mother refuses to speak to him, and Nicholas is reported to be furious. Well, it was time for a grand duke to do something to dispel the idea that the tribe had gone out of existence.

According to statistics there are 40,000 more married men in this country than there are married women. But there is no occasion for gossip. The discrepancy is accounted for by the explanation that many married immigrants leave their wives at home when they come to this land of the free.

One of the most wholesome effects of the present discussion of the high cost of living will be the consideration of the advantages of economy and the conservation of the family resources. Many American families remain poor because they waste more than would maintain a thrifty French family in comfort.

Caught in the swirl of political economy, brayed between the upper millstone of supply and demand's nether stone, necessaries have become arrogant luxuries and the former luxuries have become specimens to be treasured in museums. We have learned to do without; we have been accumulating stores of merit by controlling appetite; a moral exercise.

There is no class of people so apt to do foolish and imprudent things as the girls who have nothing to occupy their minds. The girl that has to work for a living is really safer than the one who is under no such compulsion. Where a girl has no serious interests her future is largely dependent upon the discretion and discernment of her parents or guardians. The Philadelphia girl that ran away with a hotel waiter, according to reports, has been forgiven. From what is known to the public concerning this case, she should have been. But has she forgiven her guardians? She is not as much to blame as those who neglected to take care of her. If her life had been normal she would not have been seized by the notions that have drawn a cloud over her.

Modern school and college life is different in many respects from that which the boys of antiquity knew, but in other respects there is a remarkable similarity. A writer who has made a thorough study of the universities of ancient Greece tells us that the "freshy" was put through "stunts" which have changed but little in twenty centuries. He was pulled this way and that by various groups and by the partisans of certain teachers, just as he is now "rushed" by fraternities. The Grecian student decked himself out in crimson, purple and other "loud" hues. He had nicknames for his teachers, indulged in college politics, occasionally precipitated a small riot on the street or in the theater, got wildly excited over athletic contests, and not infrequently misspent his money. Educational methods and standards change, but boys are always boys.

In these days of domestic disturbance and discomfiture, when households bid fair to stand still for lack of skilful hands to keep them moving, and all sorts of schemes for communal living are offered as a solution of the problem, one is eager to grasp at the veriest straw of suggestion. Now regulated hours and higher training, or the united larger family scheme, where each one must bear his individual and accepted burden of daily duties, may go far to relieve the tension of material things, if not to save intact the threatened home itself. But a more direct help in this best of works would be a changing point of view, a shifting of one's mental values. Fashion, did the capricious lady so incline, might become the tenth muse, the votive goddess of domestic science. Nor would any of her worshipers be the worse for their devotions. It is harder to swing a broom than a golf stick; and how many timid souls would worry their wits and tire their bodies to gain a doubtful equestrian control if it were "bad form" to ride horseback? It is not as if lotus-eating repose, a dolce far niente existence, were a national ideal; we are strenuous, even in our pastimes. One involuntarily thinks of the Chinese philosopher's surprise at seeing white men dance, and his question, "Why don't you let your servants do this for you?" and it becomes a serious temptation to write a companion volume to "The Pleasures of Imagination," and frankly call it "The Imagination of Pleasure." It is entirely in the point of view. After all, these perplexing, troublesome domestic duties are the real, the permanent things of life, and the skilful guidance of a household is in itself a wonderful accomplishment. If Fashion would but don an apron!

WOULDN'T BE RECOGNIZED.

"Foreign Types" Which Are Utterly Unlike the Real Thing.

"One may wander for months through the streets of foreign cities looking for the types that nightly thrill and delight American audiences," writes a somewhat disgusted theatergoer.

"Only the tourist and residents abroad know the foreigner, his customs and his dress, but the tourist does not have to make the play, nor fill the eye and ear of a people who demand character as a bit of dash or color. Were an Italian of the working class introduced into an American play he would have to be a sly, creeping villain, with a knife concealed and a willingness to be bribed, or the audience would not accept him as Italian.

"If a Spanish girl she must wear a bright-colored skirt, a loose waist of contrasting color, a mantilla and carry a fan or cigarette.

"If a French girl, she must be full of lingerie, displaying kicks, have a small waist, plenty of plumes, a desire for admiration and wines and making trouble, particularly in domestic lines.

"If an Englishman, he must have a monocle, a dialect and a general appearance of idiocy.

"And last, if a Scotchman, the audience demand that he shall be a Presbyterian crank or a giggling songster with plenty of plaid scarfs and bagpipes.

"I venture to say that if the ocean liners were to land the passengers of other nations in the orchestra seats of the American theaters the last character they would recognize would be the interpolated one representing their own race.

"I cannot believe that all Russians are either butchers or slaves. That all Jews are either rich or oppressed—that all Swiss gentlemen are clock makers—all French women queens of debauch—all Italians, murderous villains—all Englishmen, idiotic snobs—all Scotchmen half-dressed and dancing like marionettes, and all Spanish women eternally puffing jealousy from their cigarettes.

"Yet managers know that to send an audience home contented these characteristics must appear.

"The question is, if we are woven into the foreign play over there, has any one, as yet, recognized us as Americans?"

DEER BREAKS INTO BANK.

A buck deer which broke into the Ware (Man.) National Bank in daylight and with human intelligence made straight for the money drawers, paid for its temerity with its life. The line of customers before the teller's window made a mad rush for the doors when the deer crashed through a heavy plate glass window and hurdled a high desk and the steel grating behind which the bank force was at work. Its fore feet caught in the money drawers, scattering the cash. Taken to a livery stable, the deer died shortly afterward, and the meat was distributed among the townspeople. One of the frightened patrons ran breathless to the police station, and the chief responded with a motley array of volunteers armed with revolvers, shotguns and pitchforks, fearing robbers.

Could Not Afford the Extras.

Those who object, like the negro in the following story, to the high fees of a good physician, do not always realize what they are paying for. The doctor in question, says a writer in Tit-Bits, was called out to attend an unknown patient. When he arrived he found that a decrepit negro wanted his attention.

The negro first asked, "How much yo' charge, doctar?"

"Two dollars a visit," said the other, and when the negro gasped his surprise, he continued, "That includes, you know, my time, experience, advice and the medicine."

"A poor old nigger like me don't need all dem extras," remarked his patient. "Jist gib me ten cents' wo'th o' yo' cough med'cine, and dat's enough fo' me."

Some people say they do as they please—but do they?

THE SPINNER.

The spinner twisted her slender thread
As she sat, and spun.
"The earth and the heavens are mine," she said,
"And the moon and and sun;
Into my web the sunlight goes,
And the breath of May,
And the crimson life of the new-blown rose
That was born to-day."

The spinner sang in the hush of noon,
And her song was low;
"Ah, morning, you pass away too soon,
You are swift to go.
My heart o'erflows like a brimming cup
With its hopes and fears.
Love, come and drink the sweetness up
Ere it turn to tears."

The spinner looked at the falling sun.
"Is it time to rest?
My hands are weary, my work is done,
I have wrought my best,
I have spun and woven with patient eyes
And with fingers fleet.
Lo! where the toil of a lifetime lies
In a winding sheet!"

Getting a Start

Josephine's brother was in the dumps and Josephine knew why.

Two months before she might not have been so discerning, but since that time she had been seeing things by the light of her own engagement solitaire—a most revealing flash.

"Cliff," she said, confidentially, "are you going to call on her to-night?"

Clifford Roland slapped his muffler round his neck and buttoned his overcoat.

"Because," his sister pursued, "those violets I used on the table for the luncheon I gave this noon are perfectly good and you're welcome to them."

He looked at her, considering.

"Did they come in a box?" he asked.

"No; just tissue paper. I bought them at the station, but they're the best you ever saw, for that kind. And I have a box—a good new one. Wait a minute."

She darted out of the room and came back presently holding aloft a purple box bearing the name of an exclusive florist.

"Here you are! This is the box Percy's last violets came in. I scolded him at the time for being so extravagant, but now I'm glad. And look inside! Here's the very wrapping paper and card it was tied with, all saved! I was just as sentimental as that. And here's even the envelope Percy's card was in, with the florist's name printed on the back—all complete!"

"Say," said Cliff, beginning to look interested. "I wonder—"

"Of course you will! I have purple gauze ribbon upstairs and a purple-headed pin and everything.'

Cliff loosened three buttons of his overcoat. "Dodie," he said, "you're a peach, but it won't do any good. Her father's too rich. I wish she didn't have a cent!"

"Now, see here," Dodie informed him in the mature manner of a young person who has been engaged for sixty days. "Millionairesses, if they're worth getting at all, have hearts, just like other girls.

"You take my word," she went on sagely, after a flying trip upstairs. As she spoke she stripped the dining table of violets and began to prepare them for the box. "You can go in and win—same as Percy did—if you'll just brace up. He was every bit as scared as you are, but he never showed it. If a girl's going to like you at all, she'll like a masterful way. Percy brought me violets from this very florist's the night he proposed, and it's a good start."

She flourished the bunch of violets—their stems wrapped in purple tinfoil and adorned with a huge purple bow.

"Get out a card," she commanded, "and put it into this envelope. No; Percy's card hasn't been left in it. That's put away with my treasures. Dear old Percy! He will go on sending me flowers, no matter what I say. I tell him we ought to save from now on for household furnishings; so every time he brings me violets or roses or anything, he says: 'Here's another butter-spreader,' or 'Here's a teapot,' or some such thing. Isn't he clever?"

"He was clever to get you," Cliff muttered, which is a brother's way of saying thank you. Then he took his box and started out, visibly cheered.

In the home of the "millionairess" a half hour later young Roland sat alone pondering his sister's advice. The violets had been sent up to the adored one, who had not yet appeared.

"Good evening, Mr. Roland," a sweet voice broke in. "You were so kind to bring me the violets."

He rose, to meet a puzzled, inquiring glance in the blue eyes. She was wearing the violets, but something was wrong.

"You were so kind," she repeated in an odd tone, just touched with frost, "but why—that is, can you explain—this?"

She held out a slip of thin paper, folded once. Young Roland opened it.

"Dear girl," was written in Percy's handwriting. "Here's another salt cellar. I love you."

Drops of perspiration stood out on young Roland's forehead. He recognized the paper as a leaf from a small notebook that Percy was always whipping out of his pocket. Confound him! He had whipped it out once too often. That had been in the envelope, too, and Dodie had missed finding it when she took out the card.

He pretended to be puzzling over the paper. In reality he was trying to decide what to do. For a fellow of his sort there was no course but the truth. The only question was how to begin.

Whipping out a notebook and pencil in successful Percy's own style, he rested the obnoxious slip of paper on the book and drew a heavy line through the words, "Here's another salt cellar." Then he handed it back to the girl.

"That much of it is for you, anyway," he said in a tone masterful enough to suit Dodie herself. "Sit down here and I'll tell you about the rest."

It was late that night when young

"CAN YOU EXPLAIN THIS?"

Roland got home, but a sympathetic sister was waiting to let him in.

"Did it work?" she asked, solicitously. "It worked," he answered with a grin.—Chicago Daily News.

ROLLER TOWEL TO GO.

Board of Health Calls It More Deadly than Public Drinking Cup.

All our favorite gods and sacred traditions fall one by one before the onslaught of reform. So closely have the clippers of political zealots shorn us of those personal privileges enjoyed by our sires that the modern man stumbles in his melancholy pathway to the grave, beset on all sides by proscriptions, regulations and rules of conduct, and feels himself lucky if he dies out of jail. In Kansas, beautiful, proud, prosperous and far-famed Kansas, the reformers have found their paradise. Topeka is the latter-day Delphi and the oracle of reform speaks in many tongues.

The latest reformatory utterance is a condemnation of the roller towel, according to the Kansas City Journal. It has been officially declared that the roller towel is even more dangerous than short sheets, drinking cups and cracked dishes. Per square foot the roller towel contains a greater number and variety of germs than are to be found anywhere else in the Sunflower State, and for the protection of society the time-honored rotating rag must go. Perhaps this is all for the best, yet it is permissible to pause and sigh at the passing of the old roller towel. It has served long and well and millions of our most respected citizens have left their sooty imprints upon its inviting folds.

Its rattle has been soothing music to sputtering patrons of public washrooms and in spite of the progressive cycle of its layer upon layer of discolorations it possessed a simple dignity that could not be defied. Even when, limp and discredited, it festooned in unloveliness from its scaffold, the roller towel was not without virtue. Always some one came to toy gingerly with its edges in the hope of finding one small area less dirty than the rest.

Bowing to the decree which banishes the roller towel from sight, we yet remember with something like affection the long years of intimate association with it in which it never failed. It has represented human democracy and comradeship. It was the bond that united the high and the low and it touched all mankind with a welcome if humid salute. The arrogant foes wore the roller towel in the days of their affluence, but it remained faithful and its very form typified unchanging purposes.

Legions of men and women have vainly sought the end of the roller towel. It has remained for the Kansas State Board of Health to lay a vandal hand upon this ancient institution and tear it from its honored place behind the door.

TALE OF A LOST UMBRELLA.

Two People Who Failed to See Humor in the Situation.

It was a train coming through Southern Wisconsin. On board was one of those impromptu comedy crowds from the tall grass that hadn't any idea it was funny. One woman suddenly descended on her husband with the thrilling inquiry:

"Where is that umbrella of mine?"

"I dunno," growled the husband.

"Well, you had it last."

"Didn't neither."

"You did, too, and you've got to git busy findin' it. I bet it's up forred there where we was a-settin' before we come back hyer."

More growls from the husband, who was sleepy.

"You got t'help me hunt it, anyway."

She took him and went forward, peering under the seats. All up and down the aisle they went, searching vainly. The more uncomfortable the stooping made her the madder and worse excited the woman got and the worse her husband growled.

Finally she began poking under the seats to see if she could touch the umbrella in some recess beyond her vision.

A girl with a blue feather in her hat, who had been timidly watching the performance and showing a blushing tendency to interrupt, could contain herself no longer.

"What's that you're poking under the seat with—isn't that the lost umbrella?" she asked.

The woman straightened up, gave one look at the tightly grasped instrument, and snapped out: "Yes, it is!"

She said it just as if it had been the fault of the girl with the blue feather in her hat.

QUEER NEWSPAPER OFFICES.

One in Buenos Ayres Has a Ball-Room and an Infirmary.

Queer newspapers are not at all uncommon, a few are very interesting. Perhaps the most strangely situated newspaper office in the country is that of the Washington Megaphone. It nestles on the verge of a primeval forest on one hand, while within less than 100 feet on the other the waves of the Pacific Ocean lap the shore, says a writer in Van Norden's Magazine. In front of the office runs a mountain stream, which revolves, in its rush to the sea, a great mill wheel, which in turn operates the Megaphone's printing press.

When respite from their tasks is afforded the members of the staff of the paper they may gather apples by reaching out of a window. Just outside the door are pears, prunes, plums and cherries, and a little further away blackberries and salmon berries are theirs for the picking. Perhaps the editor is of Waltonian bent. A few feet from his sanctum he can entice salmon, trout and perch from their native elements.

But the editor of the Megaphone is not the only journalist in the world enjoying uncommon advantages. In Buenos Ayres the life of an editor, according to reports, is similarly attractive and care-free. Down there one newspaper office includes a ball-room and an infirmary, where a doctor gives advice gratuitously to the whole staff. And, furthermore, the editors gather in comfortable rooms, seat themselves in armchairs or recline on divans and smoke long, black cigars, between puffs sipping iced lemonade!

An Impressive Apraisement.

"Time is money," said the ready-made philosopher. "Every minute is precious."

"Yes," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "I went out after luncheon to the links and played nearly a million dollars' worth of golf. And yet people say I am not liberal."—Washington Star.

A woman's idea of a good doctor is one who has a tender voice, and sympathetic eyes.

Some people talk so much that they have no time to listen to anything worth while.

$100,000,000 a Year Too Much.

The estimate by Senator Aldrich that crude, unorganized and wasteful methods in administration of the government are costing the taxpayers $100,000,000 a year more than they ought to pay is an admission from a well-informed Republican source that among officials in Washington there is too much politics and not enough of honest and careful attention to the details of the public business.

Senator Aldrich's estimate is confirmed, in part, by the figures, which show that while the civil service pay rolls of the government in 1903 carried the names of 235,000 employes there were on the same rolls 352,000 in 1909, an increase of exactly 50 per cent in six years. The cost of the civil service in wages last year was about $200,000,000. Estimating the cost by the number of names, the civil service employes of the government are now taking from the treasury $66,000,000 a year more than they were in 1903, which accounts for two-thirds of Mr. Aldrich's $100,000,000.

If there were any necessity for this great expansion in the civil expenditures the people would cheerfully pay the cost. But the country has grown at no such rate and the public service has improved in no such proportion. The appointment of political favorites to government jobs and the toleration of inefficient work, or no work at all, in return for good pay is almost wholly responsible for the increase. Secretary Nagel found how it was in his department when he took charge a year ago, but he seems to have been the only member of President Taft's Cabinet who protested against this manner of giving away the people's money.

The remedy is not by the Congressional commission which Senator Aldrich recommends. It lies mainly in the creation of a public sentiment which shall hold Congress and executive officers to stricter responsibility for appropriations. The first care of the administration as a whole should be to ascertain the necessary expenditures and to hold the estimates for appropriations closely within the needs of government economically conducted.

During the years of get-rich-quick prosperity that came in with the Dingley tariff the Republican party acquired the bad habit of "wildcatting" with the treasury. It is a habit of which the party must be broken.—St. Louis Republic.

G. O. P.'s Woes Put on Taft.

President Taft himself is to blame for the peril in which he finds the republican party to-day, according to the Kansas City Star. The paper was one of the first in the middle west to urge Mr. Taft's nomination. Its editor, Col. W. R. Wilson, is a personal friend of the president. Commenting on Mr. Taft's New York speech, the Star says: "In his Lincoln day speech in New York President Taft admitted a loss of popularity for his administration that might cause the republican party to lose the next house of representatives. He might have gone further. So great has been the defection that if the presidential election were to be held next November there is probably only one republican—Theodore Roosevelt—who would stand a chance of carrying the country against such a ticket, for example, as Graynor and Folk."

Then follows a long review of the causes which led up to what the president referred to as the administration's loss of popularity, ending with this statement:

"In all this transformation of public sentiment there has been little bitterness. Instead there has been general sorrow over the loss of confidence in a president of charming personality and right intentions, who, partly from temperament, partly from lack of sagacity, partly from deficiency in aggressive, militant earnestness, has alienated the people who believed they had found in him the man to carry on the work begun by Roosevelt.

"No one can know what the future has in store or whether the lost confidence may be regained. But the republican party for the present is called on to face this undoubted fact:

"If the presidential election were to be held this year Mr. Taft could not carry a state west of the Allegheny mountains."

Nonproducing Standpatters.

The true definition of a standpatter is a citizen who is satisfied with the existing order of things.

Why should not eastern nonproducers, living on the bounty of western producers, be standpatters, one and all?

It is the existing order that gives them their fat dividends, their palatial houses, automobiles, jewelry, European chalets and means for riotous living.

The disgraceful escapades of rich irresponsibles, without the slightest manifestation of moral obligations to society, are directly due to the fact that they are parasitic nonproducers.

Of course, the Aldrichites want the existing order preserved. They resent every interference with their privilege of robbing the real producers of the nation—mainly the western consumers who are victims of tariff taxation.

The nonproducers, by the power of their ill-gotten millions, control the legislation that filters through the trust-owned Senate and the wrangling, crooked House of Representatives. They have their standpat leaders in both houses, to obey orders.

It is a system, therefore, that the real producers of the nation must change by their votes.

To make Congress really representative, instead of a standpat body, is the new slogan of patriotic, progressive American citizens.

The Scare Is Over.

While Senator Elkins, of West Virginia, was temporarily off the reservation, it looked squally for the Aldrich-Taft tariff law, in case real investigators should be placed on the Senatorial committee to inquire into high prices.

But all is quiet again. Vice President Sherman, from his seat on the safety valve, has saved the day by appointments strictly in keeping with the Senate's ancient traditions.

We find at the head of the investigating committee Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, who regards western rebellion against the Aldrich-Taft law as practically high treason against the government. Then, at his elbow, there is the faithful Gallinger, of New Hampshire, who acts as an Aldrich lieutenant and echo both on roll call and in debate.

The other mild-mannered members of the "investigating" committee hail from the far west, the northwest, and the extreme south. There is not a single representative of great middle western States on the committee.

But that is natural. The Senatorial "investigation" into the cost of high living is merely a cloak to cover the deficiencies of the Aldrich-Taft tariff law. The repeated acknowledgement that the new tariff law is in constant need of defense is, by the way, significant.

The deliberate farce of appointing a committee of high tariff champions to make a report that the Aldrich-Taft law is a national blessing would be impossible elsewhere than in the United States Senate.

The millionaires' club betrays its sordidness by mocking at a serious national issue.—Chicago Journal.

Another Republican Delinquency.

To all appearances the Aldrich cohorts will prevent President Taft from carrying out his campaign pledge of statehood for Arizona and New Mexico, just as they prevented the tariff reduction, upon promise of which hundreds of thousands of western votes were polled for republicans.

Mr. Taft excuses the Aldrich-Taft tariff on the ground that party expediency is dearer to him than party honesty. Senator Aldrich, in opposing the statehood plan, proclaims again the doctrine that party, and not pledges, shall prevail.

Republican leaders fear lest four democratic senators be sent to Washington. Therefore they are preparing to break their promise to Arizona and New Mexico, just as they tried to prevent Louisiana, Oklahoma and Indian Territory coming into the union.

The people of Missouri have not forgotten how the New England republican grand dukes opposed the admission of Missouri as a state, while at the same time they erected out of the state of Massachusetts the separate state of Maine, in order to increase New England's strength in the senate.

If President Taft permits Mr. Aldrich to break his statehood pledges as he permitted him to break the tariff pledges, there cannot be a doubt that the west will stand together at the polls this fall against Aldrichism and all that it represents.

New York Needs a Harmon.

If national and state Republican leaders imagine they can satisfy the voters of New York by anything less than a complete investigation into the nest of rotten Republican bribers in Albany they are taking a poor way to accomplish their desire.

Only a few days ago we heard of a conference in New York at which President Taft, Gov. Hughes, Speaker Wadsworth of the New York Legislature, and other Republican chiefs discussed the situation. The next move at Albany was Speaker Wadsworth taking the floor for the first time in five years and using his personal influence to defeat the Chanler motion for investigation of all bribery charges by 75 to 33.

In other words, Mr. Wadsworth went straight from his conference with the President to strifle by force inquiry into Republican rottenness at Albany. In the absence of any declaration to the contrary, the public is entitled to believe that his policy of choking off investigation was indorsed by the national administration.

New York evidently needs a Harmon. The public never fancies a policy of suppression. Republican leaders plainly have something to hide and propose to hide it. The voters of New York, like those of Ohio, will more than likely insist upon investigation, and elect Democrats to investigate.—Chicago Journal.

That Newspaper Subsidy.

The friends of President Taft must feel somewhat mortified over the result of the president's "dig" at the newspapers of the country in regard to second class postage.

The president charged in effect that the deficiency in the Postal department was due to the inadequacy of the second class postage rates, and more than insinuated that the newspapers and magazines, the ones that most used second class postage, were being paid a subsidy to the extent of the difference between what the rates are and what they ought to be.

Of course the president's ramarks were made after a perusal of the report of Mr. Frank Hitchcock, professional politician, who is at the head of the Postoffice department.

Every bit of evidence that has been produced since this remarkable statement was given to the public goes to show that there was not a particle of foundation for it. It has been traced back, and the deficiency in part at least shown to be on account of the rural delivery service, that nobody expected to be self-sustaining for a number of years yet to come.—Peoria Journal.

Lest We Forget.

Sensational disclosures in the Ballinger investigation at Washington, the Alids bribery case at Albany, the state house scandal in Columbus, and the equally malodorous republican mess at Denver are likely to distract our attention from earlier matters of public concern.

Just so it may not be forgotten, let us recall for a moment the case of the sugar trust.

According to the New York Sun, this high-tariff industry stole $30,000,000 from the people of the United States. Mr. Taft has promised prosecution of trust heads for their crimes.

It is to be hoped that, in the rush of other republican scandals, the promised prosecutions should not be delayed or forgotten.

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued.)

Isabella stepped out into the night, and in a moment or two she was swallowed up in the darkness with her companion. Left alone, the Major closed the window, bolted and barred the shutters, and then hastened back to the death-chamber, where he rang the bell. In a few minutes the footman, half-dressed and half-asleep, made his appearance; then came the policeman, hastily; from the kitchen; finally, as the bell still continued ringing, all the other servants, male and female, poured into the room. A single glance showed them what had occurred—the insensible Jaggard, the empty bed, the open window. A Babel of voices ensued. "Silence, all of you," cried Jen, authoritatively. "We must act, not talk. Two of you take Jaggard to his room. Tell the groom to ride at once for Dr. Etwald and Inspector Sampson!" he added, turning to the policeman, who was stolidly staring at the empty bed, "rouse yourself. Take lanterns, and search for footmarks. There must have been more than one person to carry off a dead body."

These directions were obeyed at once. The house, the grounds, the whole wild night with its driving tempest became radiant with light and alive with terrified men. That a human being should be murdered was sufficiently ghastly without this crowning horror of a missing body coming after. Every man looked on his fellow with suspicion; in the yellow light of the Lanterns, dimly through the steady downpour of the rain, could be seen pallid faces and scared expressions. And while the men-folk scoured the house, the park, and the adjacent lanes environing "Ashantee," the female servants, unnerved and hysterical, crowded together in the kitchen, whispering over hastily prepared tea, it was a wild night, and full of the vague horrors of death and mystery.

Etwald came immediately in company with Arkel, whom this last extraordinary event took entirely by surprise. He questioned Sampson—he searched the chamber of death, stepped out of the window and across the lawn towards the belt of laurels which divided the lawn from a winding and tortuous lane. This, a tenebrous pathway even in the noonday, slipped eclike through darkling trees to emerge into the high-road a quarter of a mile away. Arkel was so long absent that Jen could only surmise that he had gone into this outward darkness; and on the Inspector's return it appeared that the Major was right in his conjecture. Furthermore, Arkel brought back certain news.

"Without doubt the body was taken out through the window," he said to Jen. "The flower-bed beneath the lattice is trampled down. It was carried across the lawn—for I could see by the light of the lantern the footmarks of four feet—and through the bushes into the lane. The way can be traced easily enough to that point; but it is too dark to note any further sign."

"Nothing more can be done tonight," said Jen, gloomily. "The men have returned dead tired, but they have seen nothing and no one."

"We must question your servant," said Arkel. "He was stunned, I believe?"

"I can't say. I haven't examined him. Stunned or drugged, I suppose."

"And where is Mr. Sarby?" asked the Inspector, as they turned to leave the room.

"Mr. Sarby went out as soon as we discovered the loss, and he has not yet returned."

"Was he with you when you made the discovery?"

"No. He had retired to bed," rejoined Jen. "But as soon as I saw what had taken place I called him up, and he jumped through the window to see if he could espy any traces of the robbers. Then the servants came, and I sent for you."

Inspector Arkel left the room with the Major to seek out Jaggard, and, if possible, to learn from him what had occurred. But this they were unable to do. The man had been stunned by a blow on the head, and was quite insensible.

"And yet he was a strong man," said Etwald, when he conveyed this intelligence. "He must have been taken by surprise."

"Undoubtedly," asserted Jen, readily. "But he must also have been asleep, else he would have called out as the men burst through the window."

"How do you know there were more than one?" asked Etwald, in a jesting tone.

"Because Maurice was an unusually heavy man," replied the Major, "and he could not have been carried off unless by two men. There may have been three for all I know. But what is the meaning of it all?" cried Jen, in bewildered dismay. "Why was the poor lad's body stolen?"

"Resurrectionists!" suggested Arkel; whereupon Major Jen shuddered.

"Don't even hint at such a thing," he cried, vehemently. "It would be too terrible; and, as it happens, quite unbelievable. It is incredible that such a thing could occur nowadays."

"It is incredible that such a thing as the theft of a body should occur," said Etwald, dryly. "Yet it has taken place. But where is Mr. Sarby? I should think that he would be present to aid you."

Jen was just about to repeat his feigned explanation regarding David's absence, when the door opened and the young man, wet and exhausted, entered the room. To give him his cue, the Major spoke to him at once.

"You are just in time, David, as I was telling these gentlemen about your hunt after these wretches. Did you see anyone?"

"I saw nothing," said David, wearily. "I am quite puzzled."

"And no wonder," said Etwald, ticking off events on his fingers. "The devil-stick, the murder, the theft of the body. This is a catalogue of horrors. A man might do worse than write a story on these things."

"I agree with you!" remarked the Major, sharply. "A man might make a jest of these horrors—as you are doing."

"I assure you I never felt less like jesting in my life," replied Etwald, coldly. "But it is no use discussing such a thing at 5 in the morning. If you can do without me, Major, I shall return home. I am tired."

"But Jaggard?" asked David, rising stiffly from his chair.

"He is all right for the time being. I have detailed a housemaid as nurse, and she knows what to do. I'll come back in the morning and see if he has recovered his senses."

When Etwald took his departure, Major Jen sent David to bed, in spite of the young man's remonstrances, but remained up himself to talk to Arkel. For a long time Jen discussed the matter with the Inspector, but the conversation proved extremely unsatisfactory. Arkel was not a keen-witted man, and in a case like the present—difficult and involved—he was quite at a loss how to proceed. Finally, Major Jen dismissed him in despair, and while Arkel went to see his men, who were posted round the house, Jen remained alone to think of what he should do.

"I must be my own detective," he thought, pacing the library. "I must do the work myself, with the assistance of David. To find out who stole the devil-stick; that is the first step. To discover who killed Maurice; that is the second step. To learn who carried away his body; that is the third step. Three very difficult things to find out, and I don't see where to begin. I must learn all I can about Maurice's past life, for he may have enemies of whom I know nothing. I shall go and sleep, and when I awaken I shall set to work to solve these mysteries."

As he spoke, the Major unbarred the shutters of the window. The rain had ceased, the dawn was breaking, and the terrible night was at an end.

"It is an omen!" said the Major, "an omen of good!"

CHAPTER XII.

The sensation caused by the news that the dead body of Maurice Aylmer had been stolen was even greater than that occasioned by the discovery of the murder. Even the big papers took up the matter, and sent down reporters to make investigations and build up theories as to the reason of this strange disappearance. Everywhere people were talking of the matter. Would-be detectives haunted the roads and lanes round "Ashantee;" they would have penetrated into the park itself but for the vigilance of Major Jen.

It must be conceded that for an amateur the Major set about his unaccustomed task in a very methodical manner. He offered a reward of five thousand dollars for the detection of the murderer, and a further sum of the like amount to any one who should discover the thief who had desecrated the chamber of death. These munificent rewards set everybody on the alert, and Jen, without putting down actual money, thus became possessed of some hundreds of spies who would bring him any information likely to assist him in his investigation. Also, the Major examined all the servants in the house. He questioned Sampson, the young policeman who had been in the kitchen on the night when the body had been stolen; and finally he paid a visit to the police office, where he saw Mr. Inspector Arkel.

"Well, Arkel," said Jen, after the first greetings were over, "have you any clue?"

"No, Major," replied Arkel, rather gruffly, for disappointment was beginning to tell on his temper. "Nor are we likely to find any until that servant of yours regains his senses. How is he now?"

"In a state of high fever, poor soul," said Jen, with a depressed look. "He does nothing but rave. Yet in all his wild talk he never lets slip a single word likely to help us."

"That's a pity, Major. By the way, I questioned Dr. Etwald about the matter, and he is of the opinion that the man was stunned by a blow on the head."

"I know that. I can only suppose that Jaggard fell asleep at his post and woke up in time to see the men getting in by the window. A struggle would then ensue, and he would be struck on the head, as Etwald supposes."

"I don't agree with that theory. There are flaws in it."

"Yes?" queried Jen, eagerly. "I am open to correction. Please go on."

"Jaggard was drugged, sir."

"But the wound at the back of the head which stunned him?"

"There you have it," cried Arkel. "The wound at the back of the head was caused by his falling like a log when he was drugged."

"H'm! This is all building on sand," said Jen, doubtfully. "Even to drug him, these men must have entered by the window."

"No, do you not remember, when we examined the window, that it was opened from the inside?"

"Egad, you are right. Then you think that some one must have been concealed in the room, and strung out from hiding to drug Jaggard."

"No," said Arkel again, "no one was concealed in the room."

"Confound it, man, you don't mean to say that Jaggard opened the window," cried Jen, starting from his seat with some show of temper.

"Ay, but I do, Major. Jaggard helped to steal the body of Mr. Aylmer. He opened the window to admit his accomplices. When they fulfilled their task and got the body out of the room they turned on Jaggard and betrayed him. That is, they drugged him and knocked him down."

"I don't agree with you at all, Arkel. Jaggard is perfectly honest, and was as devoted to Maurice as he is to me. Besides, even granting the possibility of such a thing, which I do not in the least, why should Jaggard's accomplices betray him?"

"I can't say," returned Arkel, shrugging his shoulders. "They may have been bribed to steal the body, and on accomplishing their task did not want to share the bribe with Jaggard!"

"Rubbish!" said Jen, tartly. "They must have known that he would betray them when he recovered his senses!"

"No doubt. But in the meantime they would make themselves scarce. Jaggard has been insensible or raving for over a week, Major. The scoundrels counted on that!"

"I say again that I believe in Jaggard's honesty, and do not agree with you," said Jen, putting on his hat, "and after all, I do not see how you deduce this drugging theory?"

"Oh, as to that, I was once a bit of a chemist," explained Arkel; "and when you took me to see Jaggard I smelt a curious perfume which seemed to be hanging about him. As a servant is not likely to use perfumes, I thought it curious."

"Did Etwald notice it?" asked Jen, thoughtfully.

"Yes; but he professes his inability to explain it. He thinks the man was stunned, and not drugged. I think that he was first drugged and then stunned."

"H'm; it's queer! I'll have to think it over. But when the body was taken out of the window, Arkel?"

"The thieves carried it across the lawn!"

"Then down through the bushes to that winding lane, I suppose?" said Jen. "I know all that; but afterwards!"

"They put it into a cart and took it away."

"How do you know that?" asked the Major, all on the alert.

"Why," said Arkel, fingering his fat chin, "it was raining, as you may remember, on that night. We found the mark of wheels in the lane, which would not have been left had not a considerable amount of rain fallen."

"Did you follow the trail?" asked the Major.

"To the high-road only, and there the wheel marks became mixed up with those of other vehicles. I never met the like of it before, and I am fairly puzzled. Why should these wretches steal the mortal remains of a murdered man?"

"True," said Jen; "and why should these wretches have murdered that man?"

"As to that, we are by no means certain that they are the same."

"I don't follow you."

"No? And yet it is easy enough. If those who slew Mr. Aylmer wanted his body, they could have stolen it on the high-road, where they struck him down. It was mere foolishness to venture liberty and life in a raid upon the house."

"It may have been an after-thought."

"People don't have afterthoughts in grim matters of this kind," said Arkel, rising. "Well, Major, good-by; good-by. Should I learn anything else, I shall let you know; but depend upon it; the truth of the matter is to come from Jaggard."

"He is honest. Honest!" cried Jen. "I'll stake my existence upon that."

(To be continued.)

PILOT BOYS OF NORWAY.

Youngest Navigators on Any Sea—Boats Are Copies of Viking Ships.

The hardy Norsman takes to the sea like a duck to a pond. He is almost amphibious. The youngsters on the coast begin to work for their living at an early age, and it is astonishing what different phases of sea life the boys fill to the satisfaction of their employers and themselves. The Norwegian pilot boat, a clumsy-looking craft of some thirty feet in length, is perhaps as seaworthy a craft of her size as swims the sea.

She has a large cruising ground. She carries a sprit sail of fair size and several jibs to suit the weather. Carefully handled, she will ride out the heavy gales which in the German ocean kick up a dangerous and choppy sea that calls for all the seaworthy qualities of a sailing vessel.

The boat is manned by a pilot and his boy. Her cruising ground is between the Naze and the Skaw—prominent landmarks for vessels bound to Norwegian ports or harbors in the Baltic or Gulf of Finland.

The pilot boat is run alongside the ship, the pilot jumps aboard and the boy trims sheet and steers for his home port, which may be as far north as Stavanger.

The sail is long and lonely, but the boy contrives to navigate thither, blow high or blow low. He seems to have the homing instinct of the pigeon, as the only aid to navigation that he has is a chart and compass. An easterly gale often blows him far off his course.

Some of the boys are only 13 or 14 years old. They are the youngest navigators on any sea. Flaxen of hair, with blue eyes and rosy cheeks, they are brave and sturdy sailors. Their diet is chiefly salt fish and sea biscuit when afloat, but sometimes the vessel that takes the pilot will throw the youngster a chunk of cooked salt beef or salt pork, and sometimes a hunk of plum duff for his own private consumption; but these cases are comparatively rare, and the boy generally has to depend upon the narrow resources of his own larder.

His little craft contains no side lights. Whenever a vessel approaches him, he lights a flare-up signal—a torch of oakum soaked in tar or kerosene.

On his solitary voyage to his home port he sleeps in the daytime, his boat steering herself. In this way he prepares for the vigil of the night.

The dangers he encounters are many and great, but he takes them in a matter-of-fact way highly creditable to him. It is strange that so few boats are lost. The truth is that their model is such as to withstand just the sort of weather they meet. In their principal features they resemble the viking ships of old, which in their adventurous voyages weathered the heaviest Atlantic gales and ravaged the British and Irish seacoasts in many a hostile and bloody raid.

The young Norwegian, after his training in the pilot boats or mackerel boats, mans trading ships of every country.

Lars or Nils or Oscar has one ideal, and that is to ship aboard a British or American yacht, preferably a steam craft, where he lives a happy life, well fed and well treated. He is a frugal, thrifty sailor, and his earnings, with but few deductions, are sent home to gladden many a Scandinavian fireside.

He gets on an average $30 a month on a yacht, an amount which looks very big to him in comparison with the scanty wages paid to sailors under the Norwegian flag.

"How would you like to take part in a cantata?" "I'd jump at the chants."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Artist—It's a good thing to hunger for fame. Model—Yes, for if you don't get the fame you're sure to get the hunger!

"I can recommend this horse, sir," said a dealer, "as a strong, sound animal." "It must be," agreed the customer, "to have attained its present age!"

"Lottie, what would you do if you work up some night and found a burglar in your room?" "If he was hunting for money I'd get up and help him hunt."—Life.

Father—You are marrying my daughter for love, you say? But she get 80,000 marks dowry. Suitor—Well, that can't be avoided, can it? —Fliegende Blatter.

"Impatience," said Uncle Eben, "is ginerally de feelin' you has when you wants somebody else to hurry an' make up foh de time you's been wastin'."—Washington Star.

Father—What! You want to marry my daughter? Why, sir, you can't support her. I can hardly do it myself. Suitor (blankly)—C-can't we chip in together?

Gentleman (hiring valet)—Then I understand you to have some knowledge of barbering. You've cut hair, off and on? Applicant—Off sir, but never on.—Boston Standard.

"He lives on the fat of the land," said a man to a friend, indicating a passer-by in the street. "What business is he in?" "He's the proprietor of an anti-fat remedy!"

"Why, Henry! How does it happen that you can't spell even the simplest words?" "I can't spell 'em if they ain't in our spellin' book, can I?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Here's a remarkable gold coin I want to show you, old man." "Eh? This is an ordinary half-eagle. What's remarkable about it?" "It belongs to me."—Boston Transcript.

Mrs. Hutton—We are organizing a piano club, Mr. Flatleigh. Will you join us? Flatleigh—With pleasure, Mrs. Hutton. What pianist do you propose to club first?—Tit-Bits.

Knicker—What's Smith's idea of himself? Bocker—He doesn't think anybody else can do a thing he can do, and he doesn't think anybody else can do a thing he can't do.—Puck.

The father—Did mamma punish you to-day, Tommie? The boy—Yes, sir. "What did she do?" "Made me stay in the house while she was taking her singing lesson."—Yonkers Statesman.

Wigwag—What, roses! Don't you know a girl never marries the fellow who sends her flowers? Oldbach—Sure I do. That's why I always try to keep on the safe side.—Philadelphia Record.

Sufferer—Doctor, don't you think that a change to a warmer climate would do me good? Specialist—Good gracious, man! That's just what I am trying to save you from!—New York Times.

Enraged Creditor—I've had enough of mounting all these stairs every day to collect this bill. Debtor—Well, I can tell you a piece of news that will please you. After to-morrow, I'm going to live in the basement.—Pele Mele.

"So when Bella rejected Jack, he went immediately and proposed to Maud?" "Yes; but that wasn't the best of it. What do you think? He gave Maud an order on Bella for the engagement ring."—Boston Transcript.

"Did you ever have appendicitis?" said the insurance man. "Well," answered the skeptic, "I was operated on. But I never felt sure whether it was a case of appendicitis or a case of professional curiosity.—Washington Star.

"Some men are so queer." "And you are going to tell me of one particularly queer one." "Yes. It's Mr. Barberton. His wife used to beg him for nickels and dimes, and now he's cheerfully paying her a hundred a week for alimony."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"I hope you will be interested in yonder gentleman," said the hostess. "I have assigned him to take you out to dinner." "I shall be," responded the lady addressed. "That gentleman was formerly my husband and he's behind with his alimony."—Washington (D. C.) Herald.

Woggs—You seem to be very proud of your youngest son. He must be a very remarkable youth. Boggs—He is. Judging from the papers, I think he is the only 12-year-old boy in the country who hasn't invented a perfect wireless telegraph, sub-marine boat, or aeroplane.—Puck.

"You will admit that doctors sometimes make mistakes, won't you?" "Oh, yes, the same as lawyers," was the cool reply. "And doctors' mistakes are buried six feet underground," was the lawyer's triumphant reply. "Yes," he replied, "and the lawyer's mistakes often swing in the air."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Doctor's Fault.

Judge—I am led to understand you stole the watch of the doctor who had just written a prescription for you at the free dispensary. What have you to say to this charge?

Prisoner—Well, your honor, I found myself in a desperate quandary. His prescription said "a spoonful every hour," and I had no timepiece.—Fliegende Blatter.

The kind of luck they have is sufficient to keep most hunters from becoming Game Hogs.

Burdens Lifted From Bad Backs

Weary is the back that bears the burden of kidney ills. There's no rest nor peace for the man or woman who has a bad back. The distress begins in early morning. You feel lame and not refreshed. It's hard to get out of bed. It hurts to stoop to tie your shoes. All day the ache keeps up. Any sudden movement sends a sharp twinge through the back. It is torture to stoop or straighten. At night the sufferer retires to toss and twist and groan. Backache is kidney ache—a throbbing, dull aching in the kidneys. To cure backache you must first cure the kidneys. Plasters or liniments won't do. You must get at the cause, inside.

Doan's Kidney Pills Cure Sick Kidneys

Six Months of Misery

Doan's Kidney Pills Brought About a Complete Restoration.

CHARLES EASTER, E. Locust St., Watseka, Ill., says: "In the summer of 1904 I was attacked by pains in the small of my back and as the time passed, the trouble increased until my whole right hip was affected. For six months I could not sit in a chair and I was unable to sleep nights. I lost forty pounds in weight and was so lame and sore that I could not raise my hands to my face. I was languid, had no energy and was bothered by a shortness of breath. During all that time I doctored and used a great amount of medicine but to no avail. Sometimes there was an almost complete retention of the kidney secretions and there was much sediment in them. My wife finally persuaded me to try Doan's Kidney Pills. They gave me such prompt relief that I continued taking them and gradually my condition improved. The trouble with my kidneys was corrected and my aches and pains were removed. I am so grateful for this cure that I cheerfully recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to other persons suffering from kidney complaint."

HOW TO TELL WHEN THE KIDNEYS ARE DISORDERED

Painful Symptoms—Backache, side-ache, pains when stooping or lifting, sudden sharp twinges, rheumatic pains, neuralgia, painful, scanty or too frequent urination, dizzy spells, dropsy.

Urinary Symptoms — Discolored or cloudy urine. Urine that contains sediment. Urine that stains the linen. Painful passages. Blood or shreds in the urine. Let a bottleful of the morning urine stand for 24 hours. If it shows a cloudy or fleecy settling, or a layer of fine grains, like brick-dust, the kidneys are disordered.

Twice-Told Testimony

A Wonderful Cure Fully Verified By the Test of Time.

MRS. J. M. BARNHART, 952 N. Jackson St., Frankfort, Ind., says: "Several years ago I was running into Bright's disease. My body bloated a great deal and I had such terrible pains in the small of my back that I could scarcely stand. I rested poorly and the kidney secretions contained a sediment, also being distressing in passage. I tried various preparations but steadily grew worse and when Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention, I procured a supply. The contents of the first box did me so much good that I continued taking the remedy until I was cured. I gave a public statement on July 19, 1906, recommending Doan's Kidney Pills and now I can add that I have had no need of a kidney remedy in over a year."

Cats as Human Food.

The Brussels correspondent of the New York Herald (Paris edition) notes that in Brussels cat is considered a delicious food in some classes. Workmen in breweries fatten cats and turn them into a stew.

Edward Topsel, who wrote learnedly about the cat—his "History of Four-footed Beasts," was published in 1607—was of the opinion that the flesh of cats can seldom be free from poison, "by reason of their daily food, eating rats and mice, wrens and other birds which feed on poison, and above all the brain of a cat is most poisonous, for it being above measure dry, stoppeth the animal spirits, that they cannot pass into the ventricle, by reason whereof memory faileth, and the infected person faileth into a Phrenzie." But Topsel was prejudiced against the cat. The people of Savu, who lived the natural life when Capt. Cook visited them, preferred cats to sheep and goats. In Germany many a cat has been sold for hare, and jugged cat has been relished there by foreign sojourners. The handsome daughter of a landlady far up in the Canton Vaud told us as a matter of course that when the snow was deep and communication was cut off, they all ate cats.

FOR BETTER FARMERS.

Columbia University Adds Course in Agricultural Science.

Columbia University has added agriculture to its curriculum. This action is responsive to the wave of interest in farming that sweeps the country and to the perceptible demand for practical education which will fit people to return to the land where they may escape the oppressive cost of living that has become keenly felt in all the cities.

Within a radius of 150 miles of New York City are thousands of acres, the faculty learns, that are not contributing to the city as they should do. Delaware County milk, Orange County butter, Ulster County berries, Dutchess County apples and eggs and Long Island vegetables, together with the produce of other large sections in Connecticut and New Jersey could be increased manifold in quantity and with vast improvement in quality. Restoration of such land would lessen cost to consumers and yield good profit to producers.

The university promoters think that in this nearby territory there is opportunity rarely presented for practical training in farm work. With the development of rapid transportation facilities, with good roads and the auto truck, the choicest products of the farm may be delivered to city consumers promptly and in good condition.

It would be useless, according to this view, to encourage young men to go back to the land to practice methods which devastated the soil and impoverished those who once owned it. They must have the best equipment and scientific knowledge along with efficient training for the work.

While the lectures now arranged will deal with the scientific aspects of farming, they will be divested as much as possible of technicalities. Instruction will be simple in its character, and it will be addressed not only to those who are directly engaged in farming, but as well to all who may be interested in the agricultural conditions and problems of the country.

Quality Scarcely Equaled.

Coal is obtained in many parts of New Zealand, but the chief mines are in the Westport district, in South Nelson; the Grey district, in Westland; in Otago and Auckland. The best coal occurs in the two former, the Westport mines producing a quality scarcely equaled throughout the world.

Spoiled.

"Are you making anything of a hit with Miss Prettygirl?"

"I fear not. Can't seem to interest her. I have lauded her beauty, but my strongest superlatives make absolutely no impression."

"Hold on! I forgot to tell you, old man. She was formerly engaged to the press agent of a circus."—Pittsburg Post.

Harmless Hop.

He is not old, he is not young,
The Chinese laundryman Hop Lung,
The yellowed cheek, the slanting eye,
The humble nose, the cheek bone high,
The cheerful face, the willing hand
That serves the proudest in the land.
His back yard you may scan with care.
No dirty linen airing there!
—Chicago Tribune.

A Substitute for Meat.

The thrifty housewife will find in porridge an excellent substitute for meat. A cup of wheat kernels should be soaked in hot water for 12 hours, then passed through a meat chopper or grinder and boiled slowly for an hour or more. Then serve with sugar and cream or a fruit preserve. It is more nourishing than meat. A cupful of wheat grains will make a hearty meal for three persons and as the cost of a quart of wheat is only two cents this amount will feed a family of seven or eight for breakfast.

Her Own Fault.

Mistress—I don't want you to have so much company. You have more callers in a day than I have in a week.

Domestic—Well, mum, perhaps if you'd try to be a little more agreeable you'd have as many friends as I have.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

How To Make Good Coffee.

First, last and all the time, have a clean coffee pot. Don't wash it with common yellow laundry soap or powder because that makes it smell bad and gives the coffee a sickening taste. Easy Task soap sterilizes coffee pots and all cooking utensils, making them clean, sweet and wholesomely healthy. That's the beauty about Easy Task soap—it is just as good for cooking vessels as for cloth or painted work or glassware or china. Not an expensive soap—five cents a cake.

WHERE SETS MIX.

Washington Social Life Made Up of Delightful Surprises.

The charm of Washington social life is to be accounted for by the ease with which the different sets mix, writes M. G. Seckendorff. In New York the different sets are like clubs designed to met the wants of certain professions or callings, their names in many instances proclaiming the intentions. You know to a certainty, as a rule, whom you are going to met at such and such a house; who is going to sit next to you at table; who is likely to talk to you in the smoking room, and on what. The dollar mark, like a pall, hangs over all. Washington, on the other hand, is full of surprises. Its variety never stales. In the same house you may meet around the board a diplomat, a judge of the higher courts, a member of Congress, an employe of one of the executive departments, a scientist, an artist, a litterateur, a traveler—each probably a man of some distinction in his field. Each has something to say, and says it, as a rule, interestingly. It is no exaggeration to say that you pinch yourself sometimes to realize that you are not in a community of great traditions, of ages of culture and refinement, but in a town which, less than a hundred years ago, existed largely on paper only, and only a few decades back was derisively called a "city of magnificent distances."

The boast of Washington is that it is cosmopolitan. It is impossible to deny it, so far as its society is concerned. And yet—and yet, it is a source of supreme satisfaction to every member of that society to know that there are 25 trains daily ready to take him to New York.

A BLOW IN JAMAICA

Things That Happen When a Big Storm Breaks Loose There.

A WEST INDIAN HURRICANE.

It Will Leap Out of a Clear Sky and Level Almost Everything In Its Path—Then Comes a Torrential Downpour That Ends In a Flood.

"Have you ever been through a West Indian hurricane?" said a man who has lived in the tropics on and off for a number of years. "Do you want to know what the experience is like?

"A hurricane will leap out of a clear sky, swoop down on a city, blow everything in its path flat and pass on. Then follows the tail of the hurricane, a steady breeze blowing in the same direction, but at a much lower velocity. This is likely to continue for many hours, sometimes for many days, and is always accompanied by a torrential downpour of rain.

"I was in Kingston, Jamaica, at the time of the hurricane of 1903. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon I was in my office on the top floor of a rickety wooden building. As suddenly as a clap of thunder the room went dark.

"I had a pretty good idea of what was about to happen and, going to the window, looked out across the roofs. A black cloud had whirled up out of the southwest, obscuring the sun, but the mountains back of the city were still golden with light.

"In less than a quarter of an hour the wind reached us. The first structure that went was a wooden watchtower about 200 feet high that had been used in the old days to locate ships approaching the harbor. It had weathered all previous hurricanes, but this time it went down like a house of cards. Spars of lumber from that tower were carried as far as twenty blocks before they came to the ground.

"Then the spire of the church went, the roofs of a good many residences were torn off, and some fine palm trees in the public gardens snapped off about halfway from the ground. Buildings in Kingston, however, are calculated to stand a pretty severe blow. They are built only a few stories high, and the roofs present a broad and comparatively flat surface to the wind. Considering the velocity at which that hurricane was traveling, the damage was not great. Even my crazy office building withstood it. But the tail of the thing followed, with a heavier rain than I have ever seen before or since. To say that it came down in bucketfuls would be mild. It was as if the clerk of the weather had taken the plug out of some huge vat suspended above our heads and allowed the water to plump straight down on us.

"In three hours the macadam on the streets had been washed into the harbor. The street outside my window was a rushing river as much as four feet deep in places. I saw a cart try to cross it, but with the water above the axle of the wheel and the horse's legs being washed away from under it it was an impossible task, and the driver turned back. Big casks and packing cases were dancing on the surface like corks.

"As you can imagine, I did not get home to supper that evening. It was 8 o'clock before the rain stopped and the water in the streets had drained into the harbor. Even then traffic had not begun to reorganize itself.

"The trolley car tracks had been washed out, and no cars were running. Cabs, however, were doing a roaring business, and eventually I got a cabman to drive me home for three times his customary charge.

"The damage to property in Kingston mounted up to hundreds of thousands of dollars, but the real destruction was wrought in the country districts. Floods wiped out many a negro village and sent the flimsy houses floating down the rivers. The railroads were tied up for nearly a week. Every banana tree in the path of the hurricane was uprooted. Oh, yes, a West Indian hurricane can do a lot of damage when it gets busy.

"Loss of life, did you say? Of course there was. Nearly 200 people were killed throughout the island on that occasion, but we grow accustomed to that in the West Indies. We expect a hurricane every once in awhile, and we know that it will take its toll of human life when it comes. If you had been telling the story you would probably have mentioned that first of all, but sudden death is so common below the tropic of Cancer that we get callous, I suppose."—New York Sun.

Albion and Columbia.

"Albion, the Gem of the Ocean," was written and composed by Jesse Hammond, an English government dock official, about 1820 and was heard above all others in the theaters, music halls and on London streets. It is apparent that "gem of the ocean" fits an island more aptly than our large tract of continent, and "borne by the red and the blue" (the red of the British army and blue of the navy) is more logical than the meaningless line "borne by the red, white and blue." The lines of the English songs are almost word for word identical with our version, "The Red, White and Blue."—Exchange.

A Manly Woman.

"Why do you say she is a manly woman?" asked Jinks.

"She always gets off a car properly," said Minks.—Buffalo Express.

NEBULA HYPOTHESIS.

One of the Most Interesting Propositions of Science.

WHAT IT ACTUALLY MEANS.

That the Sun, Planets and All Matter Were Once a Vast Mass of Incandescent Gas All Jumbled Together In an Enormous Chaotic Cloud.

Everybody has heard the phrase, the nebula hypothesis, but what is it?

In a few words this is the meaning of "nebula hypothesis:" That the sun, the planets and all that is in them were at one time in the inconceivably remote past a vast mass of chaotic, incandescent gas all jumbled together in an enormous nebula, or cloud.

To begin with, the first conception that science has dared to make, however, takes us one step further back Without mentioning the origin of matter itself science conceives that in the beginning all matter was uniformly distributed throughout space — that there were no stars, no planets, no satellites, but that all space was filled with the matter we now have divided up into very fine particles some distance apart. The consistency of such material was perforce very thin indeed, much more rarefied than the highest vacuum we can obtain now by air pumps. From this state to the nebulous state the theory has a missing link, one that can only be satisfied by supposing divine command, for it assumes, in the words of Professor Todd, that "gradually centers of attraction formed and these centers pulled in toward themselves other particles. As a result of the inward falling of matter toward these centers, the collision of its particles and their friction upon each other the material masses grew hotter and hotter. Nebulae seeming to fill the entire heavens were formed—luminous fire mist, like the filmy objects still seen in the sky, though vaster and exceedingly numerous." This process is supposed to have gone on for countless ages, faster in some regions than in others. Many million nebulae were formed and set in rotation around their own axes. This happily can be explained by science. Whenever particles are attracted toward a center and are kept from falling directly to this center a whirlpool is formed, rotating in one direction. An example of this, though humble and not exactly analogous, is the rotation of water in a basin when the stopper is pulled out of the bottom. Gravity attracts the water immediately above the hole, which starts flowing out, thus leaving a space to be filled. The rest of the water rushes in from all sides to do this, and the whirlpool is the result.

Now each of these whirling nebulae became exceedingly hot, and each formed what is known as a star or sun, our sun being one. The earth and other planets had not then come into separate existence, of course, as it is supposed that they were thrown off later from the sun.

Our sun in its nebulous form and rotating swiftly on its axis gradually flattened at its poles on account of centrifugal motion. This phenomenon is entirely familiar to those who have seen a ball of clay on a potter's wheel gradually flatten. The motion was so swift and the mass so nebulous that the sun to be took the shape of a disk. As time went on the outer part became cool and somewhat rigid, while the inner part continued its cooling and contracting. Thus the inner part drew away from the outer, leaving a ring of matter whirling around on the outside. This breaking off of the ring is supposed to be hastened by the inability of the outside to keep up the swift motion of the central mass, both on account of the slight cohesion and of the centrifugal force. But this particular part of the argument has nothing to stand on if the first law of motion is true.

In the successive stages of the sun's contraction this process was repeated over and over again, until several rings were whirling around the central orb. They would necessarily be in the same plane. Now, these rings, not being uniform in mass or thickness, would each gradually accumulate toward the densest portion until they, too, would form a ball which would subsequently flatten, and if the substance continued nebulous and the ball was large enough they would also slough rings.

Of course the rings the sun discarded have become the planets, which, as required by the theory, are all very nearly in the same plane. The rings that the planets formed have become moons or satellites. So we are driven to conclude that our sun at one time filled all the space from his present position to the farthest planet in the solar system.

From this theory there is another thing that we have to believe, and that is that every star in the heavens has gone through this same process and has a family of planets sailing around it, just as our sun has. It would be impossible to see these planets, of course, for it is impossible to see a star, even with the greatest telescope, except as a mere point of light.

As regards the proving of this nebula hypothesis, of course it cannot be done. But everything points to its accuracy. Many nebulae are seen even now among the stars that seem to be going through the delayed process of world forming. Around one of the planets of our own solar system, Saturn, are three rings, which are probably destined in time to become moons, in the opinion of some scholars.—A. T. Hodge in New York Tribune.

FREE TO YOU—MY SISTER

Free to You and Every Sister Suffering From Woman's Ailments.

I am a woman.
I know woman's sufferings.
I have found the cure.

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer of women's ailments. I want to tell all women of this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhœa or Whitish discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days' treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial; and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 13 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER"—with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young. To Mothers of Daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhœa, Green Sickness and Painful or Irregular Menstruation in Young Ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases, and makes women young, also the book. Write today, as you may not see this offer again. Address

PAVING CONTRACTORS SUBMITTED BIDS

Nine Different Contractors Submit Bids for Putting in Two Miles of Paving

LOWEST BID WAS $64,776.50

Montpelier Company Will Be Awarded Contract Next Monday Evening

Tuesday was an eventful day for Butler, being the time for receiving the bids for the two miles of pavement which is to be laid here between now and November 1. There were nine different contractors who were in the contest for the job, and the lowest bidders were the Neal Paving Company, of Montpelier, Ind., a well known and reliable firm.

Their bid for the job was approximately estimated at $64,776.50. The bid being by units, the cost may vary slightly above or below this figure.

The company was represented by Mr. Neal and Mr. Mason, who seemed pleased with results, and told the council they were ready to give any kind of a bond which might be designated.

The citizens are also pleased because of the fairness of the contractors and the business like way in which the council handled the matter.

The HERALD does not believe it necessary to go into print with a tabulated form showing the different bids, but think it is sufficient to give its readsrs the actual cost of the pavement in plain figures. It will cost the property owners in the residence districts $176 00 for lots 66 feet wide, and for lots in the business section which are mostly 22 feet wide, it will cost $75.00 per lot.

This is a much lower price than was estimated by many people and puts a different color on the paving proposition, and the HERALD does not believe there can be anyone who will feel that it is a burden without a benefit equal to the cost. The Wabash Railroad Company, who will have $3,500.00 of the amount to pay, have gotten into line, and Tuesday had a special train here with high officials conferring with the people and expressed themselves as being willing to stand their asses ment.

The material for the pavement wil consist of Metropolitan brick and con crete filler. It will take 1,300,000 brick or 130 car loads, and is to be finished by November 1. The Neal Paving Company's bid was $10,000 below the next lowest bidder, so it is easy to see that the city is getting an unusually low price.

Mr. Mason, who will be in charge of the paving, will move his family here and do light housekeeping until the work is completed.

At the opening of the bids a large number of interested citizens turned out. The council mayor and clerk were all present, and Milo D. Husselman acted as special clerk.

LECTURE COURSE PROVES SUCCESSFUL

Another Course will be Arranged For Benefit of Library

The committee in charge of the Lecture Course movement the past year, for the benefit of the public library, wish to thank the citizens of Butler and vicinity for their liberal patronage.

A great effort was made to place tickets in as many homes as possible in order that all might share in the good resulting therefrom.

An evening spent with some inspiring lecturer or good concert company may change the course of a whole life. The average Lyceum lecturer has an abundance of optimistic faith in man and faith in the right, and it is this spirit that he puts into his work that makes the lecturer so helpful and inspiring.

There have been some numbers of the course, more or less criticised, but while this is to be expected, there have been others well worth the price of the full course ticket and the hearty appreciation manifested leads us to believe that, on the whole, the course has been very satisfactory. One fact has been fully established—the people appreciate good entertainments more than cheap shows—which is very gratifying to those who have worked so hard for the last few years to establish a lecture course in our city. We have been urged to take advantage of these opportunities for in so doing we are enabled to be more useful to ourselves and to our community. And the influence upon our young people in bringing them in touch with these great artists and educating them along higher lines of thinking can not be estimated.

In the course this year, they have not only given a series of high class entertainments in which we have had value received, but the net profits will enable the library board to furnish many new books and keep the library open more days in the week. And so the money spent is as "bread cast upon the waters" that returns to us not "after many days," but every day.

The lecture course has "made good" and is here to stay. It is a real institution of philanthropy and our local efforts are a part of a great system which deserves our hearty support.

Because of the grand success achieved this year the committee have had the courage to purchase a still better course for the coming season, and we bespeak for them your hearty co-operation and generous patronage.

THE LIBRARY BOARD.

DOUBLE FUNERAL

Dr. N. E. Brown and Wife Pass Away Within Three Days

Dr. N. E. Brown and wife are no more, he having passed away last Thursday morning after a lingering illness and his devoted companion following him on Saturday evening, she being feeble gave way to her sorrow, thus did the old and respected couple lay down their lives almost at the same time. After his death Mrs. Brown bore up for a few short hours and had expected to attend the funeral, but she had not the constitution to battle the enemy of life and soon joined her husband in the eternal world. Monday they were both laid to rest in the Hamilton cemetery.

David N. E. Brown was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, Nov. 30, 1831, and died at his home in Butler, Ind., March 31, 1910, aged 78 years, 4 months and 1 day.

Lydia Ann Hooper was born in Columbiana county, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1828, and died in Butler, Ind., April 2, 1910, aged 81 years, 3 months and 26 days

They ware united in marriage, Sept. 23, 1855, thus spending nearly fifty-five years in loving companionship. To them were born seven children, two having in infancy preceded them to a better home.

They leave to mourn them three sons, two daughters, eleven grandchildren and six great grandchildren. Besides these Dr. Brown leaves two sisters, Mrs. Sarah Dixon, of Hamilton, and Mrs. Mary Thomas, of North Manchester. Mrs. Brown also leaves one sister, Mrs. Mary Cass, of Montgomery, Mich.

Dr. Brown came to Steuben county in 1847, and Mrs. Brown in 1854. Dr. Brown commenced the study of medicine under Dr. Alphonso Wood, of Angola, and commenced practice of his profession in Hillsdale county, Mich., in the year, 1855, and continued the same until 1895, when age

Married, on last Saturday evening, at the Methodist parsonage, Mr. Earl Haddix and Miss Florence Limpert, both of near Hicksville. Mr. Haddix is a carpenter and will make their home in Butler.

ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL TERM OF SCHOOL

Class Will Render Their Own Program at Opera House May 10

The Senior class of the Butler high school has ten pupils who are expected to pass the examination and graduate this year. The exercises will be held in the opera house, Tuesday, May 10, the class giving their own program.

The school year just closing has been very satisfactory to the patrons of the school, and Prof. Bean seems to be the unanimous choice of the board for another year. At least two of the present teachers will not make application for another year. These teachers are Miss Achasa Beechler and Miss Mountz, both of whom have given most excellent satisfaction. The board has received a number of applications for these positions, but as yet no action has been taken. Miss Beechler's place as a primary teacher will be especially hard to fill, her ability along this line being above the average, and teachers for that particular grade are not so numerous perhaps as for some of the higher grades.

The graduating exercises here are always looked to with much interest and will be one of the pleasant occasions of the year.

The ten graduates are as follows: Mabel Mutzfeld, Ethel Tess, Ross Firestone, Robert Brown, Gertrude Evertts, Grace Whetsel, Veva Farner, Argyl Beams, May Dailey and Jennie Steward.

LIBRARY OF THE "IMMORTAL J. N."

The Collection of Valuable Books of That Most Eccentric Man Are Falling Into Decay

Hidden away in the most unlikely place in the world, a shabby, woefully prosing, little cottage in a country town is a library so unique and valuable that to wander among its ancient tomes and fondle their ponderous clasps and worm eaten pages would plunge the ordinary bibliomaniac into what Robert Lois Stevenson calls "a fine, dizzy, muddle headed joy."

Since there is no real reason for preserving the secret forever inviolate, let it be told that the village is McCutchenville, in Wyandot County, Ohio, and the owner of the library is Mrs. Elias Cooley. While this name may not convey any especial significance, Mrs. Cooley is the sister of the late Jacob Newman Free, better known as the Immortal J. N., and the last surviving member of an extraordinary family.

The Immortal J. N., who often visited Bryan, was one of the most eccentric and at the same time pathetic characters whoever lived in Ohio. He first came into public notice at the time of the civil war by means of his frequent journeys between Abraham Lincoln and Jefferson for the purpose of "removing the pressure," i.e., restoring peace. Through overstudy and brooding over the tragedy of the rebellion he had become mentally unsound and through all the rest of his long life he remained resolved upon one thing, "to lift the pressure."

Today his splendid library is piled in confusion in the little McCutchenville cottage in mute testimony of his erudition. In the old home one side of the front room floor to ceiling was lined with volumes and table in front of the shelves was heaped with them The collection numbers about one thousand volumes, They are printed in many languages—Latin, Greek, German, Erench, Hebrew, Sanskrit and Chinese. Some of them date as far back as the middle of the sixteenth century. These are staunch old tomes but the worms have bored their neat little tunnels quite through the heavy bindings of wood and leather. Some are pierced in this way from cover and a few are gnawed by the rats.

One book dated 1570 and written in Latin contains the works of Eusibius Bishop of Caesaria in Palestine. The covers are a quarter of an inch thick and covered with leather, and the front is closed with metal clasps Another similar in date and binding is devoted to the works of Chrysostom. A sixteenth century bible is over two feet long Thu front cover and the back are torn off and reveal the methods of binding. The works of Justin, the philosopher and martyr, printed in Constantinople in 1686, are a curious commingling of Latin and Greek and is abundantly interlined with notes in the same language.—Exchange.

Message From Chas. Stevens

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Stevens received a message from their son, Charlie, saying it was impossible for him to come to Butler, but that he was sending the body of his brother, Harold, by express, which will most probably arrive here Saturday evening. Services Sunday afternoon with burial at Edgerton, Ohio.

TAGGART IS OUT OF RACE

Will Not Be a Candidate for United States Senator

INDIANAPOLIS, April 4.—Thomas Taggart favors the election of a United States senator in an open caucus providing the next state legislature is controlled by the democrats. Mr. Taggart's statement to this effect to-day is of especial interest because of the fact that an unsuccessful effort was made to do away with the secret ballot in the caucus which elected Senator B. F. Shively last year.

Concerning the election of a senator Mr. Taggart said:

"I would much prefer to see open ballot so that the constituents of every senator and representative might know for whom their man voted."

AS TO MARSHALL'S SUGGESTION

Concerning the suggestion by Governor Marshall that the democratic state convention nams a candidate for the United States senate, Mr. Taggart said:

"The disposition of the party and the state committee is to treat Governor Marshall with the greatest respect. While I believe that a great many people differ with him there is no reason why any ill feeling should be engendered. I am sure Governor Marshall is perfectly honest in his belief. But I firmly believe it would be better if the resolution proposed by the governor were not made applicable until some future convention and the hold over senators and all delegates to the state convention might so understand it. Many delegates to the state convention were chosen before this discussion came up.

MR. TAGGART IS NOT A CANDIDATE

INDIANAPOLIS, April 4.—Thomas Taggart, after some months of inactivity in that line, has resumed activity as a political writer with all his old time spirit, lucidity and cleverness as will be seen in the following:

"Indianapolis, Ind., April 4, 1910.

To the Editor Indianapolis News:

"Sir—Your readers will clearly recall that in December, 1908, after a democratic legislature had been elected the News devoted considerable space to its reasons why I should not be, and why the Hon. John W. Kern should be a candidate for United States senator.

"Curiously enough, but not strange to your readers, upon my announcement, after deliberation, that I would not be a candidate, the interest of the News in Mr. Kern's behalf immediately ceased.

"This was quite in keeping with the attitude of the News in 1892, when, in effect, it asserted 'We are for a tariff reform, but state pride leads us to support Benjamin Harrison for the presidency.' In that instance, we found the News declaring its belief in the wise doctrine of tariff reform, but advocating the election of a presidential candidate who was pledged to sign a high tariff measure.

Thrush to Hold Over

President Taft issued an order Friday, putting assistant postmasters at first and second class offices in the classified service. Something like 21,000 officers are affected by the order. For several years there has been a demand that assistant postmasters in the larger postoffices be transferred to the classified service, the argument in favor of the step being that assistant postmasters have confidential relations with the postmasters and as a rule stay on from one administration to another.

This order affects all assistant or deputy postmasters in the postoffices where the postmaster gets a salary of $2,000 or over per year, and which includes the Auburn office, the only one in the county which is affected. Ira Thrush is the assistant here and by this order, he will hold indefinitely as long as he does the work properly, no matter who is postmaster. It is one of the best official positions in the county —Auburn Dispatch.

Interurban News

The town board at Waterloo held a special session Friday evening to discuss matters of interest with the officials of the Toledo & Chicago Interurban road. Manager Purinton and other officials were present. On the subject of the extension of the road to Wayne street, the officials made the statement that they had the estimates all ready for the extension in Kendallville and Waterloo, but that nothing could be done in this line until after the discharge of the receiver. This may happen in a few months, but as soon as the campany took back the line both these extensions would be built at once and assurances were also given that the line would be extended as far east as Butler.

All property owners and tenants must clean up their alleys at once or it will be done by the marshal at their expense. It is also requested that all business men be more careful about throwing waste paper in alleys and street.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN A CLERGYMAN'S LIFE

Small Annoyances and Great Trials that Affect Preachers in Large Cities

"The average city church is a gossip shop. This gossip shop is filled with hornets, who sting the minister a dozen times or so every day, 365 days a year. A minister has a man's job—a job for a man with red blood in his veins, and, properly considered, the biggest job in the world. Yet a minister cannot help sometimes but feel that he is being made a monkey of, because of the peculiar conditions he has to meet in his church."

That is pretty frank language for a clergyman to use for publication, isn't it? Yet the clergyman who used it had a great many more equally direct things to say in lifting the curtain of the ministerial life for the interviewer. Rev. Frederick E. Hopkins, pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational church, Chicago, is the divine who was interviewed by a writer in the Record-Herald. Dr. Hopkins is an ultra-modern preacher, who believes in topical sermons, in practical church activities as part of the life of the community and who is an advocate of plain speaking.

Dr. Hopkins came to be interviewed as a result of recent statements made in New York by Rev. Charles A. Eaton and Rev. William Carter. Mr. Eaton declared that a church to-day is too "shriveled up" and that a pastor has enormous difficulties to meet in seeking to carry on his work. Mr. Carter stated that there is no co-operation and sympathy on the part of a metropolitan congregation for the pastor, who has to do his work alone. Dr. Hopkins agreed with both these men, and then he added a whole lot more on the subject, giving the most unreserved interview of the sort printed in many moons.

"Of course, these New Yorkers are right," said Dr. Hopkins, "and they could go a great deal farther and be within the bounds of truth, as applied to the average city parish. It is of the average city parish, please bear in mind, that I am going to talk. When a pastor first takes hold of a church he is filled with idealism. He is filled with a spiritual fire, with poetic ideas, with the white, pure light of a great ambition. His heart goes out to all men in fraternity and kindness. In short, he has ideals. Well, the first thing that happens to him is the discovery that his church is not by any means a unit. Besides all the various personalities that make up the parish, the congregation divides itself into three main classes. He discovers that what may be called the first class—for it is a large class—are materialists. They look on the whole thing as a business proposition. The minister is simply the business manager of an enterprise. It is up to him to get results, to make good in a business way. He must fill the church, he must get big collections, he must rent the pews, he must put the parish on a booming financial basis. This class want their minister to be a star performer. They want him to be a headliner. They take the position that their church is competing for business with the other churches and they want the minister to beat all competitors. The second class in the church wavers between the ideal and the opportunist. The members of this class want the minister to make good in the business of the church competition, want him to have a jammed office, but balk to some extent at the methods which are often necessary to bring about the results. The third class is a small class, but it is the class that helps the preacher over the roughest places of his life. This class is made up of cultured, godly, broad-gauge people, who sympathize with the minister's ideals and who can see something in church besides the size of the collection. These three main classes make up the average church, which consists of from 100 to 500 families, or from say, 300 to 1,200 people. These people are of all sorts and conditions, rich and poor, educated and uneducated, mean and generous, narrow and broad. There are all kinds of individual peculiarities in this crowd.

"One of the things that a minister has to encounter all the time, whether he is new or old in his church, is criticism of his personal appearance and mannerisms. His coat, his hair, his face, his tie, his shoes, his hat, as well as the clothes and appearance of his wife and every member of his family, are common matters of parish talk and parish criticism. This clothing question is coming up in one form or another frequently. Some members of the congregation don't want the minister to dress too well. If he does he is worldly. Others want him to dress well. If he doesn't he's shiftless. Some parishioners object to his wearing tweeds, yellow shoes and an ordinary derby. Others object to his wearing a garb of black, with a choker. If a lawyer, a doctor, a journalist or any other professional or business man had to put up with the criticism on his personal appearance that is the lot of a minister he would declare it all the grossest and most unqualified impertinence. All these things are trivialities in themselves, but they mount up in the course of every-day life to a great deal of annoyance. If I meet you on the street and tell you I've been stung by a hornet, you don't think much of it. But if you hear that I'm being stung by a dozen hornets every day in the year, year after year, you would begin to think that was a pretty stiff game for me to go against, wouldn't you?

"The layman would suppose that a minister would get the backing and support of his brethren of the cloth. But he doesn't. There are all kinds of jealousies among clergymen. If a minister crowds his church and attracts attention by his sermons he finds himself greeted in mighty chilly fashion by his brethren at the next ministers' meeting. There is, of course, the natural business competition between the churches and ministers to begin with, and added to this is the fact that one of the number is getting so much attention. There isn't the team play that would be expected among ministers. If one minister calls attention to some urgent need of the community, to some evil that should be eradicated, to some campaign that should be undertaken, he need not expect much help from his brethren of the faith. Not a bit of it. In other words, a minister must pay the penalty of success—jealousy—if he is a success. If he succeeds he gets knocked. If he's a failure he gets pitied.

"The minister's wife has a hard time in many ways. If she, under all the circumstances of the parish and church, thinks it well to keep somewhat apart from church work and merely attend to her own household affairs, the fire of criticism is poured in on that account. It is declared that 'our minister is sincerely to be pitied. He has a wife, you know, who is not at all in sympathy with him. She takes no interest in the church affairs at all, and her mind, we fear, is set on things of the world.' Then, on the other hand, if the minister's wife does take an active interest in parochial affairs, if she goes to sewing circles and takes a leading part in all the church activities, the fire of criticism is poured in just the same. 'The minister's wife is most officious,' it will be said. 'The poor minister has a hard time of it, we fear. His wife seems to think it's her parish. She should be more discreet and not push herself so much. This church got on very well before she came here and it can get on very well now without her poking in everywhere.' And then there are the clothes of the minister's wife and children. His wife's hat may be the cause of a parochial tempest."

Dr. Hopkins is well qualified as an expert to talk on the tribulations of a minister's life. He has been in the pulpit for thirty years. He has occupied his present pulpit for ten years and before that had churches in New York State, in Connecticut and Iowa.

LO AND LADY LIBERTY

AS AMERICA'S RECEPTION COMMITTEE

IN BRONZE!

A HEROIC bronze statue of an American Indian, costing $250,000, is to be erected upon the site of Fort Lagayette, near the entrance of New York harbor, if Congress passes the bill appropriating $500,000 for the foundation and approaches. The idea for this monument to a vanishing race is that of Rodman Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, who will contribute the bulk of the money needed for the statue or all of it, if necessary. The memorial will serve at the same time the purposes of a lighthouse and will correspond in dignity and impressiveness with Bartholdi's Liberty Enlightening the World, which was erected a little further up the New York bay some years ago.

The westerner who fought the redskin in pioneer days is not ap tto grow enthusiastic to any marked degree over the melodramatic trippings with which the modern writer is wont to clothe him, but with all his savagry the Indian was ever friendly and helpful when treated honestly and kindly. The Quakers found it possible to live peaceably with them. In other parts of the country, too, the Indians were little disposed to resist the invader except when infruiated by personal outrages, frauds, and the dispossession of the lands which belonged to them. Various tribes of the Order of Red Men throughout the country have passed resolutions favoring the project and have expresed their desire to assist in every possible way. It is planned that each of the 500,000 members represented in the 4,000 tribes in the United States shall contribute 2 cents each to the general fund. President Taft commends the movement. He likes the idea of having the statue at the southern point of Governor's Island, with a light on it so that it may serve as a lighthouse as well as a tribute to the Indian. Vice-President Sherman also endorses the project and representatives in Congress with Indian blood in their veins, such as Senator Owen of Oklahoma, Senator Curtis of Kansas and Representative Carter of Oklahoma have earnestly supported the bill providing for the necessary appropriation.

One of the suggested plans for the monument calls for a shaft 400 feet high rising from a circular rotunda 150 feet in diameter, inclosed with a colonnade. The statue will represent an Indian warrior in full panoply, carrying a bow and arrow in his hand.

BECOMES BRIDE OF A FOREIGNER.

A recent international marriage which will appeal with more than usual interest to Americans is that of Miss Marie Louise Logan, granddaughter of famous "Black Jack" Logan, to Henri De Sincay of Belgium. Miss Logan is a New York girl and a popular member of its smart society. Handsome, well educated and cultured, and with a vivacity that is contagious, this granddaughter of one of the great Americans of his time has had the entree of the best homes in the metropolis and has been regarded as a rica matrimonial prize. In many of her characteristics she resembles General Logan, who served with distinction in the Mexican and Civil wars, who sat from Illinois in both branches of Congress and who was the running mate of James G. Blaine in the Presidential campaign of 1884. Her mother is still living and is a well-known contributor to magazines and newspapers.

De Sincay came to America a year ago to learn the zinc business. He found much time for society and was a guest of leading families at Newport. As late as last summer he declared he had not met any unmarried woman in society for whom he cared. Then he met Miss Logan and was immediately a captive. His father is at the head of extensive zinc industries at Liege and his uncle is Prince Albert de Ligne.

GERMS IN ICE CREAM

Number of Microbes in a Dish of the Confection Exceeds Two Billions.

FOUND BY PROFESSOR BILLINGS

As the Age of the Delicacy Increases the More Bugs One Gets for His Money.

When one purchases a dish of ice cream he buys, in addition to the cream, 2,522,656,000 germs and he eats that number when he consumes the ice cream, says the New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer. That is the number of microbes found by Prof. F. H. Billings of the Kansas University, bacteriological laboratories, in ten cents worth of fresh ice cream. Prof. Billings has been conducting experiments in germs in ice cream for six months, and his conclusions are that there are never fewer than 2,500,000,000 kicking squirming microbes in the average dish of real fresh ice cream—that which is not more than a day old.

As the age of the cream increases the more bugs one gets for the same money. The smallest number of microbes found in ice cream three days old was 3,941,666,666. These figures are for the cleanest, purest and best of ice cream that Prof. Billings could buy. The number of microscopic organisms in cream prepared under none too strict sanitary conditions is very much greater than these figures show. The university has just sent out a bulletin on the subject of germs in ice cream. This says in part:

"Cold is unquestionably unfavorable to the activity of the germs, but the experiments showed that germs are the most resistant to extremes of temperature of all known organisms. Often one thinks nothing of using ice from a river when one would not think of drinking the water from the same stream. The process of freezing removes some of the germs, but others will live in the ice all summer and have their activity restored when they are put into a pitcher with the ice to make a cooling drink.

"The experiments proved that germs increased in number in stored ice cream. A sample of fresh ice cream tested 16,000,000 germs to the cubic centimeter. After three days' storage in a frozen state the number of germs in the same sample had gone up to 25,000,000 to each cubic centimeter.

"Tuberculosis germs have lived for forty-five days in the laboratories when they were kept at a temperature of 345 degrees below freezing. The germs lost none of their vitality or virulence in that time. Other germs have stood equally severe tests without injury.

"Cold cannot be depended upon as a germ exterminator, but the winter is a bad time for the microbes. They have fewer opportunities to get in their deadly work. The cold weather renders the germs less active and they are not so harmful. Sufficient use of ice during the summer months will stop the ravages of the germs in warm weather. It is impossible to find milk that is free from germs. Some milk has many millions fewer germs than other milk, depending upon the sanitary conditions of the dairy and how the milk is handled. The fifth germs kill many bottle-fed infants, and infant mortality is most prevalent in warm weather, when the germs are most active. Keeping the milk cold in warm weather does not reduce the number, in fact, it increases the number, but it makes the germs less active and hence less harmful."

MEN "EASY" FOR SHOE CLERK.

No Trouble to "Fool" Them by Changing Size Marks on Shoes.

A Broadway shoe dealer, expounding a pet theory, offers the following proof that man's conception of happiness and contentment depends largely on the state of his imagination.

"A short time ago," he explained, according to the New York Morning Telegraph, "one of my best customers came in and asked for a pair of shoes. It happened that I had in stock at the time the exact thing the customer called for, and, everything considered, it looked as if I would make a quick sale. However, despite the fact that to me the style and fit of the shoes were perfect, the customer, upon standing up, declared that they were too tight and that he wanted the same thing a half size larger.

"Now I was absolutely convinced that the shoes, which were size 8, were large enough, and not having on hand a pair of 8½, I decided to test a theory of mine regarding the relation of the imagination to contentment. Taking the shoes to the rear of the store, I picked up a stamp and next to the figure 8 affixed the fraction one-half. Returning to the prospective purchaser with the identical pair of shoes that he had had on, I quickly laced them up for the second time and asked him how 'that pair' felt. After a few steps up and down the room he exclaimed, immensely pleased:

"'Now, these feel something like it; they're just the thing.'

"And," supplemented the shoe man, "can you imagine selling a woman a pair of shoes by convincing her that they were a size larger than they really were?"

A Minister's Indigestion

Rev. Fletcher of Tennessee Suggests a Remedy Based on Personal Experience—You Can Get It Free.

There is nothing that is so much sought after as a remedy for stomach trouble, and hence you will be interested to know how the Rev. A. J. Fletcher, of Rutherford, Tenn., whose picture we present herewith, cured his indigestion. To use his own words, he says, in part:

Rev. A. J. Fletcher

"I received the sample bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin that I asked you to send me, and I made no mistake in ordering it. I have been troubled with dyspepsia and indigestion more or less for about sixty years, and have taken many remedies, but Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has done me more good than anything else. I am 79."

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has been sold in drug stores for twenty years. The price is only 50 cents or $1 a bottle. It is especially adapted to the uses of babies, children, women and old folks. Its purity is vouched to the Government, and results from its use are guaranteed. If you have never tried it send name and address for a free trial bottle, which will be cheerfully sent to your home prepaid. If there is any medical advice that you want, or anything about your condition that you don't understand, write the doctor. Address your letter, Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Origin of the Saying.

She was an enormous young woman.

"Have you anybody here," she asked, "as tall as I am?"

"Yes, I guess so," answered the proprietor of the dime museum.

HAVE YOU TRIED THIS?

Simple Prescription Said to Work Wonders for Rheumatism.

This has been well known to the best doctors for years and is now given to the public. "Get one ounce of syrup of Sarsaparilla compound and one ounce Toris compound. Then get half a pint of good whiskey and put the other two ingredients into it. Take a tablespoonful of this mixture before each meal and at bed time. Shake the bottle before using." Good effects are felt the first day. Many of the worst cases here have been cured by this. Any druggist has these ingredients on hand or will quickly get them from his wholesale house.

COST TO RUN BIG CITIES

Census Bureau Makes Interesting Report on Municipal Expenses.

PER CAPITA IS INCREASING.

Maintenance of Local Departments Leaps from $13.36 in 1902 to $15.91 in 1907.

The Census Bureau's special annual report for 1907 on the statistics of cities is in press. It will show that the per capita running expenses of the government in 148 of the largest cities increased from $13.36 in 1902 to $15.91 in 1907. There has been a progressive increase in nearly every department of the government. The per capita increase in the fire department was from $1.33 to $1.61, in the health department from $0.22 to $0.29, in charities and corrections from $0.86 to $1.06 and in education from $3.85 to $4.70.

Of special interest in a comparison of the general expenses of the cities are payments for the maintenance of the health department. In several cities the State maintains a dispensary or health bureau, but in most cities nearly all the expense of the care of the public health is borne by the city alone. New York paid $1,691,560 for the maintenance of its health department, or more than six times as much as any other city. The other cities paying more than $200,000 to maintain this department were Chicago ($261,614), Philadelphia ($253,709) and San Francisco ($240,198).

The payments for schools, libraries and art galleries of the cities considered were 29.6 per cent of the total running expenses of the government. Of the cities of over 300,000 population the percentage spent for education was highest in Cleveland, Ohio, 33.1; in cities of from 100,000 to 300,000 population the highest percentages were in Scranton, Pa., 51.54, and Seattle, Wash., 46.2; in cities of from 50,000 to 100,000 population, in Salt Lake City, 48.2, and Des Moines, Ia., 46.3, and in smaller cities, Topeka, Kan., 54.5, and Lincoln, Neb., 53.5.

FRANCE AND BRITAIN IN RACE FOR SOUTH POLE

UNLESS Dr. J. M. Charcot, the French explorer, forestalls them by discovering the South Pole before they can get started, two Englishmen will become his rivals and the rivals of each other in the competition for the honor of placing their names in history alongside of Peary's. Captain Robert F. Scott of the Royal Navy, is to make his start for the South Pole next summer and Lieutenant Sir Ernest H. Schackleton, who got almost there, has announced his intention of trying it again.

Charcot knows nothing of the discovery of the North Pole. He started in 1908, with the expectation of being some two or three years, and has long been lost to the sight of man in the Antarctic regions. When he went his announcement was simply that he would try to get as far south as possible. Scott, with the stimulus of Peary's conquest, announced that his object was "to reach the South Pole and to secure for the British Empire the honor of that achievement." Shackleton, on his last expedition, bore with him a card written by Queen Alexandra, and reading, "May this Union Jack, which I entrust to your keeping, lead you safely to the South Pole."

It lead him within 111 miles of it, and he planted it on the plateau where he was forced to abandon his journey.

The Antarctic continent is mountainous, and a "dash" over ice-covered mountains presents difficulties not met in the travel over ice-covered ocean. The chief difficulty, however, is the terrific cold, the icy wind and the inconceivable blizzards. In the North, while one never needs a straw hat or a palm leaf fan, there are moderations of temperature.

It is doubtful if 1 per cent of Antarctic lands is ever ice free, so that ordinary forms of land life are absolutely wanting. Not only are human inhabitants unknown south of Cape Horn, more than 2,300 miles from the Pole, but except sea forms, within the circle of animal life and vegetable life are practically absent save a few low forms of hardy lichens and mosses. No plant life gladdens the eye, and even the hum of insects is unheard, the terrestrial fauna consisting of wingless insects. Sea life is more abundant than in any other ocean, the higher forms being whales, seals and birds—skuas, penguins and petrels—but owing to distance and danger their pursuit and capture are no longer remunerative.

Captain Scott, who will take the center of the stage in a few months, is 41 years old. He is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and is at present engaged in the Admiralty. The first member of the Scott expedition has already left England in connection with the preliminary work of the expedition and expects to be absent three years. This is Cecil Mears, who has been sent to Siberia to obtain dogs and ponies. Mr. Meares goes direct to Vladivostok, thence northward to the Amur, where he will make enquiries as to where suitable dogs are most plentiful. By means of sledges he will then press further north from the Amur district to Yakut, a great sable center in Yakutsk, where animals will probably be procurable. Subsequently he may go to Okhotsk and on to the Verkhoiansk mountains, a region described as almost if not quite the coldest of the world. Mr. Meares intends to get most of his dogs, particularly the team leaders, in Siberia.

This part of the work is expected to occupy three or four months, but it must be completed before the roads melt in order that he may get back to Vladivostok in April. Mr. Meares will then start collecting ponies around Harbin, after which all his stock will be taken to Vladivostok, shipped to Kobe and there transferred to another steamer for New Zealand. Mr. Meares with his dogs and ponies will join the main body of the expedition on board the Terra Nova in New Zealand in December.

For Lame Back

An aching back is instantly relieved by an application of Sloan's Liniment.

This liniment takes the place of massage and is better than sticky plasters. It penetrates—without rubbing—through the skin and muscular tissue right to the bone, quickens the blood, relieves congestion, and gives permanent as well as temporary relief.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. James C. Lee, of 1100 9th St., S.E., Washington, D.C., writes: "Thirty years ago I fell from a scaffold and seriously injured my back. I suffered terribly at times; from the small of my back all around my stomach was just as if I had been beaten with a club. I used every plaster I could get with no relief. Sloan's Liniment took the pain right out, and I can now do as much ladder work as any man in the shop, thanks to

Sloan's Liniment

Mr. J. P. Evans, of Mt. Airy, Ga., says: "After being afflicted for three years with rheumatism, I used Sloan's Liniment, and was cured sound and well, and am glad to say I haven't been troubled with rheumatism since. My leg was badly swollen from my hip to my knee. One-half a bottle took the pain and swelling out."

Sloan's Liniment has no equal as a remedy for Rheumatism, Neuralgia or any pain or stiffness in the muscles or joints.

PARIS RAGPICKERS.

An Occupation That Is Passed Along From Father to Son.

The ragpickers of Paris are born to their work, the occupation being passed from father to son for generations. Each ragpicker family has its own district, which is inherited by the children and grandchildren.

In spite of all the progress made in modern and elegant Paris barrels of waste are piled up on the streets in front of many buildings on beautiful boulevards in the early morning hours, and it is the privilege and in fact the mission of the ragpickers to examine this refuse.

They have use for everything, and but little is left after they have passed, their thoroughness being one reason why the system is still allowed. Every scrap of paper has its market; rags are gathered for paper manufacturers; shoes go back to leather dealers.

Old sardine and preserved meat tins are used for making playthings, old bones produce gelatin and glue, lemon and orange peels are greatly sought after and sold at the rate of a cent a pound to perfume and sirup manufacturers, old metals are highly prized, cigar stubs go to tobacco factories, and even stale vegetables are carted away.

The quarters of the ragpickers of Paris are just outside the confines of the city—sections carefully avoided by most people who do not belong to the guild. Every member of the family, from the oldest to the three-year-old, takes part in the sorting of the spoils, and it often happens that members of a family die either from poisoning from stale food or from a cut from one of the tins.—Popular Mechanics.

A LITTLE THING

Changes the Home Feeling.

Coffee blots out the sunshine from many a home by making the mother, or some other member of the household, dyspeptic, nervous and irritable. There are thousands of cases where the proof is absolutely undeniable. Here is one.

A Wis. mother writes:

"I was taught to drink coffee at an early age, and also at an early age became a victim to headaches, and as I grew to womanhood these headaches became a part of me, as I was scarcely ever free from them.

"About five years ago a friend urged me to try Postum. I made the trial and the result was so satisfactory that we have used it ever since.

"My husband and little daughter were subject to bilious attacks, but they have both been entirely free from them since we began using Postum instead of coffee. I no longer have headaches and my health is perfect."

If some of these nervous, tired, irritable women would only leave off coffee absolutely and try Postum they would find a wonderful change in their life. It would then be filled with sunshine and happiness rather than weariness and discontent. And think what an effect it would have on the family, for the mood of the mother is largely responsible for the temper of the children.

Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The Experimental Plot.

Every farmer should have, and easily can have, a small experimental plot of ground for testing the soil and different crops. No farmer can ever know the highest capacity of his soil till he has fertilized a small portion of his land very heavily with a complete balanced mixture of fertilizers, planted the very best of seed, and given the crop, or crops, extra good cultivation. Many farmers hear or read of 100 bushels of corn to the acre, or several hundred dollars an acre made in growing special crops, and do not believe that it is possible. They do not believe it because they have never done half so well on their own land, but they never put half the amount of fertilizers, nor half as good seed, nor half as good cultivation, to the crops they grew. Try an acre, or even a half acre, of ground on your own farm this coming season and see what results can be had from it. Begin now to fertilize and do not stop till the piece of land is as fertile as it can well be made with at least three different kinds of fertilizing matter. Prepare the land in the very best manner, use the best seed, and give a dozen cultivations. You will surprise yourself with results.—Journal of Agriculture.

Bran Mash.

Can you make a bran mash? Like coffee, mashed potatoes and a few of the everyday things, the average furnished is not of good quality. To make a bran mash, take a clean bucket, well scalded out, and put in the measure of bran. Then pour into the center, stirring all the time, scalding water enough to make it moist. Cover it closely while hot with a blanket, and let it stand three or four hours, until cold. There are many times when a cow or horse is sick and weak, and needs a bran mash. The usual proceeding is to use any old bucket and some hot water. A handful of bran is stirred into a slop, and, scalding hot, is put under the sick animal's nose, only to be rejected. It should be cool, or cold, and only moist enough to hold together when pressed in the hand. Then add a little salt, and it is relished by the sufferer.—California Cultivator.

How to Fasten Mallet Handles.

The old method of fastening mallets to handles by boring a hole through the head and inserting a wedge from the outside may be superseded by a new way that makes the tool much neater and one that conceals the wedge and eliminates all possibility of the head flying off as the wedge cannot come out. This new way is to bore a hole the size of the handle and three-fourths the distance through the head, then cut a slot in the handle and insert a wedge as shown in figure 1. Put the wedge end into the hole bored in the head and drive it in. When the wedge touches the bottom of the hole (Fig. 2) it will be driven into the split of the handle, thus forcing the sides out and making a tight fit.—Popular Mechanics.

Preserving Flour.

A new method of preserving flour has recently been adopted with success in England. It is done by means of compression. With hydraulic apparatus the flour is squeezed into the forms of bricks, and the pressure destroys all forms of larval life, thus preserving the flour from the ravages of insects, while it is equally secure from mold. Three hundred pounds of compressed flour occupy the same space as 100 pounds in the ordinary state.

Timothy and Blue Grass.

While the meadow fescue or English blue grass is largely a Kansas product, where the seed often goes twenty bushels to the acre, a great deal of timothy is grown in Idaho and some of the middle western states, like Illinois, Missouri, Indiana and Iowa, the southeast corner of the latter state being especially productive. It is harvested about the middle of July and thrashed with a common separator.

Farmers and Autos.

The number of automobiles owned by farmers is growing rapidly. Out of 10,000 autos in Iowa, 5,000 are owned by farmers. Kansas farmers spent $3,200,000 for automobiles during 1909, and $2,750,000 in 1908. In one Nebraska town of 800 population, forty autos were sold last year to farmers near the town. Careful estimate of the number of automobiles owned by farmers in the entire United States is 75,000.

The Wheat Situation.

The high prices which our farmers have run up for wheat have stimulated the cultivation of the grain wherever it is possible to raise it. Last year Chile produced 19,000,000 bushels, and was encouraged by the results to sow many more acres this year. Experimental stations of the Chilean government are distributing the best varieties of seeds among the farmers. If American farmers keep down their production to hold up prices they may find they had such a good thing that they tempted all the world into it and broke up the snap.—New York Press.

To Prevent Feed Bolting.

So many horses, especially nervy drivers, get in the habit of gulping their feed down in great mouthfuls. Here is a device that I have found very convenient and effective in preventing feed bolting. The feed is put into a hopper (b) outside the manger, and is allowed to run into the manger box (a) in a thin stream. The size of this stream is regulated by the slide (c), and it is impossible for the horse to get more feed in his mouth at one time than he can easily masticate.—Farm and Home.

Making Good Butter.

The best butter is made from cream collected about the same time. Mixing cream from three or four days' skimmings is what makes the texture of butter uneven and the flavor poor. Keep the different skimmings separate, and churn them separately, as far as possible. This requires some more work, but it makes better butter. If several skimmings are mixed, stir the mixture well when cream is added.

All cream should be frequently stirred when ripening in order to make the ripening progress evenly through the mass. Always skim milk before it becomes coagulated.

The Alaska Wheat Fake.

The "Alaska wheat" fake, which has been pretty thoroughly exposed in the west, in now attracting attention in the east. Commenting on the result of some experiments made by a New Jersey farmer with this cereal "gold brick," the Boston Transcript remarks: "If the wheat of Alaska can reclothe our old but still responsive acres with harvests of the golden grain, it will be an obligation of no mean magnitude to be added to what we already owe her for past and potential yields of gold and copper, lumber and coal." Unfortunately for the responsive acres, which are awaiting the coming of Alaska wheat, that famous cereal has been repeatedly exposed as a fraud. Its latest previous appearance in the limelight was in Idaho, and the Saturday Evening Post, by giving it a page of praise, brought it to the attention of scientists and agricultural experts, with the result that the government issued a fraud order which prohibited the Idaho promoters circulating any literature regarding it.

THREE-HORSE HITCH.

This arrangement enables one horse to walk in the furrow when ploughing and two on the unploughed land. The length is marked on each of the parts. The draught chain must be set well toward the left of the head of the plough.

Straw in Manure.

Owing to its abundance, straw is added to barnyard manure, but it can be made more serviceable if made fine with the feed cutter before being used. While straw may soon rot after being mixed with manure, yet in a fine condition it is a much better absorbent and can be forked into the manure with advantage. When loading and spreading manure there is a saving of labor when handling that which is fine, and the manure will be more valuable because the loss of ammonia will be arrested by the use of suitable absorbent materials.

The Barley Crop.

Six states appear to have a monopoly of the barley crop. In the year 1908, Minnesota raised 32,500,000 bushels; California, 25,427,000 bushels; Wisconsin, 24,750,000 bushels; South Dakota, 24,592,000 bushels; North Dakota, 18,330,000 bushels, and Iowa, 13,500,000 bushels. All the balance of the United States, 41,157,000 bushels. Total, 166,756,000 bushels.

Deep Plowing.

Results of experiments at the Kansas station show that deep plowing (8 to 10 inches) tends to increase the number of soil bacteria in both sandy and silt soils. Deep plowing tends to increase bacterial activity. More ammonia is produced. Deep plowing tends to decrease denitrification of the reduction of nitrate and the liberation of free nitrogen.

Object of Soil Culture.

Cultivation of the soil is not merely done to kill weeds, but it is a moisture conservator; makes the soil more porous, so that the plant roots more easily penetrate in search of plant food. In time of protracted drought the cultivator should be kept going whether there are weeds or not.

Land as an Insurance.

Good land—and there are millions of acres of it still available in this country at a moderate figure—is the best form of insurance not only for the family in event of your death, but for yourself during life, while you can enjoy it to the full. No better legacy can be left to your children.

Increase in Farm Horses.

Government reports show that farm horses have increased in number from 13,000,000 to 20,000,000 since 1900, and in value from $44.61 to $95.64 each. Illinois has more farm horses than any other State in the Union.

Where Poultry Pays.

The poultry raisers of Petaluma, Cal., received over $2,000,000 for the products of their hens last year. The cash receipts averaged more than $5,000 per day for the entire year.

Fried Graham Muffins.

For the fried graham muffins, which are especially welcome on a cold day, measure out one and a half pints of graham meal, half a pint of white flour, half a cupful of sugar, a teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of soda and two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar or two rounded teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Add slowly a pint of milk and two well beaten eggs, beating all thoroughly together till a smooth mass is formed. Fry in boiling hot fat, like doughnuts.

Parisian Potatoes.

Peel the potatoes and, with a vegetable cutter, cut into small balls. Boil in salted water for ten minutes, drain out and pat dry between the folds of a clean dish towel. Melt in a saucepan several great spoonfuls of butter, put the potato balls in this, shake until coated with the butter and set at the side of the range, where they will keep hot for fifteen minutes, shaking often. Sprinkle with salt and white pepper and stir in a heaping tablespoonful of minced parsley.

Caramel Custard.

One pint milk, one-fourth cup sugar, three eggs, one-fourth teaspoonful salt. Boil half the milk. Beat the eggs and add to them the one-half pint cold milk, the salt and the sugar melted in a frying pan until it smokes. Pour this mixture slowly into the boiling milk and boil until it begins to thicken. Remove and set away to cool. Serve ice cold.

Cheese Cake.

Into two cups of cottage cheese work three tablespoonfuls of cream, four eggs, beaten light with two-thirds of a cup of sugar, a heaping teaspoonful of melted butter and the juice of two small lemons with the grated rind of one. Beat until there are no lumps and pour into a deep open pie crust. Bake until set in a steady oven.

Doughnuts.

Two cups white sugar, three eggs, one and a half cups buttermilk, two teaspoons baking soda, one teaspoon salt, six tablespoons melted lard. Stir all well and add flour enough to stir with spoon and roll about quarter of an inch thick. Fry in plenty of hot lard. Will make about six dozen doughnuts.

Baked Haddock or Codfish.

After the fish is scaled and cleaned, put in force-meat and sew up. Baste with butter, eggs and crumbs. Bake about one hour if large, half an hour if quite small. Serve with melted butter or brown gravy. Garnish with lemon slices.

Bran Bread.

Two cups of flour, one cup of bran, three tablespoonfuls of molasses, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one egg well beaten, salt to taste, milk to make a soft batter. Mix well and bake in a loaf tin from thirty to thirty-five minutes.

Mutton Broth.

Use a quart of water in every pound of bones and meat. Let soup boil slowly always. When all is thoroughly done, strain through a sieve or serge bag. Repeat before serving with cubes of toasted bread or some well cooked rice.

Baked Trout.

After carefully cleaning, put pepper and salt inside. Enough cream should be put in the pan to cover the trout. Bake from a dozen to twenty minutes.

Celery Fritters.

Mix a good fritter batter, add one cup of finely chopped celery, drop in spoonfuls into hot cooking oil, cook until brown, then remove and drain.

Hints About the Home.

Paint wooden pails and tubs with glycerin to prevent shrinking.

Place all cakes to cool on a wire sieve and never put them away in tins till perfectly cold.

The old or frayed rag is a delusion, not a duster. Its particles of lint and ravelings will make double work.

It is a good plan to have individual markings for bath towels. The initials may be embroidered in chain stitch.

When eggs are scarce and they are needed for puddings, a dessertspoonful of cornstarch may be substituted for one egg.

For caper sauce always chop the capers finely, add a little chopped parsley and stir into melted butter sauce just before serving.

Bread dressing may be served with a pot roast as well as one put in the oven. The bread should be baked separately in a cake tin.

When frying, the stove is often splashed all over with grease. To prevent this sprinkle a little salt in the frying pan before putting in the fat.

When using stale bread for puddings always soak it in a cold liquid. Bread that has been soaked in cold milk or water is light and crumbly, whereas that soaked in hot liquids is heavy.

Shelves for precious china may have pads of felt to prevent chipping the dishes. When fragile plates must be piled one on another a small, plain doily placed between will save breakage.

If when ironing anything white you find a soiled spot, dampen a piece of white cloth and put a little cream of tartar on, then rub the soiled spot; you will be surprised to see it disappear.

Cooking with curry powder makes a delicious change in the preparation of meats, rice, eggs and fish. Curry powder is an invention of the Anglo-Indian and most housewives know little about it.

An easy way to skin a beet without bleeding it and causing it to lose color is to put it in cold water as soon as it is cooked. Then draw the hand gently down each one and the skin will drop off without trouble.

Antiquity of the Water Pump.

The water pump of to-day is but an improvement on a Grecian invention which first came into use during the reign of Ptolemies Philadelphos and Energetes, 283 to 221 B. C. The name, which is very similar in all languages, is derived from the Greek word pempo, to send or throw. The most ancient description we have of a water pump is by Hero of Alexandria. There is no authentic account of the general use of the pump in Germany previous to the beginning of the sixteenth century. At about that time the endless chain and bucket works for raising water from mines began to be replaced by pumps. In the seventeenth century rotating pumps, like the Pappenham engine, with two pistons, and the Prince Rupert, with one, were first used. Pumps with plunger pistons were invented by Morland, an Englishman, in 1674, and the double acting pump by De la Hire, the French academician.

Good Luck of an Old G. A. R. Veteran.

G. W. Rumble, 1144 Eddy St., San Francisco, an old G. A. R. veteran, is now enjoying life at his California home, having made enough locating gold mines with a device of his own, which works on a new principle in harmony with nature's vibratory laws. He offers to tell others about it as he thinks the knowledge should not be buried.

Retribution.

"Stand up, prisoner," orders the stern judge.

The trembling culprit, who has been found guilty by a jury of his delighted peers, stands.

"Prisoner at the bar," solemnly declares the judge, "you have been convicted of building house after house containing one of these confounded little boxes called 'reception rooms,' in which there is neither room to receive nor hooks to make it a wardrobe. The sentence of the court is that for the next ten years you shall be confined in one of these alleged reception rooms of your own construction and design."

Immediately the lawyers for the defendant begin work upon an appeal on the ground that a cruel and unusual punishment has been decreed.—Life.

Indigestion and Stomach Remedy.

The well-known specialist on indigestion and stomach troubles, Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell Building, Monticello, Ill., will send, free of charge, a sample treatment of his celebrated Pepsin Syrup remedy for the relief and cure of these painful troubles by addressing him as above.

Didn't Mean That.

"These," said the lecturer, indicating them with his pointer, "are the movable bath-houses. Thousands of people congregate here during the summer season. Over here on the left is the hotel at which I stopped, and an exceeding homelike place it is. I shall give you a nearer view of it presently. Although I was there a week or two, and would gladly have remained longer if I could have spared the time, I did not take any baths, for the reason——"

(Loud and prolonged laughter.)

"I meant, ladies and gentlemen," he resumed, after the merriment had subsided, "that I didn't take any baths down at the beach. This audience is altogether too smart."—Chicago Tribune.

The Irregular Verb "To Be."

In one of the Senate cloak-rooms during a recent session, the talk turned, says a writer in the Troy Press, on the old ante-bellum negro of the South and his amusing originalities in the use of the English language.

Senator Taylor, of Tennessee, said the finest example he knew of was the remark made by an old negro whose worthless son was married secretly. The old man heard of it and asked the boy if he was married.

"I ain't sayin' I ain't," the boy replied.

"Now, you, 'Rastus," stormed the old man, "I ain't askin' you is you ain't; I is askin' you ain't you is!"

Beautiful Wall Coatings for Homes.

In line with the progress of all other things in these modern days is the beautiful, perfect and sanitary wall coatings for our homes. Alabastine is the name of a rich, soft and velvety preparation for the decoration of walls and ceilings. It adheres to the walls of its own adhesive qualities. It is inexpensive, clean, artistic and so easily put on that any one can follow the printed directions on every package. Any shade or tint is easily produced. Alabastine is proof against insects or disease germs so prevalent in wall paper. It does not rub off and flake like kalsomine. A complete color plan for the walls of the home and stencils to help make the home beautiful, together with a book about home decorations and samples of color effects will all be sent free by the Alabastine Company, 482 Grandville avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich. The liberal offers of this company to home decorators in our advertising columns elsewhere in this paper deserve careful perusal.

Trials of a Lecturer.

A well known Englishwoman lecturer tells some stories at her own expense.

"I was," she says, "on a tour through the provinces, and one night as I appeared on the platform in a small town the chairman introduced me to my audience in the following way: 'You have heard of Mr. Gladstone, the Grand Old Man. Let me now introduce to you the grand old woman.' This was intended as a sincere compliment.

"On another occasion a bluff old farmer who boasted of his ability to look on all sides of a question announced me as follows: 'This lady's come here to talk about her rights. She's hired the hall herself, and so she's got a right to be here, and if any of you don't like what she's got to say you've got an equal right to walk out in the middle on t.'"

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Hampered by Conventionalities.

Washington was crossing the Delaware River at Trenton.

"Of course," he said, "I don't mind standing up in this frail boat and gazing sternly in the direction of the unsuspecting foe, since the artists insist on depicting me in this absurd attitude, but the blithering chumps ought to know better than to paint these blocks of floating ice projecting a foot above the water. Any man with an ounce of gumption knows that the ice in this river isn't eight feet thick!"

Angered by these reflections, he fell upon the Hessians shortly afterward with extreme ferocity.—Chicago Tribune.

Health is Wealth.

Healthy people are hearty and happy; they do their work cheerily and tirelessly. Of first importance in maintaining good health is the having of absolutely clean cooking vessels and table ware. Easy Task soap is a sterilizer as well as a cleanser. It drives away disease germs as well as dirt. Show your family doctor the information on the wrapper and he will recommend its use.

A Clever Stroke.

Turning defeat into victory is the achievement of genius. This example, gleaned from the London Daily Mail, illustrates the adroitness with which it is sometimes done.

An eminent lawyer was once cross-examining a very clever woman, mother of the plaintiff in a breach-of-promise action, and was completely worsted in the encounter of wits. At the close, however, he turned to the jury and exclaimed:

"You saw, gentlemen, that even I was but a child in her hands! What must my client have been?"

Russ bleaching blue should be in every home. Ask your grocer for it and take no substitute. Ice a package.

Ladylike.

A little girl on a train was chewing gum. Not only that, but she insisted on pulling it out in long strings and letting it fall back into her mouth again.

"Mabel," said her mother, in a horrified whisper, "don't do that. Chew your gum like a little lady."—Everybody's.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Need Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brookfield, Mo.—"Two years ago I was unable to do any kind of work and only weighed 118 pounds. My trouble dates back to the time that women may expect nature to bring on them the Change of Life. I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it made me feel much better, and I have continued its use. I am very grateful to you for the good health I am now enjoying."—Mrs. Sarah Lousignont, 414 S. Livingston Street, Brookfield, Mo.

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs.

For 30 years it has been curing women from the worst forms of female ills—inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and nervous prostration.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

Ordinance No. 69

An ordinance requiring the muzzling of dogs when running at large or out from under control of its master, and providing a penalty for the same.

SECTION ONE. Be it ordained by the common council of the city of Butler, Indiana, that it shall be unlawful for the owner, master or person who harbors a dog, male or female, to allow the same to run at large in the city of Butler without being muzzled, unless such dog shall be accompanied by its owner or master, and such muzzle shall not be deemed sufficient unless it be of such form and strength and so attached and fastened as will effectually prevent such animal from biting, and any animal of the dog kind which may be found running at large within said city without being so muzzled, is hereby declared to be a nuisance.

SECTION TWO. Any person violating the provision of Section One of this Act shall upon conviction be fined in any sum not less than one dollar nor more than ten dollars.

SECTION THREE. Be it further ordained by the common council that it shall be the duty of the marshal of said city of Butler when he finds any such dog running at large without being muzzled, to at once ascertain who the owner of such dog is or where the same is harbored and to file charges against such owner, master or person so harboring said dog for violation of this Ordinance and if such owner, master or person harboring such dog cannot be found, it shall be said marshal's duty to confine such dog in the city lockup for a period of twenty-four hours and if at the end of such time, said dog is not claimed, he shall cause said dog to be killed and the carcas disposed of.

SECTION FOUR. This Ordinance shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage and due publication for two successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the city of Butler, Indiana.

A. S. KESTER,
President of Council.

Attest:
L. C. BUEHRER, Clerk.

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing ordinance was duly passed by the common council of the city of Butler at a regular meeting held on the 4th day of April, 1910, and was by me duly presented to the mayor of said city on the 10th day of April, 1910.

L. C. BUEHRER.

This Ordinance was approved by me on this the 4th day of April, 1910.

Why Salves Fail to Cure Eczema

Scientists are now agreed that the eczema germs are lodged not in the outer skin or epidermis, but in the inner skin. Hence, a penetrating liquid is required, not an outward salve that clogs the pores.

We recommend to all eczema patients the standard prescription Oil of Wintergreen as compounded in liquid form known as D. D. D. Prescription. A trial bottle of this D. D. D. Prescription, at only 25 cents, will instantly relieve the itch. We have sold and recommended this remedy for years, and know of wonderful cures from its use. We recommend it to our patrons. Stone's Drug Store, Butler, Ind.

Every family and especially those who reside in the country should be provided at all times with a bottle of Chamberlain's Liniment. There is no telling when it may be wanted in case of an accident or emergency. It is most excellent in all cases of rheumatism, sprains and bruises. Sold by Geo. W. Geddes. 13-1m

Is Roby Tight Wad

WASHINGTON, IND., April 2—Republicans of Indiana are laughing today over an enlivening correspondence between Judge Roby, of the appellate court, and Charles G. Sefrit, formerly of the republican state executive committee. The letters, published yesterday in the Washington Herald, are self-explanatory and as follows:

JUDGE ROBY TO MR. SEFRIT.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 29, 1910.

Mr. Charles G. Sefrit,
Washington, Indiana:

Dear Sir—My name will be presented to the republican state convention for supreme judge from the Third district.

I am willing to submit the case upon my judicial record without argument, and hope you will find it consistent with public interest and the interest of the republican party to give me your vote.

My headquarters during the convention will be room 334, Claypool hotel.

Sincerely,
Frank S. Roby.

MR. SEFRIT TO JUDGE ROBY

WASHINGTON, IND., March 31.

Mr. Frank S. Roby,
Indianapolis, Indiana:

Sir—Answering your letter of the 29th this day received, I must decline to give you my vote as a delegate to the republican state convention from Daviess county for supreme judge from the Third district. Were I to vote for you for that or for any other nomination and the republicans of Daviess county should fail to kick me out of the party immediately upon my return home, they certainly ought to be branded as a bunch of political mollycoddles.

I don't know anything about your judicial record. If there were no other lawyers in the state of Indiana, the situation might be different, but I suppose there are hundreds and hundreds of them, republicans and democrats, who are just as nearly competent as you are to sit on the supreme court bench.

As a student of the law, you also must have a more or less intimate acquaintance with the American governmental institution. So being, you must know that this country's government essentially is a government by political parties; and that the maintenance of the integrity of these political organizations is absolutely necessary for the perpetuation of the system of government now in existence. This integrity cannot be preserved unless the partisans of the several political organizations shall show patriotic loyalty to them.

You pretend to be a republican. You ask the republican party for a nomination to a high and honorable public office, which carries with it pay commensurate with the exalted service the state exacts from tue incumbents of this office. You received the nomination you sought, and the republican party elected you to the office, not only once but twice. You knew when you begged the nomination for appellate judge that time-honored and eminently proper custom prescribes that candidates for public office shall bear their just part of the legitimate expenses inevitable surrounding any and every sort of a campaign.

You refuse to pay your share of the campaign cost, and you accepted the office and enjoyed the emoluments thereof, leaving it to your associates on the state ticket and to other republicans of the state to bear the expense of lifting you to lucrative public position.

Not only did you do this, but you attempted to bring the party into disrepute before the people of Indiana as an excuse for the non-payment of the debt you owe to the republican organization. Furthermore, in a letter you wrote to a representative of the republican state committee in reply to a request for a trifling sum in aid of the campaign two years ago, you endeavored to humiliate the committee by the use of insulting and abusive expressions; and, to heap contumely, upon contumely, you caused this contemptible letter to be printed in a democratic paper in the city of Fort Wayne for the sole and only purpose of embarrassing the republican state organization at a time when the republican party of Indiana had as much at stake as ever before in its history.

Vote for you for supreme judge! Well, I should say not. Why, I wouldn't vote for a man for dog-pelter whose sense of party obligation is as blunted as yours appears to be. Intense a partisan as I am, I don't believe I could still my conscience to such extent as to win its permit to vote for you if your name were on my ticket. I have no use for a church member who will not contribute to the support of his church on the theory that salvation ought to be free. I have no use for a republican aspirant for office who will not freely take up his fair part of the heat and burden of the campaign.

With wholesome respect for the high office you occupy and with perfect contempt for you as a pretended republican, I beg leave to subscribe myself,

Sincerely,
CHARLES G. SEFRIT.

Enthusiasm Performs Wonders

WHEN the score is 1 to 1 in the last half of the ninth—your team at the bat—2 men on bases and no one out, there's something doing right away—you are up in arms yelling—rooting—doing all you can to rattle the pitcher—make him blow up—go ballooning—it's enthusiasm and it often turns the tide of battle from defeat to victory.

This same brand of enthusiasm directed towards Men's Clothes Perfection is pretty apt to turn out for YOU—Clothes that are right—that satisfy you as being right—It's the kind of clothes you want—the kind you get if made the Edesco way by Edward E. Strauss & Co., our Chicago Tailoring Company.

OVERTAXED

Hundreds of Butler Readers in Butler Know What It Means

The kidneys are overtaxed;
Have too much to do.
They tell about it in many aches and pains—
Backache, sideache, headache.
Early symptoms of kidney ills.
Urinary troubles, diabetes, Bright's disease follow.

The statement below shows you a certain cure.

Mrs. J. H. Baker, 218 W. Ninth St., Auburn, Ind., says: "I had occasion to use Doan's Kidney Pills a few months ago. At that time I was suffering from backache and pains in my kidneys and I was so lame that I could hardly get up after I had been sitting for any length of time. There was also a distressing annoyance from the kidney secretions. I finally procured Doan's Kidney Pills and after I had finished the contents of two boxes, I was free from pain. I recommend Doan's Kidney Pills as a reliable kidney remedy."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. 14-2

Obituary

Jane McDonald was born December 20, 1830, in Lucas county, Ohio, and departed this life April 4, 1910, age 79 years, 4 months and 15 days.

She was united in marriage to Jacob McDonald, February 26, 1852. To this union was born four children, two having died in infancy.

She leaves to mourn her loss one son and one daughter, one sister, six grandchildren and two great grandchildren and a host of other relatives and friends.

She was converted and joined the United Brethren church in the year, 1876, under the pastorate of J. W. Martin, and lived a consistent christain life until her death.

The funeral services were held Wednesday at 10:30 at the U. B. church, conducted by Rev. Parker. The interment was at the Eddy cemetery.

Spring Opening

This Fashion Function of Spring Reveals in Full Array the Authentic New Style Creations.

We launch our opening in confidence, inspired by the knowledge that in all essentials we have greatly surpassed our best efforts of the past. Here you will find all that is correct in appareling for womankind. The nation is enjoying a period of wonderful prosperity—one's taste in dress may be given wider scope than in many seasons past. The new styles present radical changes and the variations are many. Yet underlying all is one basic motif that alone bears the approval of fashion. We have provided only the authentic—our stocks comprise a complete and reliable guide to correct style in dress.

Spring Opening Days Are Saturday, April 9, to Saturday Night, April 16.

Redfern Tailored Suits are Models of Smartness and Beauty.

We present a wide range in tailored suits this season. Styles are particularly becoming. The coats are much shorter generally 26 to 30 inches—skirts are pleated, some have tunic or apron effects. Materials are many—all serviceable and handsome. There are new colorings and designs of great attractiveness. Come and see the correct suits for spring in an unrivaled display and note the prices.

$12.50 to $30.

Redfern Coats, Jackets and Capes.

Are beautiful in model and material. They are all that the most fastidious could desire—fashioned by the Redfern designers, each one is distinguished by design and workmanship of the highest order. Some are simple and others dressy in effect, but all show style and quality and all are marked at extremely reasonable prices.

$5 to $25

Dress Fabrics Were Never so Attractive

Prettier than all previous seasons, the new dress fabrics offer a great scope for individual choice in coloring and weave. Deep and delicate tints are amply represented in this showing, which numbers many of the finest dress goods values we have ever offered.

25c to $2.50

Finley A. Nash, democratic candidate for the nomination for representative, was in the city, Wednesday, and created a good impression among the voters. He is a young man who has ascended the top on his merits. He stands high in his party, and will have a large following. If he receives the nomination he promises to keep busy until the victory is won.

The blocks, which are being used in the new cement block building for Aldrich Bros, were manufactured by Fred Briggs. They are waterproof, and of a very good quality. It will take four thousand of them to complete the building, which will be used for Frank Brown's garage and agricultural implements.

The second annual convention of the clubs of the 12th district will be held in the assembly room of the court house, Fort Wayne, on Tuesday, April 12. A general discussion of the subject, "Everybody's Child," an address by the state president, Mrs. Grace Julian Clarke of Indianapolis, and reading by Miss McIntyre of Auburn, interspersed with music will be the leading features. There are over sixty clubs in the district and it is expected that all will be represented. Mrs. J. E. Buchanan of Auburn, is the district chairman.

The HERALD has been "tipped" that a couple of Butler's distinguished gentlemen went out for a joy ride last Friday evening in a gasoline car and becoming intoxicated with the spring air and grandeur of the evening wandered into by and forbidden paths for some minutes and when it became time to retrace their tracks back to the city of their nativity, the blamed machine betrayed their confidence and carried them into the city limits of Fort Wayne. Turning about they headed their machine northward and after spinning along for some minutes, turned their gaze in the direction where they thought nestled the inhabitants of the city which it seemed to them had been months since they had last seen. But Ney, Louie, the glare of the electric lights could not be discerned, they had evidently taken the wrong road again. The car was brought to a standstill and the telephone sought. They thought perhaps that if they could locate the town by phone they coule follow the line which would take them back to their friends. The natives were aroused and questions plyed but they were very courteously informed that they were in the neighborhood of Ney, Ohio. Then the thoughts came if they only had "Old Luce" they could let the lines slack and she would take them safely home. Still there was some juice left and the wheeles turned, and after several other small towns were made while the inhabitants were sleeping, and the sun began to throw her golden light over the eastern sky, the heroes of this tale once more landed in the smiling city in time for breakfast.

Ralph Troyer is on the sick list.

William Eakright, south of town, has been quite sick.

We have been authorized by a member of the lecture course committee to say that another and better course will be held next year and that it will be given as this year, under the direction of the free public library. The HERALD is proud of the fact that Butler can support a high class lecture ocurse and make it a success.

THE economy of using De-Lead-and-Zinc Paint is in results as well as price.

You need fewer gallons than usual; that means less cost for paint, less cost for painter. But it means a better job; the paint covers better and lasts longer.

Devoe Lead-and-Zinc Paint will outlast ordinary paint about three to one as a rule.

THE WELL DRESSED WOMAN

IS ALWAYS

BEAUTIFUL!

Good dressing is not so much a matter of money as of knowledge, attention, care, good taste.

To-day the manufacture of ready-made garments for women has been brought to such a state of perfection that there is no reason for any woman not being suitably dressed, prettily dressed, always dressed in the manner best suited to her figure, style, character.

The manufacture of women's ready-to-wear clothing is conducted on such a gigantic scale that the makers are able to employ cutters, designers who are master craftsmen, artists in every sense of the term, men to whom the cutting and designing of garments is a science.

These men have trained the public to appreciate and demand clothes that conform to art and good taste in dress, garments that express and develop the wearer's personality, her individuality, and this at a money outlay of very little more than the bare cost of materials.

This money economy is not the only saving afforded by the purchase of ready-made garments. The time-saving element is of almost more importance to the busy modern woman with her multiplied time consuming interests of home, club, society.

It takes no more time to purchase a tailor-made suit—that backbone of woman's wardrobe—than it does to match buttons, or buy findings, or search out the particular shade of spool silk needed.

We have a very large line of Ladies' and Misses' Fine Tailored Suits, in all the most wanted shades, from

$10, $12.50, $15, $18.50 to $25

A complete line of Spring Jackets, Covert, Pongee, Serge, Diagonal and Cravenetted Long Coats at very low prices.

Under Muslins that Appeal to Critical Buyers

Quality is the keynote of the Muslin Underwear we sell. Every garment is made under the most sanitary conditions, the materials carefully selected, the designing done by experts, the trimming tastefully applied with tucks and plaits, insertions and folds. You'd never find time to fuss over it in your own sewing room.

A New York man, seeking American citizenship, declared the United States flag was green. Can a man who is so color blind as that be worked over into a good citizen?

When does an unmarried woman change from a young to an old maid? That was the question, and it is one of perennial interest, discussed in a Chicago woman's club the other day. No agreement was reached, but when one speaker declared that at 28 a woman is not yet an old maid, and is "probably better looking than at any other age," she was heartily applauded by the other women present. It is interesting thus to discover that the members of the club are all about 28 years old.

Particularly annoying and even dangerous abuses have sprung up in the matter of "interference" in wireless telegraphy. Amateur operators who delight in sending out hoax messages, cutting into important despatches, and in general making aerial nuisances of themselves, have from time to time been reproved, but matters have gone to such a length that the government is considering ways and means of ending the trouble. From time immemorial the air has been considered free to all, and the only thing that can wholly control the conduct of those invisibly using it is, not laws, but manners.

Ironing linen has a greater effect than is commonly believed. As the temperature of the iron may greatly exceed 266 degrees Fahrenheit it has been suggested that the process of ironing may suffice to sterilize surgical dressings and hence be of valuable service, especially in rural districts and elsewhere, in the absence of disinfecting ovens and sterilizers. Nearly all microbes can be killed by a sufficiently long application of a temperature of 158 degrees Fahrenheit, but a temperature of 266 degrees Fahrenheit is required to kill certain spores of bacteria and to produce absolutely complete sterilization. It has been proved by experiment that it is possible to disinfect clothing very satisfactorily by ironing. Clothing which has been worn by children affected by various contagious diseases, and which contained bacteria or pus, diphtheria and the like, was sprinkled and ironed. It was then rubbed on plates of gelatine prepared for the culture of bacteria, but not a single colony was developed.

There is comfort for university students afflicted with "blue slips" in a curious statistical study lately made of the life history of Yale graduates and non-graduates for half a century. The examination was made by the secretary of the university and the striking results must be accepted as accurate. The only doubt we have about them is just what is meant by non-graduates. Probably it means only students who completed their four years' course and were refused diplomas at the end. Surely a different result would have been reached if the list of non-graduates included all who had ever studied at Yale for a longer or shorter time. The result is puzzling enough anyway. Yale has produced 23,000 alumni in the half century and in the same time nearly seven thousand students were sent away without the coveted diploma. These non-graduates are scattered all over the country, came from all kinds of secondary schools, good, bad and indifferent, and are credited to all departments of the university, though the medical school furnishes the largest percentage. Here 50 per cent fail to get diplomas, though only 20 per cent failed in the academic department or college proper. If success in life is measured by attaining standing in the professions and business, the compilation tells largely in favor of the non-graduates. The percentage of them that have succeeded in the arts, journalism and letters, in the ministry, in the public service, in every business but finance and in farming is higher than the percentage of successful graduates. The latter have excelled only in education, the other professions, finance and science, and their superiority is slight except in law and engineering. Obviously graduates have been most successful in professions that exact severe training, non-graduates most successful in those where it depends on natural endowment.

WANTED HIS NAME IN PAPER.

Curious Question Raised in a Canadian Court of Law.

A case of interest to newspaper men came up before Chief Justice Meredith last month when J. B. MacKenzie, a Toronto lawyer, entered an action against the Toronto World and George M. Lee, its Osgood hall reporter, to obtain an injunction against the defendants, restraining them from omitting his name from reports of cases in which he may be engaged as counsel or solicitor.

Chief Justice Meredith took the stand that the World published the report for the information and interest of its readers; that this report must necessarily be brief, but that so long as it was in no particular incorrect and contained no reflection in the nature of libel or improper statement of fact, the World had a right to publish what it pleased.

In the present case, Printer and Publisher states, the plaintiff did not claim that any incorrect statement had been made or anything in the nature of a libel published, but merely that the report was not full enough to slut him in that his name and connection with the case had been omitted from it. It really amounted to a complaint that the World had not given him the benefit of advertising in connection with the case, and this, his lordship claimed, Mr. MacKenzie could not compel the World to do. He suggested, humorously, that a contract at so much a line be made to cover the situation.

Mr. MacKenzie claimed, however, that the court had inherent right to deal with the matter, and that everybody should be placed upon the same footing or the reports excluded. He claimed that such an omission was an injury to his calling, in that solicitors from outside points would thus be hindered from sending him retainers. His lordship dismissed the application for injunction, and Mr. MacKenzie intimated that the matter is not yet closed.

LESSONS OF LIFE.

Futility of Giving the Young the Most Costly Thing on Earth.

I wonder if you realize that it is rather a solemn moment for any one of my age to come face to face with boys at your age, said Lord Rosebery in an address at Edinburgh, according to an exchange. I suppose between the eldest of you and myself some five-and-forty years intervene. Looking back on that period between the termination of one's school life and the period at which one has arrived, one reviews it with a sense of one's own great shortcomings, of one's waste of time, of one's opportunities missed. No one is wholly satisfied with his life. The best of men that you could think of cannot have felt any complete satisfaction at reviewing his career. But there are degrees and degrees of satisfaction.

The most costly thing in the world is what we are all willing to give to those who are younger, and what our juniors never accept, but throw away into the ditch as soon as they receive it, as though it was destitute of all value at all, and that is experience. We all buy our experience very dearly, with pain, with anguish, sometimes with our heart's blood, and yet when we try to give it to those who are younger than ourselves they treat it with neglect, and they go into the world resolved to buy their own experience themselves.

Well, I, therefore, won't offer you my experience, because, as I say, you would reject it. But there is a great phase which has come down from the ...cients, which embodies, I think, all ...t a boy at school ought to wish to ... putting religion aside. I am going to say it in Latin, and you won't understand it, because I pronounce it in the Eton way, which is all wrong, and you pronounce it in the Scottish way, which is all right: "Mens sana in corpore sano." I suppose you would say (here his lordship adopted the Scottish pronunciation): "Mena sana in corpore sano"—a healthy mind in a healthy body.

Hopeless.

Lawyer—You don't like the jury?

Defendant—I do not. No. 1 is my ...lor, No. 3 is my grocer, No. 5 is my ...k and egg dealer and No. 7 is my wife's first husband. What chance have I got?—St. Paul Dispatch.

Fawning.

"Why is everybody so cordial to Jinx?"

"He bought a couple of sides of bacon just before the meat strike went into effect and he has some of it yet."—Houston Post.

It occurs to every man occasionally that he would like to be a pugilist for about thirty minutes.

MASKERS.

Hope, the great explorer;
Love whom none can bind,
Youth that looks before her,
Age that looks behind,
Joy with brow like Summer's,
Care with wintry pate,
Maskers are and mummers
At Life's gate.

Pow'r with narrow forehead,
Wealth with niggard palm,
Wisdom old, whose hoar head
Vaunts a barren calm;
Haughty overcomers,
In their pomp and state;—
Maskers all and mummers
At Death's gate!

That Club Supper

When Mrs. Myron Tuttle spoke up in the business meeting of the Culture Club and opened her house for the annual supper which that leading woman's club of Three Pines was in the habit of giving its husbands and some special outside guests Mrs. Lawyer White, who was the president, coughed a little wildly to gain time.

Always the club supper previously had been held at the spacious residence of the Springers, who had three full sets of china. This season Mrs. Springer was away, but it had been rather understood that Mrs. Dr. Sprong would offer to be hostess. Mrs. Tuttle had spoken so quickly when the question was put that every one knew she must have planned it long ahead. And everybody, in the midst of her dismay, wondered why.

In the first place, Hetty Tuttle was no housekeeper. She was a large, complacent woman, who did not wince when her small son Tommy scratched the mahogany piano with her embroidery scissors and who was perfectly happy if the house was undusted and the broom was standing in the front hallway when callers arrived. Her benighted husband still adored her after twenty-two years of underdone steaks and no place for anything and everything always out of its place. The way Myron Tuttle let himself be walked over was a scandal.

Hetty Tuttle disliked work in any form, so nobody could imagine why she had put herself in the way of taking on so much. Still, Mrs. Lawyer White rather helplessly accepted the offer from this dubious source and then brightly moved that a chairman be appointed to oversee the supper and relieve Mrs. Tuttle of some of the work.

"YOU PEOPLE ARE CERTAINLY SWELL COOKS."

This was conceded to be a decidedly clever arrangement, for there was no use talking—Hetty Tuttle never could manage the affair herself. Mrs. Dr. Sprong, who was given the post of chairman, began borrowing embroidered lunch cloths of every one right and left that very day, for she knew without asking that Mrs. Myron Tuttle hadn't a couple of dozen laid by, as a good housekeeper should.

"Goodness knows," she mourned, "how we'll ever cook the chickens and things in her kitchen!"

As the time for the supper approached the members of the Culture Club took to dropping in on Hetty Tuttle with cut glass and silver in their arms. They said they thought maybe she would find such things of use in serving so many. Hetty Tuttle accepted all these loans placidly. She was the least concerned member of the club. Seemingly, she did not worry at all over this most important club function of the year, so every one else fretted herself into a fever.

Minnie, the Tuttles' 19-year-old daughter, seemed to catch the excitement, however. Her mother deferred to her in a worshipful way and handed all the cut glass over to her keeping.

"You go right ahead, Minnie," she often said in those days. "I guess you know what is right and can show 'em! I guess Alf Kreeble will see your folks can entertain and do things as well as his, even if they haven't got so much money!"

At that Minnie Tuttle would turn away with reddening cheeks, for she knew that the main idea behind having the Culture Club supper at their home was to dazzle Alf Kreeble and urge him on a trifle faster. Of late he had lagged in his attentions and Hetty Tuttle could not bear to see her daughter unhappy.

The women of the Culture Club will never forget the night of that annual supper. Amid all the hurry and turmoil Mrs. Myron Tuttle moved calm and undisturbed, while Mrs. Dr. Sprong in her black silk, Mrs. Lawyer White in rattling jet and half a dozen others with red faces and glittering eyes bumped into one another in the inconvenient kitchen, called wildly for utensils which were not, exploded at the discovery that there was no sugar in the pantry and had hysterics because Mrs. Tuttle had forgotten to order the special potatoes for baking.

Crowded in the parlors around the little tables were the elite of the men folks of the town, waiting for food. The tension was terrible. It was absolutely unthinkable that the Culture Club should have a failure laid at its door. So while all the club women except Hetty Tuttle slaved and suffered and agonized to have things as they should be nobody noticed how Minnie Tuttle and Alf Kreeble were sitting together cozily on the lower stair. Nobody observed that Minnie got Alf all white meat and three orders of dumplings and two pieces of pie and a ridiculous amount of cabbage salad and hovered over him while he ate.

Meanwhile Minnie looked very pretty in her fluffy white dress.

"Say," Alf Kreeble told her at last, "you people are certainly swell cooks, Minnie! I bet you helped your mother do most of this, now, didn't you? Say, that cake—did you bake it?"

Minnie was young, but she was wise. She smiled seraphically. "I'm so glad you like the supper, Alf," she told him, smoothly. If she had died for it she could not have told who had really cooked the supper—she had been too busy thinking of him and getting her gown ready. "Let's sit over here out of the crowd," she added.

That was why a little later in the evening, when people were talking hard and the women were trying to forget the fatiguing evening they had put in and mentally execrating the serene Hetty Tuttle, that incompetent hostess was beaming. She was watching Alf Kreeble and Minnie in their secluded corner and she could see that Alf was holding Minnie's hand and talking very earnestly.

Mrs. Myron Tuttle heaved a relieved sigh at last and absently rubbed a plump finger across the dust on top of a bookcase. "I think," she murmured, "the club supper's been an awful fine success!"—Chicago Daily News.

JEFFRIES AS A TEXT.

Preacher Thinks He Can't "Come Back" and Points a Moral.

"Can Jeffries Come Back?" was the title of a sermon preached by the Rev. John Hamilton Timbrell in the Cedar Cliff Methodist Episcopal church, says the New York Sun. The preacher took his text from the Book of Judges, and after describing as pathetic and humiliating the downfall of Samson, he said it pointed a moral to the case of Jeffries, "Can the old-time champion come back?" the preacher asked, and then he said:

"This question, so far as its sporting phase is concerned, may have little or no interest to us save as it touches a great fundamental principle that is of the most profound interest to all thinking men, and one which may lead many of them to read what they otherwise would not, the sporting pages of the sporting papers, to see if Jeffries can come back.

"What is the point in this case? Jeffries won the belt and much lucre, and then stepped out of the ring to have a good time and enjoy himself, and for five years, like Samson, with his head in the lap of Delilah, Jeffries has slept with his head in the lap of a luxurious and bibulous life. While he has slept a big black gorilla has come into the ring and has put the world of sport into about the same condition that ancient Israel was in when Goliah of Gath was swaggering about and bragging of what he could do in the presence of the crowd that was sore afraid to tackle him. And the pugilistic crowd is looking the world over to find some champion who can stand up to the gorilla and down him and take the belt, which means about the same thing to these modern heathen as the wreath of laurel meant to the ancient heathen in the Corinthian games. And with desperation in their glance they turn to Jeffries with this question, which means far more than a laurel wreath to them: 'Can Jeffries come back?'

"A noted athletic trainer has given them his unbiased opinion. He is one of the best authorities on athletic training. And it is not reassuring to the crowd who are so eager to bet their shekels on Jeff. He says: 'It makes no difference whether a man is a runner, jumper, fighter, ball player or participant in any other branch of sport, if he stops training for three or four years he can never regain his lost form.' Furthermore he says: 'I have never seen an exception to the rule.'

"Back of this statement of the trainer and looking out upon us though, it is a great fundamental principle that is as solemn as the day of judgment, a principle that will be found to hold everywhere in the universe of God, the momentousness of which may cause us for the time being to overlook the fact that our attention is called to it through the malodorous channel of the pugilistic ring."

Motherly.

"Well, Effie, dear, I hope you've been a little mother to your brother while I've been out?"

"Oh, yes, I have. I've smacked him quite a lot!"—London Opinion.

Painting is more of a habit with some women than art is with an artist.

WRECKS TRUCK TO SAVE YOUNG WOMAN.

Frederick Mayer, driver of a hook and ladder truck, is dying in a Brooklyn hospital after performing a splendid deed of heroism while driving to a fire. His horses were on a full run when directly in his path Mayer saw a young woman standing panic-stricken on a cross-walk. On one side, close to her, stood a trolley car filled with passengers; on the other was one of the tall iron pillars of the elevated railway. Had the driver kept on he would have run down the woman; by turning to the right he would have endangered the lives of the passengers. Mayer yelled to the firemen clustered along the sides of the truck to jump, gave the reins a mighty tug and ran full tilt into the iron pillar. There was a crash, the horses were thrown down, badly injured, the truck was overturned and Mayer was pinned under it with skull fractured, leg broken and body crushed.

A JAPANESE-GREEK FABLE.

A Japanese-American version of an ancient Greek myth is indeed a piece of literature. In some correspondence of Lafcadio Hearn, published recently in the Atlantic Monthly, there is quoted such a composition, warranted to be genuine. It was written by a native of Japan in an examination paper.

Tithonus was a youth very handsome and polite.

Aurora was the rosy-fingered Goddess of the Dawn—a very fine young lady with rosy fingers.

She was used to get up in the earlier morning every day, and she was very studious.

She follen in love to Tithonus, and by her chariot taked him up to the sky.

One day she ask him that—"Sir, I can give you all thing you want." Then he ask to her that—"Please give me the eternal life."

Hoping to enjoy the eternal life of her husband, Aurora ask to Zeus, Father of all the Gods;

And soon the eternal life was bestow on Tithonus.

But Aurora forget to request for the eternal youth; therefore Tithonus have the only eternal life.

Gods have the eternality of youth as well as life.

Tithonus came to become thirty or fourty years of age.

He became every day more old.

He become TOTALLY old.

And felt the miseration of this life.

To the last desire he begged the God to make him a glasshopper and to hop on the ground.

So for pity the God changed him into a glasshopper, which could hop about our world.

And he is hop about the ground even now, and bears the dry looking.

So from a man becomed the husband of the Goddess, and then to be changed into a vile worm!

This should teach us well to ask never the inconsistent things.

Knowledge That Is Power.

The world is full of people who know a great deal but cannot use their knowledge. They are weighted down with unavailable facts and theories, says Orison Swett Marsden in Success Magazine. You have often met people who seem to know much, who are so encyclopedic in their greedy absorption of facts, that their general knowledge is like an enormous pack on a soldier's back, which exhausts his vitality and impedes his march. It makes them heavy of foot and clumsy in everything they do. They impress you as not being large enough to swing their loads and carry them with ease. They are like children tugging away at great pieces of furniture which they can scarcely lift.

It is not the ability, the education, the knowledge that one has that makes the difference between men. The mere possession of knowledge is not always the possession of power; knowledge which has not been digested and assimilated and become a part of yourself, knowledge which cannot swing into line in an emergency, is of little use, and will not save you at a critical moment.

To be effective, a man's education must become a part of himself, as he goes along. All of it must be worked up into power. A little practical education that has become a part of one's being and is always available will accomplish more in the world than knowledge far more extensive that cannot be utilized.

Alaskan Glaciers.

An interesting fact about Alaskan glaciers is that some are "dead" and others are "alive." Davidson glacier, which is really a tongue of the Muir glacier, has been ascended by travelers for a number of years. It is a dead glacier, having a moraine of several miles between it and the sea. Looking at it from the boat, it represents a kaleidoscopic appearance as the sun shines upon it, and the surface seems scratched with tiny pin lines. These are in reality deep crevices, which must be approached cautiously, for they are lurking pitfalls for the unwary.—Vancouver Providence.

"And may I ask what it is?"

POLITICS OF THE DAY

The Rocky Road for Taft.

The Taft policies are roughly jolted when a committee of the House edits and amends one of his favorite measures by making in it the identical changes recommended by two of the foremost insurgents in the Senate. This is just what the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has done to the president's railroad bill.

What Senators Cummons of Iowa and Clapp of Minnesota could not persuade the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce to do, the House committee has done without their persuasion. The Senate committee reports the bill just as the president and Attorney General Wickersham drafted it. The House committee, by practically unanimous vote, declares that the progressive Republicans in the Senate were right in demanding radical changes.

The House committee, appointed by Uncle Joe Cannon, be it remembered, frowns upon the president's plan to permit a railroad company owning 50 per cent or more of the stock in another road to complete its control by buying it all, and that provision is stricken out. Progressive ideas are further adopted in the provision forbidding a director in one railroad company to serve in the directorate of another.

The provision put into the bill by the House committee forbidding steam roads to own or control city, suburban or interurban electric roads did not originate in the mind of the president or his attorney general, but it appears in the Cummins-Clapp minority report to the Senate. It is furthermore worth making a memorandum of the fact that the attack on the provision of the bill authorizing one road to buy up the stock of another was led by one of the Minnesota insurgent Congressmen of whom Mr. Taft spoke unkindly at Winona, and that Speaker Cannon's Committee on Interstate Commerce sustained him by a vote of seventeen to one.

It is not easy to believe that these progressive changes in the bill are wholly distasteful to the House leaders of the regular Republican organization. It may be presumed that Speaker Cannon chose the members of this committee with care, and that the majority of them represent the views of himself and his associates. Probably, also, these leaders would be glad to meet the president's wishes, but the Congressional elections are coming nearer every day. Republican members of the House may not be so calmly resigned to the prospect of party defeat as the president seems to be.—St. Louis Republic.

It Will Be a Landslide.

It is the progressive Republican voter and not the progressive Republican Congressman who is going to make trouble for the President and all his allies when the November ballots begin to fall. The progressive Congressman is only the humble servant of the progressive voter. The said Congressman smilingly listens to the rebukes of Taft and the revilings of Cannon, well knowing that if he bends the knee or supples the backbone to win their favor his master at home will dismiss him without a blessing.

The country is fast coming to the conviction that the President and all the influences that are behind Aldrich and Cannon have deliberately elected to accept overwhelming defeat this year rather than fulfill the promises and pledges of two years ago. What they propose or expect to do after this deluge is as yet a dark secret. But the outraged voters know what they are going to do. The spring avalanches in the Rocky Mountains are light and harmless precipitations by comparison with the landslide under which they are getting ready to bury the unprogressive Republican party.—St. Louis Republic.

Wealth Distribution.

If all the trust-made millionaires in America gave all or most of their wealth to humanity's uplift we would be as far from a true solution of the nation's chief economic problem as ever.

The problem of all ages has been equitable distribution of the fruits of labor. The problem is acute in this nation to-day because the Aldrich-Taft tariff reverses the normal channels of wealth distribution.

Tariff taxation, beyond the amount necessary for an economical administration of government, is industrial feudalism's chief weapon. Private monopoly crushes opportunity. It not only destroys the power of individuals to amass wealth through healthy competition, but turns its batteries of extortion on helpless consumers in all walks of life.

Great private fortunes built upon private monopoly of any of nature's commodities—whether it be oil, steel, sugar, lumber or any other—are monuments to the nation's economic folly. If even a major part of these fortunes should filter back to humanity's benefit, through philanthropic benefactions, it would not make the crime of private monopoly less odious.

Industrial feudalism demoralizes nations and individuals. It checks the normal springs of industry. It withholds the rewards of honest labor, and heaps fortune upon rich idlers whose lives are a menace to the social order.

The Rockefellers and Carnegies are a few among an army of trust-made millionaires. Yet, were the whole array to follow their example, they could not make tariff feudalism right by the most princely benefactions.

Why the Government Wastes Its Millions.

If the United States government wastes $300,000,000 a year—as Senator Aldrich says—he is the man of all men to know the reason why.

In calling attention to the fact he is like the prudent porch-climber, who diverts suspicion by ringing a doorbell to say, Sir, your window is unlatched.

It is the role of all the fat monopolists that this gentleman represents—to affect to be marvellous masters of business economy. They are aiming, through Mr. Aldrich, to forestall and discredit the government's right to control their great corporations—by persuading the people that the government is a hopeless incompetent in business, and that they, and they alone—out of the goodness of their hearts—are able to introduce a little order and efficiency into public affairs.

Now, the truth is that the administration of the government departments—wasteful as it is—is infinitely less wasteful than the rule of the great monopolies—whether the wastes of that rule be considered from the outside or the inside of the trusts. And it is also true that the corruption of the public administration is a disease that has infected the political order by contagion from corrupt private business. Thus it is an impudent affectation on the part of Mr. Aldrich to assume that the plenipotentiary of the trusts can teach the nation economy. That the trusts are as wasteful in their internal administration as they are prodigal of the people's wealth is an open secret that needs only air. The notion that the great private monopolies are models of productive economy is a satire upon the economic ignorance of the time.

A private business may be admirable in its management until it reaches the point of monopoly. But in passing that point it bids good-by to all the rules of economy and efficiency. Henceforth high honor and promotion among the officers and employes of the concern are not to be hoped for by those who have only administrative ability and technical skill to offer. The highly paid and controlling places in the trust go not to productive economists, but to commercial politicians.

The great trust managers are plungers and spenders, whose gift lies not in avoiding waste, but in charging it doubled and quadrupled against the public. Their arts are not productive, but predatory—and their spirit works downward through all the ranks of the pay roll, discouraging technical efficiency and offering rewards to subtlety and graft. The monopolistic trusts—so far from furnishing models of economy—are at war with the scientific administration, honest craftsmanship and the book of arithmetic, and are doing their best to abolish these things. And the great trust senator, in moving for national economy, evinces the speculative interest that hawks have in setting hens.—Chicago Examiner.

How Much Have You?

Wealth is no crime, but the manner of obtaining wealth may be. One-eighth of the people of the United States own seven-eighths of the wealth. One per cent of the one-eighth own 99 per cent of the seven-eighths of the wealth. How much is your share?

How It Comes.

"Happiness is never complete," says a Georgia philosopher. "When the fish are biting in the near-by streams the weather makes a fellow too drowsy to dig bait."—Atlanta Constitution.

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of
"The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER XIV.

"One moment!" said Jen, as they approached the veranda, whereon Dido was waiting them. "How do you know that Etwald picked up the handkerchief in the room?"

"Because I overheard his apology to my mother for having put her handkerchief to such use," replied Isabella, with suspicious promptitude.

"Humph! Didn't the doctor think it strange that he should find it there? Rather peculiar, don't you think, seeing that he must necessarily have been ignorant of your visit on that night."

"He was not ignorant of that! To account for the fever which seized me, my mother explained all that took place to Dr. Etwald. He quite understood that I had dropped the handkerchief."

"Did he apologize for his use of it—before or after the explanation?" was Jen's final question.

"After!" replied Isabella, with some hesitation; then abruptly left the Major's side to exchange a few words with Dido. Jen looked after her with a glance full of doubt and suspicion. Notwithstanding her love for Maurice, and her expressed desire to avenge his death by hunting down the assassin, she appeared to be anything but frank in the matter. In plain words, her conduct suggested to Jen's mind an idea that she knew more than she cared to talk about; and that such half-hinted knowledge implicated her mother. In which case—but here Dido interrupted Jen's meditations.

"My missy tell me you wish to hear my Obi," she said, abruptly fixing her eyes on the face of the visitor. "Why you wish? You laugh at Obi."

"I don't particularly wish to learn your Voodoo secrets," answered Jen, carelessly. "All I desire to know is why you manufactured that scent with which you saturated a certain handkerchief of your mistress."

"Mother's handkerchief, Dido," explained Isabella, interrupting. "The one you found round my head."

"Oh, dat a Voodoo smell to drib away de evil spirit," said Dido, solemnly addressing herself more particularly to the Major. "My witch-mudder, she learn to make dat in her own land. Too much of it kill—kill—kill!"

"By means of its odor?"

"No, dat only drib away bad debbils. But you scratch de skin wid one leetle bit of it, and you die, die, die!"

"And the scratch is made by means of the wand of sleep?"

"Yes. Dat so," said Dido, with pretended surprise, turning on him sharply. "But you no b'lieve in Obi, massa. What you know of de wand of sleep—de debble-stick?"

"Because I had one, Dido."

The negress laughed with scornful doubt.

"Ho, dat one big lie. Der ain't no debble-stick, but in the king's palace at Kumassi."

"You are wrong. I had one, and it was stolen by——"

"Why, of course," interrupted Isabella, again. "Don't you remember, Dido, you were asked if you had taken it?"

"Ho, yes. Now I do tink," said Dido. "Ah, massa, you say I took de debble-stick and made de new smell to fill him. Den dat I kill wid him massa, who nabbed lil missy, and dat I made spells in your house to steal de body. Hey, dat no so?"

"It certainly is so," assented Jen, astonished to hear her put his suspicions into such plain words. "Mr. Aylmer was killed by means or this poison. It was used again to render my servant insensible while the body was stolen. So I thought——"

"I know, I know!" broke in Dido, impatiently. "But dat not to do with me. De poison in your debble-stick."

"There was; but it was all dried up."

"No! Dat nossin. If you pour water in dat stick de poison come alive. Well, dat stick taken, but I no take it. Dat poo' young massa killed wid it—I no kill him. But de odder ting, sah. Dat smell! I mek it for missy, dat all!" And having made this explanation, Dido folded her arms, and waited in scornful silence to hear what her accuser had to say. He considered the absolute absurdity of her story, which—on the face of it—was a manifest invention, and one which, it would seem, was supported by the testimony of Isabella.

"You are satisfied now, I think," said this latter, seeing that the Major did not speak.

"Well, yes, Miss Dallas," returned he, with much deliberation. "I am satisfied—for the time being."

"Does Dido's explanation give you any clue?"

"It gives me a clue in a direction for which I should not have looked for it. Thank you, Miss Dallas—and you, Dido. I shall now say good-day."

"When will you return?"

"When I have followed to its end the clue of which we have been speaking," replied Jen, and taking off his hat, he walked swiftly away from the house.

When he vanished round the curve of the drive, Isabella, with a very pale face, turned towards Dido.

"I have told all the lies you wished me to tell," she said, hurriedly. "I have hidden from the sharp eyes of Major Jen those things which you wished hidden, and all at the cost of my honor and honesty."

She ran hastily into the house, as though to escape further conversation on a distasteful subject, while Dido, with her eyes on the ground, remained in deep thought. The old negress knew that she was placed in a perilous position, which might be rendered even more so, should Isabella speak freely. But of this she had little fear, as by her conversation with Major Jen the girl had gone forward upon a path of concealment whence there was now no retreat. Yet Dido was not satisfied. She did not trust those around her, and she was uneasy as to what might be the result of Jen's pertinacity in investigating both the death of Maurice and the disappearance of the body. Thus perplexed, it occurred to her to seek out and consult with Dr. Etwald.

"I shall tell the master all," she muttered, in her own barbaric dialect, "and he will tell me what to do. The spirit in the Voodoo stone will tell him."

Having come to this resolution, she went into the house to ask, or rather to demand, permission to visit Deanminster. That she was about to call upon Etwald, the negress did not think it necessary to tell Mrs. Dallas. There were matters between her and the doctor of which Mrs. Dallas knew nothing, which she would not have understood if she had known. When she inquired, Dido merely hinted that such secrets had to do with Obi, when the superstitious nature of Mrs. Dallas immediately shrank from pursuing an inquiry into what were—even to this civilized so-called Christian woman—sacred mysteries.

But while Dido goes on her dark path and takes her way towards Etwald in his gloomy house at Deanminster, it is necessary to return to the doings of Major Jen. On leaving "The Wigwam" he returned forthwith to his own house with the intention of repeating to David the conversation which had taken place between himself, Dido, and Isabella. On his arrival, however, he learned that David had gone out for a walk, and that Meg Brance was waiting for him in the library. At once the ever-courteous Major hastened to apologize to his visitor.

"My dear Meg, I am so sorry to have been absent when you called. I hope you have not been waiting long!"

"Only half an hour!" replied Meg, in a low, grave voice. "I should have waited in any case until your return, as I have something important to say to you."

The Major looked inquiringly at his visitor. She was a tall and stately woman, with a fair complexion, steady blue eyes, and hair of a deep red shade. Although close on 25 years of age, she was still a spinster, as much to the annoyance of her mother—a match-making matron—she had hitherto declined the most eligible offers for her hand. Her reasons for such refusals she would not state, but Jen—from certain observations—had long since guessed the truth. Meg was deeply in love with Maurice Aylmer, and it was for his sake that she remained single. Whether she knew that the young man loved Isabella Dallas it is impossible to say; but at all events she showed him very plainly the drift of her desires. The very indifference of Aylmer had rendered her love more violent and persistent. What would have been the conclusion of this one-sided love it is difficult to conjecture; but the death of Maurice had brought this and all other things to an abrupt conclusion.

Meg was dressed in black out of regard for the dead man, and she looked worn, red-eyed, and very dejected. But in coming forward to greet the Major, her fine blue eyes lighted up with the fire of hope, and it was with something of her old impetuosity—quenched since the death of Maurice—that she gave him her hand and repeated her last remark.

"I have something to say to you," she said, quickly. "Something likely to help you in your investigation."

"Concerning the theft of the body?" asked Jen, eagerly.

"No, with regard to the murder."

"What is it?"

"I will inform you in a few minutes," replied Meg. "But first tell me if you have found out anything likely to reveal the truth."

"No." Jen shook his head mournfully. "I am completely in the dark, and so is Inspector Arkel. The whole case is a profound mystery."

"Well, mysteries, even the most profound, have been cleared up before now, Major. Come, tell me precisely how the matter stands, and I may be able to help you."

"You know something."

"Yes, I do; and it is to tell that something that I have driven over today. Well, now, Major, let me know all about the matter from the beginning. I have heard nothing but the most garbled accounts, and it is necessary that I should know the exact truth."

"I shall tell it to you," replied Jen, with some hesitation; "but I am afraid I shall give you pain."

"I guess what you mean—Miss Dallas."

"Maurice wanted to marry her."

"I know, I know," replied Meg, while a wave of color passed over her fair face.

"You do!" cried Jen, in surprise. "And who told you?"

"Mr. Sarby."

"Oh!" The Major considered a moment, and his thoughts were anything but benevolent towards David. "I can guess why he told you. In the meantime, let me state the case. Maurice was killed on the high-road by means, as I verily believe, of the devil-stick. You know about that, of course?"

"Yes; I read the report of the inquest, and I have heard rumors. I agree with you, Major, that Mr. Aylmer was killed by the poison of the devil-stick. Go on."

"On the night that the body was stolen," continued Jen, deliberately, "Jaggard was drugged by means of a perfume which is the same that impregnating the devil-stick."

"Well," said Meg, "it would seem that the devil-stick is the center of this mystery. If you found the devil-stick you would know the truth."

"I don't go as far as that," protested Jen. "If we found the person who stole the devil-stick from my smoking-room, I might guess the truth."

"In that case, Major, look at this," said Meg, and she produced an article from her pocket; an article which she held up triumphantly before the astonished eyes of the old man.

"The devil-stick!" he cried. "By all that is wonderful, the devil-stick!"

"Yes, the devil-stick. I got it from the assassin of Mr. Aylmer!"

"The assassin—you know the assassin. Who is he—or she?"

"It is not a woman, but a man, Battersea!"

CHAPTER XV.

Major Jen sprang to his feet with a loud cry. The information that Battersea was the criminal took him so utterly by surprise that for the moment he was tongue-tied. Then, when he recalled the feeble and emaciated form of the old tramp, when he recollected his weak intelligence; he altogether declined to believe that such a creature could have conceived and executed a triple crime—the theft of the devil-stick—the murder of Maurice—the stealing of the body. Battersea had not sufficient craft or strength to do such things. With a shrug of his shoulders the Major resumed his seat.

"You must be mistaken, Meg," he said, in a quiet voice. "Whosoever may be guilty, Battersea, for physical and mental reasons, must be innocent."

"That you must prove," replied Meg, dryly, "and in accusing Battersea I go only on your own premises. You said that the man who stole the devil-stick, who had it in his possession, must be the guilty person. "You see the devil-stick there." She pointed to the table. "Well, I obtained that from Battersea."

"How did you obtain it?"

"Knowing that I collected curiosities, he came to sell it to me."

"A proof of his innocence," cried Jen, promptly. "If the man had been guilty, he certainly would not offer the evidence of his guilt for sale. Where did he obtain this devil-stick?"

"Out of your smoking-room, I presume," said Meg. "But I have not questioned him, as I thought it best that you should examine him yourself."

"Certainly, when I can find him. Where is he now."

"Round at your stables with my groom. I brought him over with me."

"Thank you, Meg," said Jen, cordially. "I congratulate you on your presence of mind, and on your courage."

"There is no necessity to congratulate me at all," replied the other, coloring, "I knew that it would not be wise to let him out of sight after I saw the devil-stick in his possession. And as to my courage," she added, carelessly, "the poor old creature is so feeble that even I—a womanu—could overpower him. But ring the bell, Major, and have him in. I may be wrong. He may be innocent, but if you force him to confess how he obtained possession of the devil-stick, you may get at the truth—and perhaps at the name of the murderer."

"It won't be the name of Battersea," said Jen, touching the button of the bell. "He had no motive to steal my devil-stick, or to kill Maurice, nor could he have any reason to take possession of a dead body. Besides," added Jen, returning to his seat, "if this tramp were guilty, he would scarcely put his neck in danger by offering you the devil-stick for sale."

At this moment the footman appeared in answer to the bell, and in obedience to his master's peremptory order, left the room again for the purpose of bringing in old Battersea for examination. While waiting, neither Meg nor the Major spoke, as they both considered that nothing further could be said until the truth was forced from the tramp. Then the present aspect of the case might change, and an important step might be taken towards the solution of the mystery.

(To be continued.)

WHEN WIND IS WINED.

Word With Which Poets Have a Right to Do as They Like.

If you look up your dictionary you will find that the pronunciation of "wind" is given as if spelled "winid," with the additional information that formerly it was, and in poetry still is, pronounced as if spelled "wined," the Washington Post says. So much stress has been laid on the latter feature that school children, when reading verse aloud, are required by their teachers to sound the word as if it rhymed with "find," whether its position be at the beginning, the middle or the end of the line, and they even impose the same condition when blank verse, which, as every one knows, does not rhyme, is the subject of the reading experiment.

It has been recently asserted that the late Lord Tennyson, who knew a thing or two about poetry, denounced this convention. He gave, it is said, much thought to the sound and the length of vowels, preferred them open and long, and when he read aloud, as he did frequently, put his preferences into practice in so marked a manner as to confuse his hearers, being specially idiosyncratic on the letter "a." But he balked at "wined" for "wind," and would have none of it.

We are told all this "on authority"—and yet, what are we to make of this stanza from his "In Memoriam"?

I will not shut me from my kind,
And lest I stiffen into stone,
I will not eat my heart alone,
Nor feed with sighs a passing wind.

Is this a case of practice differing from theory? Or are the teachers to make their charges say "kinnd" for "kind," so that the rhyme may be preserved? Surely not; the old-fashioned way of saying "wined" will save them from anything so barbarous. As a matter of fact, Tennyson availed himself to the full of the now condemned convention. Thus, in his "Ode to Memory," he speaks of

Those peerless flowers which in the rudest wind
Never grow sere
When rooted in the garden of the mind,
Because they are the earliest of the year.

And in "The May Queen" we have:

With all my strength I pray'd for both,
and so I felt resign'd,
And up the valley came a smell of music on the wind.

But why repeat instances? They could be multiplied almost ad infinitum.

The poet who, literally, flung the convention to the winds was Swinburne. A daring innovator in so many things, he had the courage of his convictions even in this small matter. He who did not scruple to rhyme 'his" with "kiss," "son" with "sun," and "verses" with "courses," had no difficulty in making the wind jingle in harmony with "thinned" and "sinned."

So let budding poets take heart of grace, there are options for them still, as there were in the days when Dan Chaucer used French and English forms just as they suited his meter and his rhyme. And let sorely tried teachers not be discouraged by hypocritical iconoclasts. So far as the sound of "wind" is concerned, the teacher, like the king, can do no wrong.

Why He Objected.

"Oh, don't you mind it, Alfred, if the little boys cast slurs at you."

"I wouldn't, ma—but the last one they cast at me was wrapped round a brick bat."

What I am and what I think are conveyed to you in spite of my efforts to hold it back.—Emerson.

MAID AND MATRON

Great Change in Women.

"I had rather be a successful woman than an unsuccessful lady," says a prominent woman. This statement makes some of us sit up who have been jogging along without realizing the incompatibility of attaining success and remaining a lady. Before considering the matter we really should define terms, except that no one has ever been able to state just exactly what a lady is.

Success is the chief desire of life. Time was when a woman attained the greatest success possible to her merely by being a lady. She was admired, she married well, she became a social leader, and the highest compliment had been passed when it was said, "She is always a lady." Men changed because business methods changed. And one of the greatest factors in this change was the fact that the successful men were not as a rule gentlemen. To compete with them, the gentlemen had to change their tactics.

Then, women went into business, and there they found that the things which had been the hallmarks of the lady were excess baggage. A low, timid voice, a lack of self-assertiveness, a touching dependence upon the nearest masculine representative, an aloofness from the material things of life, easily shocked sensibilities, an overplus of sentiment, an unwillingness to do anything that would make her in the least conspicuous, a woman found did not raise her wages or advance her position in the working force. Besides, she found that the men she was brought into contact with no longer admired the qualities to which they had formerly written sonnets and dashed off Byronic prose.

The question naturally suggests itself to our speculative minds, that since people range themselves in grades, what will be the highest type of the present feminine members of society? What will be the adjective to couple with woman to express the most admirable mixture of qualities in her?

As for women themselves, they can comfort themselves in this transition state, while unanchored by the ideal of being a lady, and not yet supplied with another guiding star, with the reflection that very few famous women have been ladies. As we look back, a lady meant a person with so many negations and inhibitions that she was pretty much hobbled when it came to accomplishing anything momentous. The men also will have to give thought to the problem that they must get out and hustle to hold their own with the woman who has discarded the out-of-date garment of perfect ladyship.

Hair Supporters.

Among the numerous artifices used by women who are short on hair—and few women have enough to carry out the coiffures foisted on them by the hairdressers in the past few years—the supporter designed by a Washington woman and shown herewith is one of the most efficient. A wire frame has a crescent-shaped turn on top and a projecting support at the back, both covered with false hair, like the regulation "rat," or holding a fine wire screen. The two are joined by two wires, U-shaped. This supporter is placed on the head when the hair is down, and when the hair is done up the pads underneath give it the appearance of being much more abundant than it really is.

To Clean Linoleum.

Floor covering of good lineleum for the kitchen should hold its own for at least five years. The way to prolong its period of usefulness is to keep it clean; dirt ground into the finished surface by the tread of feet is the floor covering's greatest enemy.

Linoleum needs no soap, ammonia or strong cleaning agents. A simple wiping with a cloth just moist with warm water is all that is needed. In one country home skimmed milk mixed with the water was used, but the owner had a herd of thirty cows. Once or twice a year give the linoleum a wiping with good furniture polish to renew its smooth surface.

Mrs. Longworth's Gowns.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth is again among the leaders of fashion in the national capital, and her gowns are the models of her contemporaries. She wears the draped garment entirely, and she is fond of tissues and of the knitted silk effects. These gowns are among the most expensive things of the season. Mrs. Longworth's knitted draperies and waists always are covered with gold or silver beads. She has selected yellow for this season, and all her gowns are of various shades of this color.

House Work Will Do This.

Sweeping, properly done, will keep the waist round and trim, the figure straight and youthful and the chest full.

Washing windows will develop the chest and throat.

Climbing to the top of the step-ladder will make the ankle slender and graceful.

Using both arms correctly when ironing will round them and give them the needed fashionable plumpness.

So, you see, housework has its good points, after all.—Philadelphia Record.

"Chantecler" Styles.

Various are the sources of women's fashions, moralizes the New York World. A princess wears a high collar to conceal a scar, and all the feminine world adopts it. The headdress of peasant girls is utilized to form the "peach basket" hat of recent vogue. The army blouse of an Italian liberator was modified to make a garment for women's wear. Empresses and actresses stamp their individuality on a style of skirt or of hairdressing.

But is a poet to lead them all as an originator of fashions? The outburst of "Chantecler" hats, wraps, toques, etc., is one of the singular consequences of the wide interest in the Rostand barnyard drama. There are "Chantecler" hats ornamented with black roosters bearing red combs, "Chantecler" toques trimmed with golden pheasants, "Chantecler" opera cloaks, stockings, buttons, buckles and what not. There are "Chantecler" clocks and napkin rings. The craze has come as suddenly as the revived Directoire styles, and with the promise that it will probably pass as quickly. Yet in the minor articles of feminine adornment, in the crests, cockades, plumage and feathery ornament, its influence is likely to be felt longer.

Electric Bread Baking.

Electric baking ovens have long been available, but their use has not spread very rapidly, probably because of the cost or the difficulty of procuring the requisite current. In the little Swiss town of Kerns, where electric power is cheap, the electric baking oven has just been established in a satisfactory manner. In a furnace less than eight feet long, one hundred pounds of bread, in loaves of one and three pounds each, can be baked at one time, and eight bakings can be made in twelve hours. The cost of the heating is a little more than 1¾ cents a pound of bread.—Youth's Companion.

An Injustice to Women.

Who will say that women are afraid? Who will venture to call them the "weaker sex?" The true modern woman fears no peril. We already know that she—like all women, at all times—could endure even the most excruciating pain with admirable fortitude, and, generally speaking, much better than the average man. And yet, in spite of these facts, there are men who will deny that fearlessness, as they deny that fortitude. There still exists—and there will probably always exist—the type of husband, for instance, who tells his wife, after she has already gone through some terrible physical agony: "Well done, little woman; you bore it like a man!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

To Look Taller.

Here are hints for the woman who would be a little taller:

Avoid girdles.

Never under any circumstances wear a belt of contrasting color. You can think it gives a smart color note, but you are wrong.

Let all your lines run up and down. Do not wear a yoke of the square variety; it shortens you.

Have your gown all of one material, preferably a light tone.

Wear long gloves and carry a tall umbrella.

Hold your chin up to lengthen your throat line.

Carry your head straight, never tilted to one side. The tilted head is for the tall woman, who wants to look short.

Shoes and Pumps.

The low cut footgear shortly to replace the high topped boots of winter are of most attractive shape. An exceedingly comfortable walking shoe which comes in black as well as in various shades of brown and tan goat or kid, has a center seamed vamp above which is a four-button band, crossing and supporting the instep. On somewhat similar lines are ankle-strap shoes which promise foot comfort in warm weather, and in the narrow toed shape are very smart looking shoes with double straps crossing the instep and fastening under tassels. Cravanette, suede and fine kid pumps of various fashionable shades are perforated or stitch-bordered and ornamented with large oblong buckles or small flat ribbon bows.

Health and Beauty.

A poultice of salt mixed with the white of an egg makes a pewerful drawing poultice for a felon.

As a drink for sore throat—Pour half a pint of boiling water on one tablespoonful of black currant jam. Strain when cold. Give freely.

To brighten the eyes take occasionally just before going to bed, the juice of half a lemon in a small tumbler of water, without adding any sugar to it.

For coughs and hiccoughs salt in small quantities often allays these distressing afflictions. Taken in pinches before retiring will remove tickling in the throat and conduce to sleep.

After the nightly bath is best time for massage. The pores of the skin have been cleansed and opened and the effect of either skin food or cold cream used then seems little less than magical.

When a person is hurt, to prevent swelling and discoloration apply butter imediately, and bind on a piece brown paper. This is excellent wh there are children, as the remedy is ways near at hand.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Chantilly lace is once more in fashion.

Quaint is a bag of white suede in a raised pattern of a swan outlined in brilliants.

The English custom of wearing the watch in a gold bracelet has made a hit, both with the women of Paris and America.

The Russian turban, in heavy fur or velvet, is one of the leading styles and it is consistent with the rage for Russian fashions generally.

Sleeves fulled into the armholes and gathered below the elbow into deep cuffs are seen in some ultra-fashionable afternoon gowns.

Enamel buckles, oblong or oval shape, in Louis XIV. design, are to be worn with linen suits. They are made in all colors and in silver and gold.

In cottons, plaids promise exceedingly well from the start. They are two-toned and are shown in all grades. They will make up nicely with Swisses.

Satin bands are used as a finish of many of the handsome evening scarfs. There is, of course, no lack of spangles, whether in the shape of sequins or bugles.

Bows of tulle and brilliant buckles and long narrow severely plain bows of moire ribbon are considered quite the proper thing for tailored shirt waists.

With black costumes there are straight garnitures of embroidered net that cover the front of the waist and then fall straight in panel or stole effect down the front of the gown.

As a happy medium between the high waist line of the directoire period and the low line of the moyenage, the girdle, more attractive than ever, has been placed on many of the neweat gowns.

New Sleeves.

The bishop sleeve, with its full top and deep cuff, is also noticed.

Or the tailored sleeve, tight to the elbow, with tight lace undersleeve.

And the cloth sleeve with chiffon puff at the elbow.

Then there is the tight shoulder sleeve with full drapery below it.

Some of the tailored sleeves on coats have turn-back cuffs.

Pasteurizing Milk.

Place a pan of cold water on the stove and put a vessel containing the milk in the pan. As soon as the water begins to boil take it off. Add a small teaspoonful of soda to each quart of hot milk. Put the milk in a bottle and put in a cork. Milk treated in this way will keep sweet in hot weather for twenty-four hours.

Opposed to Early Marriages.

A woman died in Vienna recently who left $200,000 to her three nephews, with the understanding that any one of them who married before the age of 40 was to forfeit his share. Three nieces who also were mentioned in the will were not to marry before 30.

Unappreciative.

A woman will tell you she dresses to please her husband, even though he swears every time she buys a new dress.—Smart Set.

Repointed Machine Needles.

When sewing machine needles become blunted, rub them across a whetstone, which repoints as good as new.

SOME CHANGES IN SLEEVES.

There is to be a radical change in sleeves. But the old ones can be remodeled and built to look like new—which is always welcome news to those who have good waists left over from last year. Plain tailored leg o' mutton sleeves with buttons to the elbow are the favorites for tailored dresses. For dress-up wear, the elbow sleeve, with three-quarter length undersleeve of mull or mousseline will be most popular. A pretty gray plaid French gingham dress shown recently in a fashionable shop has rather full sleeves with deep cuff piped with plain gray. This design is said to be one of the prettiest sleeves of the season. Elbow sleeves, mosquetaire sleeves shirred from shoulder to knuckles, sleeves with elbow tucks to form a fullness at that point, and those with fullness tucked at the shoulder and wrist are all good.

Memories of the War

Streight's Attempt on Rome Georgia.

During the time that General Bragg's army was at Murfreesboro and Shelbyville a movement of troops under Colonel Streight was begun, the boats for carrying them "down the river" being hauled alongside of the wharf at Nashville.

Fenders, bearing the horses, ostensibly for Colonel Streight's expedition, preceded and followed the transports, some of which landed at Cumberland Iron Works and at Dover, seven miles below, to unload supplies for the troops destined, as was learned at a later day, to destroy the Confederate works and stores at Rome, Ga.

When Colonel Streight's command had gathered a large number of mules, etc., belonging to Messrs. Woods, Yeatman & Co., who owned Cumberland Iron Works, it took the route for Fort Henry, on the Tennessee River, where transports were awaiting to bear it up that stream to a point nearer to Rome, its final destination, as afterward appeared.

On learning that the transports were headed up stream from Fort Henry an express was immediately sent to General Forrest, and the same information was forwarded, at a most leisurely gait, to Spring Hill.

On receiving this information, General Forrest, who had been skirmishing with a Federal force in the vicinity of Florence, sent a party to observe Colonel Streight's movements until his objective was developed.

In a few days he was advised that Colonel Streight had disembarked his forces, which, mounted on the best horses, was hurrying across the country.

Believing that Colonel Streight's objective was to penetrate and lay waste the country, comparatively unprotected to the south and west, General Forrest took steps to intercept him, or to press him so closely as to prevent the thorough accomplishment of his work of destruction.

So, appearing to be beaten in the contest before him, General Forrest gathered up all his forces, including all details for scout and other duty which were within call, and set out "to capture that feller, or to run him down to the Dry Tortugas."

In a short time the pursuit was begun in real earnest, the men entering as heartily into the chase as did their untiring commander.

But "a stern chase" is proverbially "a long chase," and here the boys had the fullest verification of the old saw, for two days and nights elapsed before they were near enough to the enemy to discover, from various unmistakable signs, that he was not far in advance.

The chase now became furious, and we scarcely spent the time required for making coffee and cooking other food, around the camp-fire; for, now that Colonel Streight's motives dawned upon us, every nerve was bent to thwart his project.

Nor was it long before the pace began to tell upon the horses in both commands. Especially was this the case with the horses ridden by the enemy, as they were not inured to forced marches, made on empty stomachs, as were to some degree our horses.

On reaching Blue River we were much chagrined to discover that the enemy had crossed before us and had fired the bridge, the timbers of which were falling into the stream when the main body of our already depleted force arrived.

At this juncture a Miss W——, whose parents resided in the vicinity, came to our rescue and offered to pilot the General to a ford but a short distance above.

This offer was gladly accepted, and we crossed the stream in the face of a battery placed by the enemy to interrupt our march.

Forcing the passage, we compelled the artillery to vacate their position, and were soon in full chase, sweeping aside small detachments left by the enemy to retard our pursuit of the main force.

It now became of the most vital importance that we should close with the enemy at the earliest moment, for our command had dwindled down to a mere handful.

The enemy felt the necessity of pressing on, and if possible to gain a few hours in which the work of destruction might be completed. So he hurried on, every short distance being marked by a spent horse or some other evidence of his mad ride; while the route passed over by Forrest was marked by dead horses and—sleeping troopers!

Our force was now reduced to about seven hundred men, and, if the chase continued, we could not hope to reach Rome with more than one-half of that number—a force much too small to cope with Colonel Streight's sixteen hundred under ordinary circumstances.

But we reflected that the enemy had no means of learning accurately how rapidly our force was being disintegrated; and we pressed on, trusting that a demonstration would be made by the militia, home guards, etc. (which we knew would repair to the defenses in front of Rome), whereby the enemy would be delayed until we came up with him.

All this time scouts from Rome warned Colonel Streight that he might expect in his front a hostile force of some strength, no matter how inadequate it might be to do more than annoy him; and he felt that it behooved him to move with the utmost circumspection, for but a small mistake now would be the undoing of him.

In the meantime many of Colonel Streight's command, singly and in twos and threes, had been picked up at the farm houses.

All of them claimed inability to "keep up," as there were no extra horses with the command; and that the country people had at last learned of their approach, and had "run off everything but a few cows—and you know, Captain, we can't ride cows."

These prisoners were left in charge of such members of our own command as could "not keep up nor ride cows," we feeling assured that if our boys did go to sleep, their prisoners were too much jaded to attempt to retrace the paths over which they had reached this section of country, and could be picked up on our return toward the Tennessee River.

Colonel Streight was at last brought to a stand by the appearance of a formidable array of men-at-all-arms in his front, as well as a heavy pressure by our decimated troop in his rear.

Here General Forrest played one of his boldest games; for, keeping his force well in hand, he sent forward a flag and demanded Colonel Streight's surrender; and upon receiving demurrer from the gallant Colinel, the General gave orders for such disposition of his imaginary regiments as would completely surround the enemy and cut off all hope of escape.

Believing that he was surrounded by a largely superior force, Colonel Streight surrendered, and was escorted into Rome by the remnant of General Forrest's command, not more than four hundred troops, all told.

Thus was a daring scheme, brilliant in conception, thwarted on the very threshold of success, by a combination of circumstances. It is a difficult matter for a force to be moved hurriedly through an enemy's country, more particular if a Forrest pursues.

Colonel Streight was much mortified at being compelled to surrender to a force so small compared to his own; but he had the satisfaction of knowing that he had done his best, and the manliness to acknowledge that he had been outridden and outgeneraled.

Joke of Idle Soldiers.

We were lying in winter quarters, and had days and days of nothing to do. I did not play cards, but my tentmate did. He also had three special friends who played, and their meeting place was in my tent. There they met day after day—in the morning, in the afternoon and in the evening until late at night. Our tent was built for permanent quarters. In one end we made a door eighteen inches wide by three feet high. On the opposite side was a fireplace built outside of small sticks, like stonework, and covered inside with clay mortar.

The boys, as usual, were at their cards. I took a friend into my counsel and we procured a shell which had blown the load out without bursting. We fastened into this shell a long fuse. I then told my friend to go away several rods to an empty dry-goods box, and strike upon it so as to make it sound like the booming of distant cannon. "Hark!" said one; "d'you hear that? That's from Lee's battery on the left. We may have other business than card playing by daylight."

Just then "boom!" went the old dry-goods box, and instantly I dropped the shell, with the burning fuse, down the chimney. The shell fell upon the fire and rolled under the bunk on which the boys were sitting. "Tch—tch—tch!" went the burning fuse. The boys thought it a message directed from Lee's battery. Two tried to jump through the door at the same time, and blocked up the narrow door so that neither was able to get out. A full evacuation of the tent was finally effected and a retreat made—not, however, in good order. No one was killed, but the boys waited behind distant trees for more than thirty mortal minutes momentarily expecting to see the tent blown to atoms. After a while these heroes came together and in the council of war they held on the field of fright it was decided that they had been victims of fraud. But there was no more card playing in my tent.

An Anecdote of Kilpatrick.

On our way to Fredericksburg, in 1862, we had encamped for a day, and late in the afternoon our attention was attracted by the music of a band in a grove only half a mile away, who kept playing one lively air for so long a time that some few of us proposed to go over and see what the fun was about. At this time Kilpatrick was lieutenant colonel of the Harris Light Cavalry, afterward called by prejudiced infantry "Kilpatrick's thieves." When we reached the grove a very funny sight greeted us. The band was still playing, but nearly exhausted. Kilpatrick, elevated by standing on a barrel-head, was shouting directions to at least fifty darky men, women and children, old and young, who were dancing a breakdown in the true Virginia style, the sweat pouring off from them. The band leader appealed to Kilpatrick in behalf of his wind-broken band, but in vain. "Kil" shouted back, "Play till you wear the darkies out," then yelled to the darkies, "Keep it up, boys and girls, you will beat that band sure."

Aye, there stood the man who was afterward celebrated in history, General Kilpatrick, the raider, prompting the most amusing dance ever witnessed. No modern minstrel troupe has ever equaled it. His officers were just as busy as he was, and one of them passed around the hat, to which the spectators responded liberally, then, just as the band blew a last and dismal blast, Kilpatrick threw the contents of the hat among the contrabands. Such a scene; down on all fours, scrambling, pushing, shouting, and screaming, until the last silver piece had been secured. Kilpatrick came down from the barrel, and in his ever genial manner shook hands with us, saying: "Gentlemen of the Sixth, I am glad to see you. You will excuse this little party, for it is not often that we have such fun, and at the same time gave active employment to the contrabands."

A Perfect Disguise.

"Was Jimmie Ruffhouse at the masquerade?" asked Willoughby.

"Yes," replied Addleton. "He had the most perfect disguise I ever saw. Nobody recognized him."

"What did he go as?" asked Willoughby.

"A gentleman," said Addleton.—New York Sun.

It was so cold in New York part of the winter of 1779 that residents in the vicinity were compelled to cut down the tall trees that stood at what is now the head of Wall street to make kindling wood.

Post Office Department

Postmaster Rudd has received the following request from the fourth assistant postmaster general and we reproduce it here hoping that it will be of benefit to the patrons and carriers:

Sir—It is the desire of the department that you earnestly request patrons of rural delivery out of your office to paint their boxes and the posts to which they are attached a pure white color. This course, if pursued, will not only result in benefit to the patron in serving to protect his box and post from damage by the weather, but will give all boxes a uniform color and serve to fix their identity in all parts of the country as United States mail boxes, and will give them a much neater and sightlier appearance than they now possess. It is also desired that patrons be induced to imprint their names and box numbers on boxes in black block letters about two inches high.

It is also desired that you endeavor to induce road officials to paint upon the posts of boxes which are located at crossroads (but not attach signs thereto) the names of the towns or villages to which the crossroads lead, with an indicator showing the direction.

Posts to which boxes should be attached shall be set in an easily accessible position at the side of the road and boxes securely fastened to a projecting arm of wood, as shown in cut; or to a bracket of band iron about three-sixteenths of an inch thick, or, if preferred, an automatic extension arm may be used.

Forced To Leave Home

Every year a large number of poor sufferers whose lungs are sore and racked with coughs are to go to another climate. But this is costly and not always sure. There's a better way. Let Dr. King's New discovery cure you at home. "It cured me of lung trouble," writes W. R. Nelson, of Calamine, Ark., "when all else failed and I gained 47 pounds in weight. Its surely the King of all cough and lung cures." Thousands owe their lives and health to it. Its positively guaranteed for Coughs, Colds, LaGrippe, Asthma, Croup—all Throat and Lung troubles. 50c and $1.00 Trial bottle free at Stone's drug store. 13-1m

Diarrhoea should be cured without loss of time and by a medicine which like Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy not only cures promptly but produces no unpleasant after effects. It never fails and is pleasant and safe to take. Sold by Geo. W. Geddes. 13-1m

You Get 60 Years Experience

JUST think this over. The style and quality attained in Clothcraft Clothes are the result of 60 years of clothes making. Clothcraft makers have solved the problem of making clothes of pure wool—in lasting styles, at fair prices. This is what Clothcraft Scientific Tailoring means to you.

We show you Clothcraft Clothes because we believe them to be the greatest values that can be offered you at the price. The phenomenal success we have met in their sale vindicates our judgment.

And, best of all, Clothcraft Clothes are guaranteed to you. Every thread is pure wool, and the style will stay until the garment's last day. If you have any complaint on a Clothcraft suit, we will instantly make it right, and the makers back us up.

Dr. Brown joined the Masonic order fifty-five years ago, and in his death this order loses one of its oldest and most faithful members. Dr. and Mrs. Brown were both converted and joined the M. E. church nearly forty years ago and have since lived consistent christian lives.

While in this double affliction it seems hard to see the hand of a loving Father, it is but the fulfillment of their own oft expressed wish, "Let us both go at the same time." And today while our hearts are bowed with grief let us console ourselves with the thought that though separated for a few days today they are again united in that land where partings shall come no more.

The Masonic order held services at the house at 4 p. m. on Sunday. Short services were held at the home by Rev. Parker assisted by Rev. Crouse before leaving.

Pithy Paragraphs From Our Public Schools

FRESHMEN NOTES

(Miss A. in second year English class)—"Edward!" No response. "Edward, are you in class?" Still no answer. A few moments later Eddie's arm slipped off his desk and he awoke with a start. Then he wondered why we laughed.

Most of us would rather swallow a "heaping" tablespoonful of quinine than one paragraph of "Washington's Farewell Address."

Hurrah for vacation! Now we can get in training for those finals.

The Botany class is now blue printing spring flowers.

Mr. Austin has developed a most curious habit of yelling out the assembly room window, for the purpose of asking people silly questions.

Some of the Sophies like spring, some like summer, some like fall and some like winter, but, as for me, give me liberty or give me death.

Oh, for a draught of the life giving fountain. The one that is labeled "Ambish." 'Twould aid us in climbing to Learnings high mountain. And 'tis all that we poor Freshies wish.

Audra Greenwald is now a member of Section B. of the Botany class.

Death of Aged DeKalb Co. Lady

WATERLOO, Ind., April 3.—This afternoon at 2 o'clock occurred the funeral of Mrs. Mary Bell, one of the country's oldest and most highly respected residents. She had reached the age of eighty-two years, most of which had been spent in DeKalb county's, and a great many of them in the city of Waterloo. The funeral was one of the largest held in Waterloo for many years and was conducted by the Rev. Neuhauser, of the United Betheren church with interment in the Waterloo cemetery.

Col. Strathmore, 2:12 1-4

That splendid representative of the Strathmore family, 2:12¼, will for the season of 1910, be in the stud at L. J. Diehl's barn at Butler, Ind., at a fee of $25 to insure living colt. Mr. Diehl had several strong offers to place Col. Strathmore in the stud at several different places, but he has received so many inquiries in regard to him that he has decided to keep him at Butler for the present.

There is no more popular family than the Strathmore family. Strathmore has to his credit fifty-four trotters and thirty-five pacers, while fifty-six of his sons have sired eighty-four trotters and 128 pacers, and 120 of his daughters have produced 113 trotters and eighty-nine pacers.

Col. Strathmore is exceedingly well bred on the dam's side, he being out of Crescent, 2:24¼ (the dam of Col Strathmore, 2:12¼. Crescendo, 2:15¼, Geo. Ketcham, (3) 2:17¼, and two with trials better than 2:21), by Ira Wilkes, 2:28 trotting, 2:22¾ pacing; second dam Rigolette, 2:22 (dam of three), by Exchequer 3551.

As a race horse Col. Strathmore could not be improved upon. He obtained his record over a poor half-mile track, and was ten times first, nine times second, four times third, once fourth and but twice behind the money. As a sire Col. Strathmore is proving very successful in transmitting speed and show qualities to his colts. There are twenty-two colts near Butler that can beat 2:50, and none of them have had any training. In fact, but three of his colts have been trained, and all of these have shown miles in 2:16 or better. A yearling has stepped a quarter in 34½ seconds.

Thomas Pynchon, Angola, Ind., has several Col. Strathmore colts in his stable. One, Billy Strathmore, worked last year as a three-year-old, in 2:16½ and a half in 1:07½, and is set down as a 2:10 performer this year. Another is The Dude, out of Arline (dam of Jersey Peat, 2:17¼), that showed quarters in 37 seconds as a two year-old. There are others that will take records this year.

The Butler Band

The famous Butler band will give their Saturday night concerts on the streets as usual the coming summer. The merchants are unanimous in securing their services and have expressed their willingness to contribute to their support.

C. T. Apt, who has been their leader for a number of seasons, has been chosen to lead them again this season. The bass horn that was used last year belonged to private parties who moved away from the city and took it with them, but Mr. Apt informs us that he has arranged for another one which has been sent away for repairs. Of course the expense will have to be met by popular subscription, as the very meager amount given the band would not justify them in buying new instruments. Also new music must be obtained before any concerts can be given. These expenses will be met, however, and the people may expect their usual weekly musical treat by one of the best bands in Northern Indiana. The announcement that the band is to be lead by Mr. Apt is sufficient proof that we are to have some fine music, and that the concerts will be a success in every way.

Dear Sir—Earl is so far improved as to have been transferred from the hospital ward, but he has shown himself very useful in helping on that ward, so he was allowed to come back during the day as a working detail. This gives him some exercise and employment. He has shown no mental trouble since his recovery from the measles. His heart is getting stronger, and it is difficult to hear the murmur at the present time. Should he continue to improve, it might be possible for you to have him at home for a time during the summer.

Respectfully yours,
FRED W. TREFLINGER,
Medical Superintendent.

KNOTTY PROBLEMS FOR CITY DADS

Editors Higley and Powers Ousted From Council Chambers Unceremoniously---Mondhank Must Treat

An adjourned meeting of the city council was held Monday evening and all members present with Mayor Mondhank in charge of the gavel. The paving contractors were present and accepted the contract as prepared by the city attorney, E. B. Dunten. There was nothing of importance in the contract except what may be found in the specifications. Work will begin on the pavement May first.

A petition to knock out the moving picture show phonographs was presented by T. Elmer Simon, signed by a number of citizens. It is quite likely that the phonographs will be put out of commission and the proprietors of our picture shows will install electric signs instead. The council will make a special rate on lights as follows: 50,000 wats 10c, over 50,000 to 100,000, 9c; above 100,000, 8c.

The question of removing telephone poles and electric light poles from the principal streets was discussed, but no action taken. It seems quite probable that the poles will remain, as it would be a diffult matter, if not an impossibility to remove them The council will however ask the telephone people to put up straight poles, well painted and set them inside of the curbing.

At a certain point in the proceedings His Honor brought down the gavel with the force of a young man operating a striking machine at a county fair and ordered the marshal to clear the council room, close the doors and allow no one to enter. This breech of etiquette on the part of the mayor astoned the two newspaper reporters who were standing there ready to sanction anything that might be don by the honorable body. Personally we feel insulted over the matter, and the only way for Mayor Mondhank to square himself is to pass the Stoggies at the next meeting of the council.

PAYROLL OF BUTLER INDUSTRIES

The Great Factors in the Steady Development of Our City

The development of any city depends upon her industries. Butler's steady growth and substantial improvements have been due largely to the success of her factories and railroads. These improvements have been meant well and made in good faith, and are found to result in much good to the city. Although the city and property holders together will have paid out over a hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the sewer and paving, there is still more building, repairing and beautifying being done this spring than at any other time since the removal of the Wabash shops, which is indicative to the writer that confidence has been restored and that the people intend to keep step with the times.

But the average person does not realize the great part that our industries play in the improvement, and have no idea of the amount of money paid out in Butler in one month. We have gone the rounds and secured the monthly payroll of each of the factories and the Lake Shore railroad company.

For one month's labor the Butler Company pay out $4,200.00, which does not include incidentals like postage printing, etc.

The Butler Basket Company pays out each month for help $1,100.

The Cement Mixer Company, which has just been organized, has a payroll of $175.00.

The Trebert Gas Engine Co. is another new industry which promises to develope into one of the best manufacturing industries of the city. Beginning on next Monday their force will be doubled. At present their payroll is $400.00 per month, but from now on will be increased each month until the capacity of their present plant is reached. The payroll during the summer will be at least $800.00 per month.

Fred Briggs, besides keeping busy himself manufacturing cement blocks, has a man who he pays $40 per month.

The payroll of the Lake Shore railroad company at this point runs from $7000 to $10,000 per month.

The Butler Elgin Creamery and ice cream plant pays out each month for labor $1,000 making a total of $24,515. per month.

"Get two ounces of Glycerine and half an ounce of Concentrated Pine compound. Then get half a pint of good whiskey and put the other two ingredients into it. Take a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful of this mixture after each meal and at bed time. Shake the bottle well each time." This is said to be the quickest cold and cough remedy known. It frequently cures the worst colds in twenty-four hours. But be sure to get only the genuine Concentrated Pine. Each half ounce bottle comes put up in a tin screw-top case. Don't use the weaker pine preparations. Any druggist has it on hand or will quickly get it from his wholesale house.

SAVED BY MEDICAL SCIENCE.

Human Life Is Better Protected Now than Ever Before.

The health records of London show a death rate for 1909 of only 13.9 per thousand. That of New York when corrected by the census this year will figure out close to 16.

From 1851 to 1860 the London death rate was 23.7. That of New York cannot be so accurately stated, but it was much higher. The fall in the death rate in London in fifty years, due to better sanitation and more accurate knowledge of disease, means the saving in a single year of almost 9,000 lives. The saving in New York has been in like proportion. New York has extremes of climate to contend with which London never knows. Blizzard times hasten the departure of the old and the feeble; very hot weather in summer slays children under five by the hundreds.

In spite of later marriages and a falling birth rate, the natural increase of population in both cities is considerably greater than it was fifty years ago. In 1860 each 100,000 people in London increased in one year to 100,990; now each 100,000 increase to 101,140. With the present estimated population of both cities the natural increase in London in one year is nearly 80,000 and of New York about 55,000, with immigration greatly aiding the newer city in the race.

What a debt humanity owes to medical science, not only for prolonging average life, but for diminishing sorrow and suffering year by year!—New York World.

WHAT'S THE USE

Sticking to a Habit When It Means Discomfort?

Old King Coffee knocks subjects out tolerably flat at times, and there is no possible doubt of what did it. A Mich. woman gives her experience:

"I used to have liver trouble nearly all of the time and took medicine which relieved me only for a little while. Then every once in a while I would be suddenly doubled up with an awful agony in my stomach. It seemed as though every time I took a breath I would die. No one could suffer any more and live.

"Finally I got down so sick with catarrh of the stomach that I could not turn over in bed, and my stomach did not digest even milk. The doctor finally told me that if I did not give up drinking coffee I would surely die, but I felt I could not give it up.

"However, Husband brought home a package of Postum and it was made strictly according to directions. It was the only thing that would stay on my stomach, and I soon got so I liked it very much.

"Gradually I began to get better, and week by week gained in strength and health. Now I am in perfect condition and I am convinced that the whole cause of my trouble was coffee drinking, and my getting better was due to leaving off coffee and taking Postum.

"A short time ago I tasted some coffee and found, to my astonishment, that I did not care anything about it. I never have to take medicine any more. I hope you will use this letter for the benefit of those suffering from the poisonous effects of coffee."

GREATEST COUNTERFEIT IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY

TRYING TO DISCOVER THE SOURCE OF THE GREAT COUNTERFEIT BY THE FLAG SYSTEM.

ON JANUARY 1 1910, the Bank of France surprised the financial world by hastily issuing a new type of $20 bill, marvelous in its melting of soft variegated tones from the four colors, blue, yellow, rose and green. It was at once called the "rainbow," being a great work of art, of novelty and of modern process printing. A French collector paid Luc-Olivier Merson $3,000 for his original large-size water color "maquette" of the labor and fortune side of it; and Mr. Pierpont Morgan, with $5,000 and a cablegram, secured from Romagnol, the engraver, his first proof "before the letter"; yet its money value is nil, it having neither the signatures nor numbers of its millions of successors now flying through France.

At the same time, in the Golden Gallery of the bank's old palace, gorgeous with historic tapestries and old masters; the greatest detective organizers of Europe continued to pass hours over a vast map. They still continue. Telegrams rain on them. When one has a list of numbers it is compared with long, ever-changing lists by specialists at desks and tables in a far end of the old gilt banquet hall. A technician is ready with his enlarging camera and darkroom closet; but they seldom use him. Unfortunately, the work has become too simple.

Twenty times a day quiet men slip in for conferences, dressed like tourists from Geneva, London or Madrid, or seeming business men, or clerks, or racing touts, or gilded youth, or crooks, or honest artisans. They are all detective operators. When they whisper numbers, when the specialists compare—"194—G. 1237—30906194," or "072—M. 232—05786072"—the organizers stick more little red flags in the vast map.

How Counterfeit Was Discovered.

Here is the greatest counterfeiting story of modern times, told by a Paris correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. France enjoys clean paper money. They have $10, $20, $100 and $200 bills, the rest being gold and silver; and for every soiled bill that returns to the bank a brand-new one is issued. Before destroying the old ones with caustic soda their identifying numbers are written off the registers. Each bill has its individual number, its alphabet's letter, its alphabet's number and its comparison number.

No two bills are numbered alike. Yet, a short time ago, the Bank of France began to find bills numbered alike. They had been accepted by its branches at Marseilles, Toulon, Nice and Avignon, over the counter, from runners and from other banks. They had passed perfectly through the various departments of the Bank of France. Only when they were being written off the registers previous to destruction was the ominous facts discovered—there were quantities of duplicates. They were counterfeits. But which were counterfeits?

The bill counterfeited was the 100 franc, one of the type of 1889, supposed to be counterfeit proof by reason of the rose-colored backgrounds which Dupuis and Duval had added to Baudry's marvelous blue vignettes.

The paper, though it does not possess the American thread, was also considered inimitable. It was made by the bank at its own works at Biercy, which produces no other kind of paper. True, the Bank of France obligingly sells Biercy bank note paper to French colonial and even foreign banks, but the sheets are always numbered, and it is taken as certain that all can be accounted for.

New counterfeits continuing to rain on the bank, another formidable detail was noticed. The counterfeits did not bear a single set of numbers, such as lone counterfeiters are often content to put on their unique galvanos. The first duplicates disclosed any quantity of duplicates. But, as the duplicates continued showering on them without a single triplicate, the experts were forced to one of two outrageous conclusions:

Either the counterfeiters possessed the bulky, complicated, exact and expensive numbering machines of the bank itself, or they were in presence of an utterly new type of direct color-photography that merely reproduced each note a single time! To make sure of such an explanation would be equivalent to reinventing the unknown process. Photographic enlargements showed unmistakable photographic exactness of all details, but, on the other hand, traces of printing pressure were said to be found on the paper.

At first they pursued the usual policy of secrecy to catch the counterfeiters. Thus, until hands were laid on them and their plates, the world heard nothing of the aristocratic crooks who successfully emitted $1,000,000 worth of £5 Bank of England notes from Moscow last November.

The Bank of England, the German Reichsbank, the Bank of Italy, the Bank of Austria-Hungary and the Bank of Spain sent to Paris an unequaled lot of sleuths and experts, acquainted with the faces, whereabouts and style of work of most of the counterfeiters and honest engravers and photograph-process specialists of Europe.

In the golden gallery of the bank's palace the detective organizers have their seat.

Map System of Tracing.

At once they set up the map system, used with success by the Bank of England. A vast map of Europe, tacked to a vast table, fills one end of the gallery. In whatever town counterfeit 100 franc bills appear they plant a small red flag. It is the system that discovered the Moscow crooks last November. Little by little, without a working theory, merely by planting individual flags where counterfeits appear, the flags come to form converging lines toward one spot—that of issue. Also, in every town where counterfeits appeared, sleuths trailed mysteriously. They trailed all right; but as soon as they trailed the counterfeits ceased to appear. On the great map similar phenomena was noticed. Not twice or thrice, but ten times the flag lines converged to a well indicated center. Here the counterfeiters had been distributing to many agents. But they were here no more. They had skipped, to start up elsewhere.

And the Bank of France continued paying gold for green goods. They would have become panic-stricken and notified the public to cease accepting 100 franc bills but for the promise of Luc-Olivier Merson's new bill, well-called "the rainbow." On Jan. 1, 1910, it was ready for distribution in every one of the 128 branches and sixty-nine auxiliary bureaus of the Bank of France. And on Jan. 3, 1910, the checkmating of the greatest counterfeiters of modern times began.

Meanwhile the mysteriously capable counterfeiters of France have already made many millions, one one knows how much. Will the gang that proved itself so astute have courage to quit business next week, when the 100 franc bills they are imitating begin to be really scarce. The great detective organizers hope not. They still sit over the great map in the golden gallery. And their emissaries are everywhere.

EXTENT OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

American women possess suffrage upon equal terms with men in four states—the White states on the map; in twenty-five additional states, marked with Stars, school suffrage for women prevails; in Seventeen states and the territory of New Mexico, Shaded upon the map, women have no vote at all.

Testing the Run of Golf Balls.

There is a capital way, which we have discovered only lately, of testing the running of a golf ball off the putter. It can only be adopted on a day when the green or lawn is coated over with drops of moisture on the grass blades, either from white frost, dew or the deposit of a sea fog or Scotch mist.

The difference in the way of running of balls of different make, and of some balls of the same make, is very marked and curious. We can assure all the sundry that it is a test worth trying, because the knowledge of the ball that will run true on the putting green is knowledge that will serve us well.—Country Life.

A Different Individual.

"Ah," said the pedestrian leaning over the fence where the old farmer was feeding his turkeys, "raising some birds to satisfy the cravings of the inner man, I see."

"No," replied the farmer, thinking of the 11 cents a pound the turkeys would bring as against the 30 cents a pound the consumer would have to pay for them, "I am raisin' these birds to satisfy the demands of the middleman, by gosh!"—Houston Post.

Her Suffering.

"And don't you take anything for it?" her friend asked. "You look healthy enough."

"Oh," she replied, "it's my husband that has it."

LAW FOR COLD STORAGE

Demand for Regulation of the System in Interest of Honesty and Health.

THE LIMIT FOR PRODUCTS.

Two Desirable Results May Be Attained in Making Period Not More than One Year.

If we are to be thorough in dealing with the food problem we must take up the matter of cold storage, which is not merely an indispensable part of the packing combination, but may be a most formidable weapon of extortion. The consumer has lost some of his appetite for food, thanks to the quality and cost of the food he has been getting. The hideous insipidity of fowls and fish which departed this life in 1908 or earlier is enough to reduce him to plain living and high thinking. He ought to think to some purpose right now.

There is no question that cold storage has become a necessity for supplying our big cities, the Wall Street Journal says. With the conditions which obtained well within the memory of many of us it would be impossible to feed cities like New York or Chicago. We should be alternating between periods of wasteful plenty in such commodities as eggs and poultry and times when they would be unobtainable at any price. But this is no reason for saying that where we can regulate the interstate distributors of produce, the railroads, we cannot take the same means to prevent the instrument of cold storage from being abused.

We have arrived at a stage where, for all but a fortunate few, really fresh eggs do not come on to the market at all. They are bought at their cheapest and when they are most plentiful. They are stored, and even at such times the market is supplied with eggs which may be anything from a year to three years old. The bakers who manufacture the cheapest kind of pastry are supplied with the garbage which is actually five years old—eggs which could not even be used for political purposes outside a South American revolution.

The question of whether beef will keep for longer than one year, or whether one commodity will keep longer than another, is beside the point. All that is required is to provide such cold storage as will distribute the year's product evenly throughout the year. There would be two results from such legislation. One would be an immediate improvement in the quality of food, and the other would be a reduction in its price.

MOTHER AND CHILD GO OVER CLIFF IN BURNING WAGON.

Mrs. S. R. Breck, a widow, and her baby were plunged 100 feet down to the bottom of the Blanco Canyon and then burned to a crisp amid the debris of a wagon that contained all her household goods near the little plains town of Floydada, Tex. Mrs. Breck was moving across conutry in a heavy wagon. The horses became frightened and backed over the precipice. As the wagon turned over and over in its descent a stove in the outfit set fire to the goods and a can of gasoline exploded. The struggling woman with her baby and the horses, unable to extricate themselves from the wreckage, now a mass of flames, landed in a heap at the bottom. The charred remains of the mother and baby clasped to her breast were found later by a ranchman who had witnessed the tragedy from the other side of the canyon, but who had to make a detour of many miles to reach the scene.

"I want to get five ice-cream sodas and find out how much cold I can stand."

THE COUNT AND COUNTESS DE BEAUFORT.

The pictures shown above are those of the Count and Countess de Beaufort, who are known more or less to the sporting and sportsman world of Europe and America. The Count is a Frenchman and the Countess was formerly Miss Kilgallen, daughter of a Chicago millionaire. They are familiar figures at Monte Carlo, in London and in the capitals of Europe. Recently they became involved in a dispute at Hot Springs, Ark., because they would not pay $500 which the owner of a gaming house alleged they had lost at roulette. They claim to have believed they were playing with 10-cent chips, but the game keeper said they were $1 chips. When the game was over they offered $50 in settlement, but $500 was claimed. Hence the dispute.

Hot Springs for many years has been the resort of those who delight to woo the goddess of chance, but some time ago gaming was abolished. Then the town found its income was not equal to its expenses and an agreement was reached whereby the gamblers were permitted to conduct their business in return for being arrested and fined certain amounts at stated intervals, the fines to go toward the support of the municipality.

Beautiful Wall Coatings for Homes.

In line with the progress of all other things in these modern days is the beautiful, perfect and sanitary wall coatings for our homes. Alabastine is the name of a rich, soft and velvety preparation for the decoration of walls and ceilings. It adheres to the walls of its own adhesive qualities. It is inexpensive, clean, artistic and so easily put on that any one can follow the printed directions on every package. Any shade or tint is easily produced. Alabastine is proof against insects or disease germs so prevalent in wall paper. It does not rub off and flake like kalsomine. A complete color plan for the walls of the home and stencils to help make the home beautiful, together with a book about home decorations and samples of color effects will all be sent free by the Alabastine Company, 482 Grandville avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich. The liberal offers of this company to home decorators in our advertising columns elsewhere in this paper deserve careful perusal.

Good Luck of an Old G. A. R. Veteran.

G. W. Rumble, 1144 Eddy St., San Francisco, an old G. A. R. veteran, is now enjoying life at his California home, having made enough locating gold mines with a device of his own, which works on a new principle in harmony with nature's vibratory laws. He offers to tell others about it as he thinks the knowledge should not be buried.

Making Progress.

A Modern Version.

Simple Simon met a pieman,
Going to the fair.
Said Simple Simon to the pieman,
"Let me taste your ware."
Said the pieman to Simple Simon:
"Young man, my ancestors were the hardy spirits who first blazed a trail through the pathless forest and founded the pioneer settlement in the region which is now Missouri. I myself hail from that glorious commonwealth, and before I can be induced to part with one of the succulent gobs of pastry which I am vending, I must be shown your penny."
Said Simple Simon to the pieman,
"Indeed, I haven't any."

Tiny Baby's Pitiful Case.

"Our baby when two months old was suffering with terrible eczema from head to foot, all over her body. The baby looked just like a skinned rabbit. We were unable to put clothes on her. At first it seemed to be a few mattered pimples. They would break the skin and peel off, leaving the underneath skin red as though it were scalds. Then a few more pimples would appear and spread all over the body, leaving the baby all raw without skin from head to foot. On top of her head there appeared a heavy scab a quarter of an inch thick. It was awful to see so small a baby look as she did. Imagine! The doctor was afraid to put his hands to the child. We tried several doctors' remedies but all failed.

"Then we decided to try Cuticura. By using the Cuticura Ointment we softened the scab and it came off. Under this, where the real matter was, by washing with the Cuticura Soap and applying the Cuticura Ointment, a new skin soon appeared. We also gave baby four drops of the Cuticura Resolvent three times daily. After three days you could see the baby gaining a little skin which would peel off and heal underneath. Now the baby is four months old. She is a fine picture of a fat little baby and all is well. We only used one cake of Cuticura Soap, two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and one bottle of Cuticura Resolvent. If people would know what Cuticura is there would be few suffering with eczema. Mrs. Joseph Kossmann, 7 St. John's Place, Ridgewood Heights, L. I., N. Y., Apr. 30 and May 4, 1909."

Spread of the Movement.

Mrs. Kawler—The last time I saw you, I think, you were attending a cooking school to learn how to make vegetable dishes taste like meat.

Mrs. Crossway—Yes, but the feeling against the trust is so strong now that we are learning to make vegetable dishes taste utterly unlike meat.

The President's Speech.

The president of the Hewitt Bros. Soap Company, Dayton, Ohio, says: "Buy two cakes of Easy Task Soap for ten cents; use one bar and if it isn't just what we say it is, you get your dime back in a jiffy." It is a strong claim to say that Easy Task soap cuts the work of washday in half, but the fact can be proven by the evidence of thousands of delighted women.

The Youngest Admiral.

Captain David Beatty will shortly have the distinction of being the youngest rear-admiral in the British navy. His forthcoming promotion at the early age of thirty-eight has been the subject of a special Order in Council.

To qualify for promotion under the regulations a captain must have served during peace time for a total period of six years. The Admiralty petition sets forth that, owing to the abnormal shortening of the time on the captains' list, it is anticipated that Captain Beatty will reach his turn for promotion before he completes the full period of six years.

It is also pointed out that he was severely wounded in action in China, and was consequently prevented from receiving an appointment for a considerable period.

In these circumstances the Order directs that Captain Beatty shall be promoted to flag rank in his turn, notwithstanding the regulations.

Captain Beatty is an Irishman. His wife is a daughter of an American millionaire, the late Marshall Field, founder of the great dry goods store in Chicago.

Nelson was promoted to the rank of rear-admiral in his thirty-ninth year.

Trolley Mail Box.

Many patrons of rural delivery routes live a considerable distance from the highway, and a device which would carry the mail between the house and the road would be a great convenience. A Kansas subscriber whose house ish 90 rods from the rural route and who has a straight line of telephone poles to the road, asks if an endless wire cable could be arranged in some way to carry a small box.

A No. 10 wire can be attached to brackets fastened to the poles at such a height as not to interfere with teams, etc. A small box and carrier can be run over this between the house and the road. The box can be sent down and brought back from the house by the use of a cord or light twisted wire cable. Attach it to the box and pass it through a pulley on a post at the road and around a drum or through another pulley at the house. The trolley wire should be soldered to the brackets so the carrier may run over it without trouble. With a little Yankee ingenuity anyone can rig up a device of this kind.—Farm and Home.

Fowls Require Salt.

Fowls require salt in their ration in order to thrive best, the same as do all other animals. The mineral elements in the salt are desired by the fowls, and their systems crave them. But only a little salt is needed—not more than a handful a week to the average-sized farm flock. Too much may be more harmful than too little. And since fowls often do not know when they have had enough of it, we dare not place the salt before them, and let them eat all they want, as can be done with most other farm animals. So the best way is to mix a handful occasionally with the soft food or mash. This seasons the food and gives it a palatable taste, as well as proving a benefit to the fowls.—Agricultural Epitomist.

Superior to the Mule.

The greatest hybrid that the world has ever known is the mule. This is a cross between the horse and the ass. The resultant mule was, however, barren, and the possibility of developing a more perfect type through selection did not exist. The mule had to be taken as he was and made the most of. At that he has borne the brunt of cornfield labor at home and tugged the nation's cannon into the ever-advancing frontier. He has surpassed both the horse and the ass that bred him in many ways. The zebra is evidently a creature superior in every way to the mule, and it is believed, with selecton and scientific breeding, it will take a place in the world that will tend to retire the latter, and, possibly, the horse, from the field of action.

Value of Humus in Soil.

The value of humus in the soil is not only that it supplies an element of plant food, but that it absorbs moisture and is an obstacle to evaporation, says the Rural Californian. It also prevents soil erosion and waste. The most successful farmer is the one who takes the most pains to utilize every element of his farm products that contributes humus to the soil. This is especially important in localities where the surface is uneven or broken, and the earth is not firm, or, in other words, is easily eroded by rainfall.

Ensilage and Alfalfa Feed.

The scientific ration for a cow giving twenty pounds of milk with 4 per cent of butter fat—a good average dairy cow—is forty-five pounds of ensilage and ten pounds of alfalfa hay a day. Ensilage costs about $2 a ton and alfalfa about $10 a ton. Thus the cow feed cost of 9½ cents a day, which is more than a third cheaper than could be sustained on an ordinary corn ration.

Doctoring Soils.

Just as, when his horse is ailing, the owner calls in a veterinarian, so in these days do the farmers of the country consult a "soil doctor" when their lands prove less fruitful than they deem they should. Much of this work is the result of experiments conducted by the federal Department of Agriculture, and the work thus far accomplished has been most satisfactory.

High Location for Orchard.

Apples do not do well on poorly drained soil where the water is liable to stand on the surface or about the roots of the trees. For this reason the higher parts of the farm are usually better for orchards. On hilly land it is not necessary that the trees be on the very tops of the hills.

Wheat for Laying Hens.

Many farmers grow and sell wheat, but they do not feed any of it to their chickens. Wheat is one of the best egg-producing feeds, and it will pay to feed it to the hens at all seasons, even when it is above a dollar a bushel. Wheat is similar in composition to milk and eggs; it contains nearly all the elements in right proportion for perfect animal growth and maintenance. A little of it will go a long way in feeding.

The Farmer's Automobile.

While automobiles are expensive vehicles, in a sense, they are daily becoming less so. Improvements in methods, materials and knowledge have made a cheaper car possible and the fact that the purchasers of fancy cars are already supplied has caused manufacturers to devote their energies to turning out a car that is medium priced and of high quality. A new field for the marketing of the product of their factories was necessary and this field was found among the farmers. High-priced, fancy cars would not go with them, but quality would, and those manufacturers who were shrewd enough to make a car of high quality at a reasonable price have found ready customers among the farmers.

It is estimated that there are now in use about 100,000 automobiles among the farmers of this country and something like 5,000 of these are in Kansas. They are great favorites among the dairy farmers as time savers in the delivery of milk, but they are no less so among other farmers, who find in them a means of rapid transit without disturbing the farm teams. The new farm automobile is here to stay.—Kansas Farmer.

Points in Pruning.

Do not choose the dormant season to cut back trees that are growing too fast to be fruitful; it will only make them grow the faster in the spring. Wait till they are in full flush of growth in May or June if you want to drive their surplus energies into fruit buds. Be sure to carry a paint pot along with the pruners, and whenever a limb as much as an inch in diameter is cut off, cover the wound with oil and white lead to keep out dampness and the entrance of fungi spores that will produce rot. In the spring this cover is not so necessary, for as soon as growth begins the tree will begin to cover its wounds with new wood that will creep over it from all sides.—Rural World.

Certified Milk Pays Best.

Certified milk sells in all large cities for about twice the price of other milk. It is absolutely clean, no impurities being allowed to get into the milk. A layer of fine cheesecloth is stretched over the milk pail, a layer of absorbent cotton is placed upon that, then another piece of cheesecloth. There is no sediment in the bottom of the milk vessels of milk treated in this way. It's not expensive, either.

A Merciless Parasite.

The ficus macrophylia, commonly called the Moreton Bay fig, is a merciless Australian parasitical growth, says a writer in the Wide World magazine. It takes root in the forks of its host tree (which in this case is a Queensland bloodwood) and ultimately smothers the latter and usurps its place as an independent tree. Many valuable trees in the scrubs of Queensland are destroyed in this manner.

Meat Barrel Cover.

This sketch shows a meat barrel cover that can't be beat. Get a barrel that has top and bottom and saw it through in the middle, making two tubs. Use these tubs for covers on meat barrels by turning them over the barrels as shown in the sketch and they will assuredly keep out the dust and moisture.

Testing Eggs in Incubator.

During incubation, eggs should be tested on the seventh and fourteenth days. At the first test the air cell should measure about a quarter of an inch; on the tenth day, one-half inch; on the fifteenth day, five-eighths of an inch; nineteenth day, three-quarters of an inch. The measurement should be taken from the middle of the large end.

Mixture for Pasture.

Minnesota farmers have found six pounds of timothy, five pounds of white clover, three pounds of Kentucky blue grass, and one pound of red top seed per acre, to be an excellent mixture for pastures. If the ground is inclined to be wet, the red top will take the place of the timothy.

Air Shaft Costs Little.

An air shaft can be built in the dairy barn at very little cost, that will ventilate the stable perfectly and do away with the dampness and heavy air so noticeable on winter mornings. One man installed two ventilators which ran from near the floor to well above the roof for $30.

Lime for Poultry.

By experiment it has been computed that 100 grains of lime are needed to make one strong egg shell. Two hundred pounds of wheat are required to furnish sufficient lime for a dozen egg shells. It is easy to see why oyster shells and other similar ingredients should form a part of the ration.

Farm Schools.

At the twenty-fourth session of the fourth course in agriculture at the Wisconsin College 461 farmers and their boys were in attendance. Nearly every county in the State was represented.

Producing Profit Maker.

The breeding of a bull whose dam and grandam were great producers to a cow known to be a producer and with a like ancestry is pretty sure to produce a profit maker.

Ham Sandwiches.

The secret of the delicious ham sandwiches served at an afternoon tea last week was in the cooking of the ham and the abundance of mayonnaise used in mixing the meat. The ham had been broiled until it was brown and then ground very fine and mixed plentifully with mayonnaise. The meat may be cooked in the oven, a thin slice being allowed to bake until it is well browned, or the meat may be fried. There is a more definite flavor about ham cooked in any of these ways than there is if it is boiled.

For Tender Steak.

A round steak may be made tender by soaking it over night in buttermilk. If there is no time to do this pound the steak thoroughly and as it fries add a little water and cover it well to create steam. This makes the toughest meat tender. Although it is better to broil steak than to fry it, if the latter process is used butter gives a better flavor than lard. A round steak is nice stuffed with bread dressing and baked. It must be cooked slowly and basted often with the liquor.

Rice a la Creole.

Chop one large onion and a small slice of cooked ham fine; put in a saucepan with one tablespoonful of butter; add one cup of cooked rice, also one small can of tomatoes or a dozen fresh ones, one teaspoonful of salt and a little paprika. Mix well together and heat thoroughly. Then put in baking dish, cover with bread crumbs and put in the oven for fifteen minutes. The tomatoes should be stewed until thick before serving.

Soft Ginger Cakes.

One cup of lard and butter, one cup of molasses (Orleans), one cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of soda, one cup of boiling water, salt, two eggs, five scant cups of flour, two tablespoonfuls of cinnamon and two of ginger. This batter can be kept for a fortnight and baked in gem pans at the shortest notice, even after the company are on the porch. Have used it for over thirty years.

Raisin Pie.

Cover one-half cup of seeded raisins with a cup of water and let them stand for two hours. Beat an egg until light, add a cup of sugar, the juice and grated rind of a lemon, and stir in a tablespoonful of flour. Add the raisins and the water in which they have soaked and cook in a saucepan until the mixture thickens. Bake with an upper and lower crust.

White Cookies.

One heaping cup of sugar, one heaping cup of butter creamed with sugar, one egg well beaten, half a cup of sour milk, a small half teaspoonful of saleratus, flour to make a dough that can be rolled. Roll thin and cut into cookies.

Dropped Dumplings.

Beat an egg light, add a cup of sweet milk, a pinch of salt and enough flour sifted with a teaspoonful of baking powder to make a good batter. Drop with a spoon into boiling gravy. Cook until done and serve immediately.

Muffins.

Four eggs, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one cup of milk, one heaping cup of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Mix and bake in deep muffin tins.

Hints About the House.

It makes fish soft to cover the pan in which it is being cooked.

In dry cake flavors try mixing almond and rose together as a flavor for angel food cake. It is delicious.

When hot dishes have made marks on your polished dining table rub with spirits of camphor. It will remove them.

Window glass, lamps and lamp glasses, marble and stone vases or mantels, granite sills, etc., if rubbed with salt are quickly cleansed.

A new flavor can be given to cooked prunes by adding a few slices of lemon. Another method is to cook them with a bag of spices.

Soap well applied to drawer slides will keep the drawers in furniture and closets from sticking. It is also effective for doors that stick.

For a fancy salad cut red peppers into shreds and sprinkle over the chopped lettuce and garnish with sliced olives, curled parsley and celery tips.

Always keep the inside of your coffee pot bright to insure good coffee. Boil it out occasionally with soap, water and wood ashes and scour thoroughly.

Neufchatel cheese or the old-fashioned home-made schmiercase, may be colored a delicate green with pistachio. It is used in making salads and is very pretty when formed into nests, filled with vegetable salad.

Tea balls, stitched into small net bags, are appreciated by the invalid, who can drop one into a cup of boiling water and have a cup of fresh tea at any time. After use the bag can be thrown into the scrap box.

The juice of half a lemon with a little of the grated peel is a great addition to the apple pie. Not every woman puts butter into the apple pie before the top crust goes on, but every one would find it an improvement.

When cooking milk or soups of any kind always use a wooden spoon for stirring. Never take a tin spoon for this purpose, especially if the soup contains any acid like tomatoes, as this united with the tin and forms a poisonous compound.

When cooking spareribs first boil them, remove the scum and when partially done place in a baking pan and add salt and pepper. Bake slowly and do not brown them too much. Always serve pork with baked apples, apple sauce or [illegible] vegetable salad.

ONE JOY IN A MEXICAN JAIL.

Food and Bedding Scanty, but There's Money for Cigarettes.

"Beating one's way through Mexico," said the man who had been there, according to the Detroit Free Press, "is a snap compared with the same unconventional method of traveling in the United States. The engineers and brakemen on the freight trains are nearly all Americans, and they rather welcome a fellow from home.

"There's one drawback, though. The authorities are tickled to death to catch an American breaking the law in that way. It means a jail sentence every time, with hard labor, and it is hard labor and no mistake about it.

"At a watering tank near Hermosillo, in the State of Sonora, I braced the engineer of a freight train for a ride. He was a gruff sort of chap and seemed to have a bad grouch on that day.

"'I don't give a curse what you do,' he said, 'but I won't have you in my cab, and all the cars are sealed. Ride on the cowcatcher, if you like.'

"I was foolish enough to follow his suggestion, and had a great time for an hour or so. But I wasn't familiar with the country, and we were sneaking into Hermosillo before I realized that it was time to remove myself. A policeman caught sight of me and waved his arms frantically. As soon as the train slowed down a bit I made a jump for it, but the Mexican cop was right there. Before I know where I was I found myself sentenced to twenty days or a $20 fine.

"They shoved me into a cell already occupied by six Mexicans. They seemed to be half starved, but I was surprised to notice that they were all smoking cigarettes.

"For supper they served us red beans—frijoles is the native name—boiled in plain water. No meat or bread and only a limited supply of salt. A ragged quilt was given me as my only covering, and I was supposed to sleep on the floor among my Mexican companions.

"The next morning I understood the cigarette game. As they marched us to work the commandante handed each man a 10-cent piece. 'For cigarettes,' he said, with an amiable wave of his hand. Later on I discovered that the custom is universal.

"I saved up my cigarette money for a few days and paid a boy to take a message to a gringo friend who lived in Hermosillo. He paid the balance of my fine and took me home to a good dinner."

SHORT METER SERMONS.

The church institutions are seeking to become the door of the church because it is only through the church that men gain the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.—Rev. W. H. Day, Congregationalist, Los Angeles.

There is a large place in the world for the man who goes about doing good. The man who knows the good and does it not commits a sin against society and imperils his own life.—Rev. W. H. Pound, Congregationalist, Chicago.

We live in a day when men pay the highest respect to great and good men. The spirit of our age is such that a man dares to rise above the petty prejudices that once bound him to real independent manhood.—Rev. W. A. ones, Presbyterian, Pittsburg.

Every man must first submit in order to reign and no human life can be lived in its highest, fullest and best sense until it has discovered a superior throne to which it yields absolute and implicit obedience.—Rev. G. C. Morgan, Evangelist, Hartford.

How Wars Can Be Stopped.

Lord Charles Beresford, head of the English navy, says his idea of putting an end to wars can be carried out when this happens:

When the English-speaking nations consolidate there will be an end to the great devastating wars, and what a simple matter it would be for all of us to unite, and what great benefit to humanity, and what great happiness it would mean to millions of people!

One Redeeming Feature.

"Seems to me you utilize a good many old witticisms."

"That may be," admitted the press humorist, "but I try to confine my automobile jokes to 1910 models."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Kansas Takes 1,000 Overland Cars

Our agents in Kansas have ordered for this season 1,000 Overland automobiles.

Nebraska takes 750—Iowa 1,000—Texas 1,500. Thus has the Overland—after one year's experience—captured the farming states.

It has captured the cities, too. New York City takes 1,000 Overlands this year. Boston takes 500—San Francisco 500—Washington 500—Philadelphia 450.

Our agents have contracted for 20,000 Overlands—for $24,000,000 worth of Overlands—to supply the demand for this year. That's a larger sale than any other car commands.

Yet, two years ago few had ever heard of an Overland. This sensational success is due to the creation of a remarkable car.

The Simple Car

The success of the Overland is mainly due to its amazing simplicity. A 10-year-old child can master the car in five minutes. Push a pedal forward to go ahead, and backward to reverse. Push another pedal for high speed. There is nothing else to do but steer.

Any man with the simplest instructions, can run an Overland a thousand miles and back.

There was never a car so easy to care for—so easy to keep in order.

20 Per Cent Reduction

The Overland's success is also due to its price. No other maker ever gave nearly so much for the money.

Yet we have cut our costs this year about 20 per cent through enormous increase in production.

The Overland we sell for $1,000 this year is better than the $1,250 Overland last year. It is a 25 H. P. car with a speed of 50 miles an hour.

So with the $1,250, $1,400 and $1,500 Overlands. Each offers a fifth more than ever before for the money.

All prices include Magneto and full lamp equipment.

Ask for the Story

The Overland story is one of the greatest business stories ever told. It tells how this car—the creation of a mechanical genius—has in two years reached the topmost place in this field. And it tells all about the car. Send us this coupon today for this book.

Decorate Your Walls at Small Cost

These Free

We will send you free of cost, a complete color plan for the walls of your home. We will furnish free stencils to help you make your home beautiful.

Alabastine
The Sanitary Wall Coating

comes in all sorts of rich, soft shades of color that enable you to decorate your walls in the same style as the handsome city houses.

Alabastine is a powder made from pure native alabaster, you mix it with clear cold water and apply it with a flat wall brush. Simple directions printed on every package. Anyone can do it. Then when you want to redecorate, just put the new coat over the old. That saves a lot of work, trouble and money.

People do not like kalsomine, as all kalsomine is mixed with glue to make it stick. The glue rots and the kalsomine comes off—on your clothes and on the floor. Alabastine adheres to the wall of its own cementing qualities. It requires no dirty glue, nor paste, as with kalsomine or wall paper. These always attract insects and disease germs.

WESTERN CANADA

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your markets will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel (840 miles north of the International boundary). Your vacant land will be taken at a rate beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land." Nearly

70,000 Americans

will enter and make their homes in Western Canada this year. 1909 produced another large crop of wheat, oats and barley, in addition to which the cattle exports was an immense item. Cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as lands held by railway and land companies will provide homes for millions.

Hair Health

If You Have Scalp or Hair Troubles Take Advantage of This Offer

We could not afford to so strongly endorse Rexall "93" Hair Tonic and continue to sell it as we do, if we were not certain that it would do all we claim it will. Should our enthusiasm carry us away, and Rexall "93" Hair Tonic not give entire satisfaction to the users, they would lose faith in us and our statements, and in consequence our business prestige would suffer.

Therefore, when we assure you that if your hair is beginning to unnaturally fall out or if you have scalp trouble, Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will promptly eradicate dandruff, stimulate hair growth and prevent premature baldness, you may rest assured that we know what we are talking about.

Out of one hundred test cases Rexall "93" Hair Tonic gave entire satisfaction in ninety-three cases. It has been proved that it will grow hair even on bald heads, when, of course, the baldness had not existed for so long a time that the follicles, which are the roots, had not become absolutely lifeless.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is vastly different from other similar preparations. We believe that it will do more than any other human agency toward restoring hair growth and hair health. It is not greasy and will not gum the the scalp or hair or cause permanent stain. It is as pleasant to use as pure cold water.

Our faith in Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is so strong that we ask you to try it on our positive guarantee that your money will be cheerfully refunded without question or quibble if it does not do as we claim. Certainly we can offer no stronger argument. It comes in two sizes, prices 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain it only at our store,—The Rexall Store. G. W. Geddes. 1t

COMPLETE SPECIFICATIONS OF NEW COURT HOUSE

It has been suggested by a taxpayer of the county that we secure the plans and specifications for the proposed court house as submitted to the county council by Mahurin & Mahurin, the architects, who have figured on the building, and we herewith give the specifications verbatim. These specifications should be carefully read and digested by every voter and taxpayer of the county, and then if the people are ready for such a building the county council may feel at liberty to go ahead with the improvement, if the people are not satisfied with a building so elaborate, they ought to have a voice in the matter.

It should also be taken into consideration that when the building is paid for the expense of maintaining it is also another feature. Will it cost more to maintain a court house of the type here given than a less costly building. These propositions, together with the wealth of the county, should be given careful consideration. The specifications are as follows:

DIMENSIONS OF BUILDING

The plans and design selected by the board of county commissioners of DeKalb county for the new court house building cover an area of a little more than 16,000 square feet and will consist of a sub-basement, with a 3-foot elevation above the ground, a basement story and first and second floors.

The height of the building from the ground to the top of cornice is 49 feet, and from grade to top of pediment, 66 feet.

The shape of the building is a parallelogram, with a frontage of 136 feet on the west and east, and a depth of 116 feet on the north and south.

The extreme dimensions, figuring in the entrance projections and pediments, are 144 feet on the north and south, and 130 feet on the west and east.

SUB-BASEMENT

The sub-basement, which is entirely below the ground, excepting a small portion above the ground for windows for light and ventilation, will be used exclusively for the heating, plumbing and ventilation pipes and elevator machinery. The sub-basement is covered entirely with a cement floor, and properly drained.

BASEMENT STORY

The basement story has an elevation above the grade of three feet, and is reached by five steps at each entrance. The height of the story is 14 feet.

There will be a principal entrance on each of the four sides, that on the west, north and east being directly in the center of these floors. The entrance on the south will be to the west of the center, to accommodate the large assembly hall. There will be a vestibule with outside and inside doors in connection with each entrance.

There will be a thoroughfare from the west to the east and from the north to the center of the building. These thoroughfares or corridors are large and spacious, and will have a marble tile floor with marble wainscoting.

Directly in connection with the west entrance there will be two six feet wide marble stairs, leading from the basement to the first floor. The principal stairs, which will be constructed entirely of steel and marble will be located in connection with the east entrance, extending from the basement to the second floor. Provision will be made for an electric passenger elevator in connection with the east entrance and stairs. The elevator, 5x6 feet in size, will extend from the basement to the second floor, with the operating machinery located in the sub-basement.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE

The county sheriff's office will be located in the northwest corner of the basement story, and will consist of an outer lobby 24x14 feet, a business office 25x18 feet, and a private office 12x18 feet. In connection with the business office is a room 14 feet square containing a 4x5 foot private elevator, that runs from the basement floor to the court room floor, and a 3 foot wide private stairs which also connects with the county clerk's office above and to the court room floor. There will be a steel detention cell in connection with this room for the safe custody of prisoners, during any time when they should be absent from the court room and in the direct custody of the sheriff.

SURVEYOR'S OFFICE

The county surveyor's office occupies a space between the sheriff's office and the north entrance to the building. The surveyor's office consists of two rooms, a business office with a 12x14 foot lobby and a working space of 20x14 feet, with a counter between the two, and a private work room 20x13 feet, with drawing tables and files. The two offices for the county surveyor have north light which is the most desirable for this class of work.

WOMEN'S REST ROOM

The women's rest room is located in the northeast corner of the building, and is provided with two entrances, one opening off the north vestibule and a private entrance directly in the northeast corner. The women's rest room consists of three rooms, a public comfort and waiting room 44x20 feet, a mother's retiring room 12x10 feet, and a toilet room 41x12 feet. The toilet room provides for seven water closets and four lavatories. The women's rest room will be comfortably furnished with rugs, rocking chairs, lounges and tables, and will be made as inviting and comfortable as possible. The mother's retiring room will be a room for mothers with small children.

MEN'S TOILET ROOM

The men's toilet room occupies a space between the east vestibule and the women's toilet room, and is a room in size 16x26 feet, and will be provided with suitable sanitary plumbing.

COUNTY ASSESSOR'S OFFICE

The county assessor's office is located in the southwest corner of the building in a room 19x26 feet. This room is immediately in connection with the auditor's office above by a private stairway.

STALE RECORD ROOM

Immediately adjoining and to the north of the county assessor's office is a stale record room 16x25 feet, in which all the old or obsolete records can be indexed and filed.

CUSTODIAN'S ROOM

Between the stale record room and the west entrance will be the custodian's room 16x25 feet, for general supplies.

ASSEMBLY HALL

The assembly hall occupies three-fourths of the south portion of the building, in size 46x76 feet. The assembly hall will have entrances from the center thoroughfare and from the west corridor, also an outside exit to the south. The floor in the assembly hall will have an incline of about 3 feet toward the stage. The stage, which is large and commodious, occupies the east end of the hall, and is provided with a storage closet and an anteroom in connection with the east vestibule. The assembly hall will accommodate about 600 seatings, and will be used for farmers' institute meetings, county conventions and general public gatherings.

ROTUNDA

The center rotunda is 33x35 feet, with a 10 foot wide corridor on the north and east. The rotunda, besides serving as a public thoroughfare, will be furnished with settees or public comfort.

MASTER CLOCK

In connection with the west entrance will be a closet located under the stairs on the north side of the thoroughfare in which will be located the master clock. The master clock is designed to be a large pretentious clock, standing about 6 feet in height, and will control all the clocks in the various offices and in the exterior pediments. The master clock will be operated by electricity and will be entirely visible to all passing through the building. In the center of each pediment on the four sides of the building will be a 6 foot in diameter clock dial, so arranged to be illuminated at night time.

FIRST OR OFFICE FLOOR

The first or office floor, being located immediately above the basement, with a height to ceiling of 14 feet, will be for the accommodation of the various county offices. This floor forms the base of a large center rotunda, surmounted with a glass dome or skylight. This rotunda will be about 35 feet in diameter, but will be in an octagonal form, with a height from this floor to the apex of the dome of 40 feet, and will be embellished with eight large scagoli or in an imitation foreign marble, pilasters, supporting the heavy plaster cornice and the art glass dome. A large octagonal well hole, surrounded with a marble balustrade, will be in the center of this floor, opening into the basement below, which will afford light to the center of the basement from the glass dome and roof above.

Opening off of this large center rotunda will be the various county offices, and will be distributed as follows:

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS

The county commissioners office or court will be located directly in the center of the west room of the building, and will be a large spacious room 26x37, feet divided about the center with a metal and bronze balustrade. The outer portion will be for the accommodation of the public and will be furnished with settees. Inside the balustrade ample space will be allowed for attorneys and those who have business before the county commissioners, with a table for the accommodation of the county council when in session. The commissioners platform and desk will be located at the west end with sufficient space for the three county commissioners and county attorney. In connection with the county commissioners room and adjoining the county auditor's business office, will be a room 14x14 feet, for the commissioners and auditor's private office and when in executive session.

AUDITOR'S OFFICE

The county auditor's office will be located in the southwest corner of the building, and will be, as well as all of the other officers, divided into three sections, a business office, which is provided with a counter and public lobby, divided with a semi glass partition from the working department. The auditor's public lobby is 11x22 feet, the business office 18x32 feet, the work room 18x32 feet, and directly off of the working department will be the auditor's record or filing room, in size 39x22 feet. The auditor's filing room immediately adjoins the treasurer's filing room, which is 39x15 feet. The auditor and treasurer's record and filing room is practically one room, dividing the separate records with an iron grille and gate, as the records of these two offices are used together. In connection with the auditor's work room is a private stairs, reaching the county assessor's office and stale record room below.

TREASURER'S OFFICE

In the southeast corner of this floor will be located the county treasurer's office, providing a large lobby and counter with a numerous number of wickets for the accommodation of the taxpayers. In connection with this office will be the treasurer's filing room, previously referred to in connection with the auditor's filing or record room. The treasurer's office in size is 37x42 feet, with public lobby 20x23 feet, forming a part of the above, provided with 50 feet of counter space and six wickets for the accommodation of taxpayers. In connection with the treasurer's counter will be a cashier's private cage and a fireproof vault.

CLERK'S OFFICE

The county clerk's office will be located in the northwest corner of the building, and will consist of a public lobby 11x23 feet, a business office 18x33 feet, and a working room 18x33 feet. The lobby is separated from the business office with a counter, and the business office from the work room with a semi-glass partition. Directly in connection with the business office and work room will be the clerk's filing room, in size 38x23 feet, and from the clerk's filing room will be a book lift to the court room above and directly in connection with the clerk of the court's desk. In connection with the clerk's business office will be the private stairway and elevator from the sheriff's office below to the court room floor above.

RECORDER'S OFFICE

In the northeast corner of the building will be the county recorder's office. This office is arranged similar to the others, with a business office 20x28 feet, from which is taken off the public lobby 11x22 feet, a work room 17x28 feet, and filing room 38x27 feet.

TOILET ROOMS

On either side of the principal stairs which occupies the center of the east front, will be a men's and women's toilet room. These toilet rooms are provided with outside windows, a thorough system of ventilation and sanitary plumbing.

STAIRS

The principal stairs occupies the center of the east front and is a continuation of the stairs from the basement floor below. These stairs are 7 feet in width on the two outside runs, with a center run of 10 feet wide, and will be constructed entirely of steel and marble. A large landing 9 feet wide by 28 feet long occupies the height above this floor, with large east windows lighting the stairs and the center corridors.

CORRIDORS

The corridors on this floor are 9 feet wide on the north and south sides of the rotunda columns, leading to the auditor's and clerk's offices The corridor between the stairs and the rotunda columns will be 12 feet wide.

ELEVATOR

The elevator on this floor occupies a space at one side directly in connection with the the east stairs.

SECOND OR COURT ROOM FLOOR

The second or court room floor has in the center a continuation of the octagonal rotunda, extending up from the floor below, and has a 9 foot wide corridor on the north and south sides, with a 14 foot corridor on the west and a 12 foot wide corridor on the east in connection with the east stairs.

Points Regarding The Census

The census begins April 15 and must be completed in thirty days.

The enumerators will wear a badge inscribed "United States Census, 1910."

The law requires every adult person to furnish the prescribed information, but also provides that it shall be treated confidentially, so that no injury can come to any person from answering the questions.

The Census Bureau, prior to April 15, will distribute to every farm owner and tenant in this state a blank or schedule containing the census questions relative to farm operations and equipment This should be filled up, if possible not later than the morning of April 15, but if anyone has been unable to fill it up by that time, he should do it as soon afterwards as he can.

People who do not speak English or who do not understand the schedule completely should get help from others, if possible, in filling it up.

The President has issued a proclamation, calling on all citizens to cooperate with the Census and assuring them that it has nothing to do with taxation army or jury service, compulsory school attendance, regulation of immigration, or enforcement of any law, and that no one can be injured by answering the inquiries.

It is of the utmost importance that the farm census of this state be complete and correct.

Therefore every farm owner and tenant should promptly, fully, and accurately fill up the "Advance Farm Schedule" and carefully preserve it for the enumerator when he calls.

Itch Relieved at Once

That terrible itch disappears with the FIRST DROPS of a simple compound of oil of wintergreen, thymol and glycerine mixed in D. D. D. Prescription. This soothing, healing lotion, used externally kills the eczema germ instantly.

Heretofore the D. D. D. remedy has been sold only in $1.00 bottles; but as a special offer, any sufferer in this town who has never tried D. D. D. can now try this remedy in a special bottle at 25c. It cures the itch instantly. We KNOW this. Stone's Drug Store, Butler, Ind.

Ordinance No. 69

An ordinance requiring the muzzling of dogs when running at large or out from under control of its master, and providing a penalty for the same.

SECTION ONE. Be it ordained by the common council of the city of Butler, Indiana, that it shall be unlawful for the owner, master or person who harbors a dog, male or female, to allow the same to run at large in the city of Butler without being muzzled, unless such dog shall be accompanied by its owner or master, and such muzzle shall not be deemed sufficient unless it be of such form and strength and so attached and fastened as will effectually prevent such animal from biting, and any animal of the dog kind which may be found running at large within said city without being so muzzled, is hereby declared to be a nuisance.

SECTION TWO. Any person violating the provision of Section One of this Act shall upon conviction be fined in any sum not less than one dollar nor more than ten dollars.

SECTION THREE. Be it further ordained by the common council that it shall be the duty of the marshal of said city of Butler when he finds any such dog running at large without being muzzled, to at once ascertain who the owner of such dog is or where the same is harbored and to file charges against such owner, master or person so harboring said dog for violation of this Ordinance and if such owner, master or person harboring such dog cannot be found, it shall be said marshal's duty to confine such dog in the city lockup for a period of twenty-four hours and if at the end of such time, said dog is not claimed, he shall cause said dog to be killed and the carcas disposed of.

SECTION FOUR. This Ordinance shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage and due publication for two successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the city of Butler, Indiana

A. S KESTER,
President of Council.

Attest:

L. C. BUEHRER, Clerk.

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing ordinance was duly passed by the common council of the city of Butler at a regular meeting held on the 4th day of April, 1910, and was by me duly presented to the mayor of said city on the 10th day of April, 1910.

L. C. BUEHRER.

This Ordinance was approved by me on this the 4th day of April, 1910.

W. J. MONDHANK,
14-2 Mayor of City of Butler, Ind.

OVERTAXED

Hundreds of Butler Readers in Butler Know What It Means

The kidneys are overtaxed;
Have too much to do.
They tell about it in many aches and pains—
Backache, sideache, headache.
Early symptoms of kidney ills.
Urinary troubles, diabetes, Bright's disease follow.

The statement below shows you a certain cure.

Mrs. J. H. Baker, 218 W. Ninth St., Auburn, Ind., says: "I had occasion to use Doan's Kidney Pills a few months ago. At that time I was suffering from backache and pains in my kidneys and I was so lame that I could hardly get up after I had been sitting for any length of time. There was also a distressing annoyance from the kidney secretions I finally procured Doan's Kidney Pills and after I had finished the contents of two boxes, I was free from pain. I recommend Doan's Kidney Pills as a reliable kidney remedy."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. 14-2

Earl Preston Surprised

Mrs Preston gave a successful surprise on her husband last Monday evening, it being his (blank) birthday. We guess from what the boys say he was "up in the air" when he went home from his store and entering the house in the dark felt a strong arm thrust around him. He was on the point of breaking and running when the lights were turned on revealing a number of his friends who had entered the house and were "laying" for him.

The evening was very pleasantly spent in games, smoking and having a good time, such as is usually had at a stag party. Mrs. Preston served a fine two course luncheon, consisting of potato salad, sandwiches, coffee, olives, ice cream and cakes.

Mr. Preston received from his friends a self filling fountain pen. Mrs. Preston gave him a K. of P. lodge pin.

The out of town guests were Misses Sue Preston and Vera Preston, of LaGrange.

Dr. Felix Adler states that Americans are maniacs for work. It isn't so much wealth they desire as work, he thinks. Possibly this accounts for the existence of the Sons of Rest Society. It is the natural reaction.

If the mean man's championship is still open to challenge, the Brooklyn dairyman who was convicted the other day of selling adulterated milk to an orphan asylum certainly has claims upon the title that are worth considering.

An observant Frenchman who has been visiting in New York makes the just comment that Americans do not know how to economize in little things. "Saving five dollars may appeal to them, but saving five cents—no! We believe in France that saving five cents makes it possible for us to save five dollars; and this has made France a rich country."

A suggestion for household economy was given in a scientific lecture recently, when a professor of physics said that the ordinary stove used in most kitchens wastes in a day enough heat to keep food hot for a month. Anything that will cool the kitchen in summer or warm it in winter, whether or not it cooks the meals, will be welcomed by the cooks themselves.

"Spare, woodman, spare the beechen tree!" wrote Thomas Campbell a century ago. The appeal was heeded, and the great beech which stood near Ardwall House, Kirkcudbright, Scotland, was not cut down. Now, however, it has blown down, and another of the famous trees which have inspired poetry, or been glorified by tradition, is gone. The elm which suggested to George P. Morris his poem of similar sentiment was probably cut down years ago.

Helen continues to retain its popularity as a name for girls. Not long ago it was voted the favorite name by the students of a men's college and it has been discovered, as the result of a canvass of the names of the students in Smith College, that more than a hundred of the total of 1,600 bear that name. Mary, with less than ninety, comes next. Margaret, Ruth, Florence and Elizabeth follow in the same order. The good old-fashioned womanly names have fortunately displaced the fancy names of a generation or so ago.

Per million of population, the number of felonious homicides in 1909 was as follows: In Canada, 3; Germany, 5; England, 11; France, 13; Belgium, the most criminal country in Europe, 15; in the United States, 129. Owing to lax enforcement of law, and the mistaken policy of giving the criminal too many chances for escaping the penalty of his crime, only one out of seventy-four murderers in the United States is convicted. Political and personal influence and the maudlin sentiment that regards crime as disease and a murderer as a sick man to be cured, instead of a dangerous beast to be exterminated, permit the average mankiller in America to escape with seven years in prison. Crime is crime. The murderer is a murderer. The sooner American prisons cease to be pleasant sanitariums for mental abnormals and become institutions for punishment of criminals by hard work and rigid discipline the better for our national reputation.

It is easy to draw a historical contrast between the past and present position of women in the body politic and society. Our sisters who are dissatisfied with their lot may find some comfort in comparing their own status with that of their grandmothers, great-grandmothers and remoter ancestors. The comfort will lie not in rejoicing over the limitations of the women of the past generations, but in the evidence afforded of the great progress made by the sex. But there is a closer and contemporary companion picture which conveys the same lesson. A Tokio newspaper has recently questioned the Japanese commercial commissioners on their return from a tour of investigation in the United States as to what displeased them most among the conditions they encountered on their trip. Among the answers were the following: "Extreme respect paid to women." "Presumptuous attitude of women over men and the mingling of boys among girls in schools." "Too much respect for women." "Unreasonable egotism on the part of women." "Too much pride on the part of women." "To salute any kind of woman." "Unnatural gestures and phraseology of women in talking." These replies were given by some of the most enlightened and progressive men of Japan. Japan has made great progress along many lines, but the notion of the inferiority of women still persists. Her chief duty among them is obedience—obedience to her father before marriage, to her husband after marriage, and to her son if she is a widow. She must bow low before her masculine masters. She cannot walk beside her husband on terms of equality, but must follow humbly in the rear. She must carry his packages and perform all the little services which American gallantry prescribes as the part of the male. It is true that these customs, which from our standpoint would be called loutish, never prevailed in American or European society; nevertheless, the notion of the duty of obedience of women in essentials was almost as strong among our ancestors of even 200 years ago. In our modern social life the conditions are practically reversed. It is the man who must be obedient; and it may come to be the same in politics if the present trend continues.

MONKEY CAPTURES BURGLAR.

Pelts Him with Crockery and Grapples with Him and Causes Arrest.

After a lengthy sojourn in Madagascar, M. Louis Charmot returned to Paris recently and took up his residence at 43 Rue de Sevigne, the Paris edition of the New York Herald says. He had brought with him, in addition to a number of curios and tapestries, a large monkey named Ernest, which he kept as a pet in his apartment.

While M. Charmot was absent yesterday afternoon a burglar entered the apartment by means of a skeleton key. He was busy making a parcel of a number of objects of value, when the monkey Ernest, who had been hiding in a corner of the dining room, suddenly began to pelt him with a perfect hail of plates, cups, saucers, ash trays, an inkstand and other portable objects at hand.

The burglar first hesitated, and then made a dash at Ernest with a heavy cane. The monkey wisely beat a retreat and climbed on to the top of the buffet. The intruder got a chair to reach the monkey and was about to strike when the monkey jumped at him and, amid a terrible noise of breaking plates and overturned furniture, monkey and man fell together to the floor.

The noise immediately attracted the neighbors and the burglar was quickly overpowered. He turned out to be an erstwhile convict named Georges Redel. Thanks to the monkey the burglar was caught, but the material damage done in the apartment is almost as great as if the burglar had quietly carried the goods away.

WIPED OUT BY SMALLPOX.

Only One Survivor in a Russian Village of 1,100 Inhabitants.

Details of the wiping out of an entire Russian village by smallpox have just reached St. Petersburg, says a New York Press correspondent. The village is named Volskaya, and is situated in the island of Sachalin.

Until a few weeks ago its population was 1,100. Sanitation, as in most Russian villages, was conspicuously absent, and when the disease first appeared a few months ago no one was troubled about it. Smallpox in Russia is frequently called the "holy sickness," and no attempt was made at vaccination.

Sick and healthy children were habitually bathed together, that being believed an efficacious treatment, and after the local priest died the bodies remained unburied. Thus the epidemic raged unchecked and entire families, from grandfather to grandchild, were stricken.

Finally a sanitary commission was sent from the mainland, but could accomplish nothing. It has been decided to burn to the ground this "village of death," as it is popularly called. Of the 1,100 inhabitants only one remains, a man of 72, named Vassilieff. The disease spared him, but he has become a maniac.

A Financial Joke.

"I want to go home quick, my wife has presented me with a fine boy," said a waiter in the Cafe Martin last Saturday to the head waiter.

"Sure thing! Beat it, quick! My, but you're lucky," replied the head waiter. It is the rule at the Cafe Martin that when a son is born in the family of any employe $100 is given to the father and $50 for a girl.

With his face wreathed in smiles, the waiter returned to the restaurant the afternoon carrying a big baby

In the restaurant were John B. Martin and his brother, Louis, Mark A. Mayer and Julian Kauffman. These four retired to the private office of the cafe, with the waiter and the baby, and set about celebrating. Wine was opened and glasses filled. Then while Louis Martin held the baby his brother John rose, and lifting the glass spoke solemn truths on the honor and responsibility of being the father of such a magnificent boy and gave the waiter a $100 bill. Mayer added a $100 bill.

The toast was drunk. The waiter and the baby departed. They had been gone only a few minutes when a little Frenchwoman excitedly entered.

"Where is that waiter?" she demanded.

"He has gone," was the reply.

"He said he only wanted to borrow my 4-months-old baby for a few minutes, and he has been gone an hour and a half. Oh, where is my baby?"

She said the waiter had boarded with her a week and had borrowed the baby to show a friend.—New York World.

TRUE WORTH.

True worth is in being, not seeming—
In doing each day that goes by
Some little good—not in the dreaming
Of great things to do by and by.
For whatever men say in blindness,
And spite of the fancies of youth,
There's nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

We get back our mete as we measure—
We can not do wrong and feel right,
Nor can we give pain and gain pleasure—
For justice avenges each slight.
The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren,
But always the path that is narrow
And straight for the children of men.
—Alice Cary.

The Home-Coming

There had been a thunderstorm, but the lowering black clouds had rumbled suddenly off, and now, out to the west, the sun was setting amid a riotous wealth of crimson and gold.

From the cottage chimneys the thin blue smoke wavered up in misty spirals. The rain had filled the air with a sense of freshness, and the uneven roadway was speckled with puddles which reflected the clear blue of the sky. Talking and laughing, the villagers were lounging about with the easy aimlessness begot of the knowledge that the day's work was over and done with.

Down the straggling village street came a young girl dressed in thin, shoddy clothes. As she threaded her way down the soddened road her bearing was by turns shrinking and bold. It was as if she had made up her mind to some resolve, and intended to carry it out however much her soul might innately rebel at the idea.

As she passed down the street the villagers turned to look after her. Outside the inn, a group of men laughed noisily as she passed, and only laughed the louder at the look of defiant scorn she cast at them.

Two slatternly women, conversing familiarly with each other across the width of the road, stopped their talk abruptly to stare at her as she nervously stepped past them.

"Old Bennett's gal, ain't she?" asked one.

"That's 'er—the 'ussy! was the answer. "Come 'om agen, I s'pose."

"Run away, didn't she? Went to London, or something?"

"That's it. Went play-actin'—so she wrote to 'er father. Fine play-actin',

"YOU'RE NO DAUGHTER OF MINE."

I'll be bound;" she laughed sneeringly, significantly.

"What did old Bennett say to that, eh?"

"Said she was no more 'is daughter. No more she 'ad call to be, after runnin' away, and disgracin' the family like that."

They gazed speculatively after the thin figure in the shabby frock. Then their eyes met and they nodded knowingly at each other.

"Quite the lady!" laughed one shrilly.

Meanwhile, with the women's words ringing in her ears, the girl kept dejectedly on her way. At the gate of a cottage garden she saw one of her father's old cronies—one who had often danced her on his knee in the years that were past.

"Good evening, Mr. Abram," she ventured timidly.

He stared at the sound of her voice, muttered something into his beard and turned to enter his house.

Slowly the girl's eyes filled. Two great tears trembled on the lashes of her blue eyes, overbalanced, and rolled dolorously down her pale cheeks. She took three or four hurried steps, then a few in which hesitation was apparent. Finally, she stood still and glanced back uncertainly. Then a look of determination again came into her face, and she continued on her road.

Old Bennett lived on the Common, and a turn in the road brought the cottage into her view. She drew in her breath in a sharp, hissing sob at sight of it, and her pace grew quicker.

A little knot of people she had once known as friends stood gossiping at the corner of the Common. She walked past them with eyes averted, and no one spoke a word of greeting.

Again the girl wavered. Then through her tears she saw the cottage, and hurried on.

She stepped softly, thief-like, through the gate, and passed along the path, her heart beating wildly.

Footsteps rang out over the stone floor within and a boy opened the door. He stood amazed to see the girl and eyed her affrightedly. Beyond, through the half-open door of an inner room, her eager, straining eyes caught a glimpse of an old man starting up from his chair in vague alarm.

The boy turned without a word and went to the old man.

"'Tis Bess," he told him simply.

"Bess!" she heard the old man cry joyously, and something clattered to the floor, as if it had been dropped.

Then—"Bess, ye say?" in a harsher tone.

He came slowly to the door.

"So, 'tis you?" he said. "You want to come back to us, eh?"

She nodded her head humbly.

"And do you think we'll b

he went on sternly. "You ran away from your home, remember. We wasn't unkind to you, was we?"

She shook her head, and looked up at him, her lips trembling piteously.

"There was nothin' in reason that you wanted that you didn't have. And yet you ran away. You forgot love, Bess; you forgot duty; you forgot them that never forgot you—you forgot everything. You're no daughter of mine!"

"Father!" he cried in supplication.

"Aye, and now you've 'ad your fling, Bess, you wants to come back. And how do I know that we can take you back? There's bad in ye, gal. You ran away, never carin' whether your mother's heart was broke or not. You crept away in the dark like a thief. You went away on the stage, as you calls it. I know what London is; it's a cruel place, lass, a terr'ble cruel place." He passed his hand wearily across his forehead. "Oh, why did ye do it, Bess?" he asked, his voice breaking helplessly.

He stood looking sadly at her. Then a gleam of hope shot across his face. With sudden force he seized her by the wrist and swung her toward the setting sun.

The lingering rays lighted up the wan cheeks and tear-dimmed eyes of the girl. With fierce, questioning look, the father stood gazing at his daughter.

She met his stare unflinchingly; blue eyes looked into gray without a tremor. His grasp on his wrist was hurting her, but still she looked straight into his eyes.

The seconds seemed drawn into minutes, but still the gray eyes searched the blue, as if they would draw every secret from them.

The old man's expression began to relax. By degrees content crept into the gray eyes. A great spring of yearning love was surging in his heart.

"Father!" she whispered.

He drew in his breath with a hiss at the word. His hand fell from her wrist and hung indeterminate at his side.

"Father!" she whispered again.

Of a sudden his shoulders squared and he flung wide the door.

"Come in!" he cried, a new note in his voice. He thrust out his hands to her. "Come in * * * my daughter!"—O. Morton Howard in Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW FUELS IN USE.

Our Increasing Employment of Gases and Oils Under Boilers.

During the first half of the last century it was solid fuel only that was employed for the generation of heat and power, but the last half of the century has seen the advent of liquid and gaseous fuels, which under certain conditions proved themselves of the greatest value, the Scientific American says. And certain processes are now largely dependent upon their use, this being due to the ease of application which has meant economy in labor and greatest facility for converting the heat into work. As an example of the ease of application making a fuel of poor calorific value more effective in use than coal of high quality, one may instance such manufactures as those of glass, where in the heating by solid fuel the necessary temperature had to be imparted to the mass of raw material through the walls of a thick fire clay retort, the difficulty of application here being dependent upon the fact that the crucible had to be heated to a very high temperature to get the necessary fusing point of the glass mixture, and that maintaining this for a considerable period meant a big expenditure in fuel and great wear and tear to the furnace and containing vessel.

It was clear that if the fuel could be gasified and the clean flame made to play directly on to the surface of the mixture to be fused, instead of having to impart the heat through the walls of the containing vessel, an enormous economy would be obtained, and this is now done by the utilization of producer gas and regeneration in the continuous tank process. In the same way liquid fuel, as soon as methods could be found for its proper combustion, presented such wonderful economies and advantages for marine work that, in spite of its being dearer than coal, it at once found a place in both the navy and merchant marine. The possibility of being able to store it below the level of the boiler in the ballast tanks instead of having, as in coal bunkers, to have the storage above that level, at once gave in[illegible] space in the important part [illegible] vessel, and, what was of much greater importance in the service, the being able to carry a larger supply of latent energy in the same space as the coal occupied increased the radius of action of the vessel.

DECEMBER AND MAY.

Mating of the Old and the Young Is Now Becoming the Fashion.

What does it matter how old a man is or what the age of a woman is if they wish to marry? What have years to do with love and that felicity that comes from the tying of the nuptial knot? Dr. Johnson's wife was more than twenty years his senior, and Shakespeare's spouse was old enough to be his mother. They were happy, and why should not those who follow their example in these days also find connubial joys?

It is getting to be the fashion nowadays, this mating of December and May, the New York Telegraph says. Recently a wealthy woman of Hartford made plans f rohraodni taoin ford made plans for marrying a schoolboy at New Haven. She was about 70 and he about 20, and her children and grandchildren, when they learned about it, went to the courts and said she was crazy. But the judges knew otherwise, and set her free and let her continue mistress of her own fortune.

Then there was the lady of a noted American family who lived in her mansion on the Hudson. For 68 years she had lived alone, and then she married her hostler, aged 24. What of that? Shall a woman who has lived nearly threescore years and ten and still is an old maid continue so until her death?

Mme. Francoise Mantaiselo, 57 years old, and Arthur Springer, 23 years old, have taken out a license to marry in this city. Speaking for the lady and himself, Master Springer made this statement: "It is no one's business except ours if we marry." The boy is right; he can marry his step-grandmother if he wishes, and not even the law can say him nay.

Bogus Fur in England.

The London Chamber of Commerce, through its fur and skin trade section, has issued a warning to furriers, drapers and others throughout the United Kingdom in regard to common "misdescriptions" of furs. Daily Consular and Trade Reports says.

The following is a list of the most common misdescriptions included in the list:

"Real Russian sable" — American sable.
"Sable"—fitch, dyed.
"Bear"—goat, dyed.
"Fox"—hare, dyed.
"Lamb or broadtail"—kids.
"Mink, sable or skunk" — marmot, dyed.
"Sable"—mink, dyed.
"Mink or sable"—musquash, dyed.
"Seal, electric seal, Red river seal and Hudson seal"—musquash, pulled and dyed, or nutria, pulled and dyed, or rabbit, sheared and dyed.
"Beaver and otter"—nutria, pulled, natural.
"Beaver" — opossum, sheared and dyed.
"Seal"—otter, pulled and dyed.
"Sable or French sable" — rabbit, dyed.
"Ermine"—rabbit, white.
"Chinchilla"—rabbit, white, dyed.
"Skunk"—wallaby, dyed.
"Fox"—white hare.

In addition, white hairs are inserted in foxes and sables to make "silver foxes."

European Universities.

At least two of the provincial universities of France rank with the first ten universities of Germany, and the one great Catholic university of Belgium, that of Louvain, is of about the same rank. The Italian University of Turin stands above Freiburg in numbers.

RUSSIAN SPIES IN NEW YORK.

If a Russian Jew dwelling in a tenement house in New York spends his evenings in a public library reading the history of his fatherland or poring over books on democracy or socialism, the secret police of the Czar of Russia will know about it sooner or later. The name, age, sex, address and occupation of the library reader will, in the course of routine business, be inscribed on the official records at St. Petersburg, together with a description of the listed person's physical appearance.

This curious fact is merely one indication of the thoroughness of the Russian government's spy system in New York, a system which Vladimir Bourtseff, the scholar and historian of the Russian revolutionary movement, has come to the United States to expose.

According to Bourtseff and the leaders of the movement with whom he is working, New York harbors many secret agents of the home government, whose business it is to keep the police informed of the revolutionary activities in America, and especially to cable information whenever a revolutionist leaves New York for a visit to St. Petersburg. His departure is known in St. Petersburg before his ship is half way across the Atlantic, and if he ventures to cross the Russian border some pretext is found for arresting him. It is optional with each spy what ostensible occupation he shall have. He may push a peddler"s cart, or keep a shop, or print books, or have a job in some city department. Anything will do so long as his neighbors do not suspect him and admit him to membership in one or more of the many little organizations of the revolutionists.

Although he has worked against the Russian government all his life, Bourtseff, the greatest of spy hunters, has belonged to no organization since 1870, when the Narodnaya Vola, of which he had been the founder, disbanded. Since then he has worked as a "free lance" revolutionist, writing many books and papers, allying himself first with one group and then another to accomplish a certain object, and always trusted and admired by the workers from whose societies he has held himself aloof. He is recognized as the scholar and the historian of the movement.

One of the chief activities of the revolutionists is smuggling their literature into Russia. Much of it is taken across the border by men who live near the line, on the Austrian side, and whose business takes them back and forth frequently. They will conceal a consignment of pamphlets in their carts, under a load of merchandise. Then at a convenient and safe place the books will be unloaded and buried in the ground, to await the arrival of the man charged with the responsibility of distributing them.—Montreal Herald and Star.

Twelve Months of Taft.

The latest attack on President Taft comes from the World's Work magazine, edited by Walter H. Page, former member of Roosevelt's country life commission.
